DISEASED LUNGS.

CASE of Mrs. E. WALTERS, of HULL.

This patient, residing at 65, Kent-street, Holderness-road, Hull, first wrote me, with statement of her case, on the 5th of last June.

"For twelve months (she says) I have been attended at different times, by three doctors. All tell me my lungs are diseased, and they can do nothing for me—but I have read your book, and find there is hope for me."

Chest disease had been inherited from her mother's family. She had been delicate from the age of sixteen, at which time she caught a severe cold. When married (eighteen months before writing me), she went from Devonshire to live at Hull, soon after which a bad cough came on; then followed sleepless nights, increased expectoration, spasmodic breathing, severe pains on the left side, irregular action of the heart, occasional swelling of ankles and feet, loss of flesh, in the neck and chest especially. "The doctor says my right lung is worse than my left."

On July 22 she writes:—"The cough is much better; the swelling of the ankles has ceased."

September 2, she writes:—"My health altogether is very much better, your medicine has done me a deal of good."

This patient finally recovered. A letter will appear next week, together with the case of her husband, MR. G. WALTERS, who also recovered under my treatment.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

In this neighbourhood many homes are without fire or food, and mothers are weeping because their children are in sore want. With the help of kind friends he is striving to wipe away the maternal tear, and to satisfy the cravings of these human "robins," especially the children of the widows who have a hard struggle for life, with the breadwinner gone. He wants to give more dinners and more garments, but he must first get them.

Extract from one of the Cases who have received the Dinners.

Mr. J. W. is a steady and good mechanic. For three months he has been unable to get more than a few days' work. He has seven daughters. He had a neat little home, and well furnished; but he has been compelled to sell all his furniture, even the bedstead. They have two soap boxes to sit upon, and sleep on the floor. I took three tickets for dinners, and one for half-hundredweight of coals. The mother, who is near her confinement, with tears in her eyes, said to me, "I dare not let my children get up, for I have no breakfast to give them." The father went out early in the morning, returned at four in the afternoon, with neither fire nor food in the house, still the home and children were clean.

Will EVERY READER send a donation to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; or to the Superintendent, Mr. GEORGE FULLER, 1, Follett-street, Poplar? Articles of Food, Clothing, &c., Tracts, Hospital Letters, are also thankfully received by the Superintendent.

MR. GEORGE HOLLAND.

THE George-yard Mission, Whitechapel, better known as the "George-yard Ragged School," is a flourishing institution, having no less than forty different agencies in operation, with an annual attendance of about 374,000 souls. It had its origin (in the words of the late Lord Shaftesbury) in the palmy days of ragged schools—a time when the many great missionary enterprises which to-day figure prominently in the East of London were not even thought of. George Holland was deeply touched by the many scenes of juvenile depravity and suffering he saw around him. Moved by Divine love, he set out relying upon the mighty arm of Omnipotence, and the strength of that grace which the Unchangeable One has pledged Himself shall be sufficient. That promise has been abundantly verified in the varied and successful experience of this true-hearted servant of God.

To attain his purpose, the highways, courts, and alleys of Whitechapel were scoured, bringing together from time to time assemblies the most motley and grotesque of which it is possible to conceive. Row after row of partly-clad children were to be seen, scarcely one in five having the semblance of shoes or stockings. This "raw material" had a sort of magnetic influence upon George Holland. In order to mould and shape it for God, he made many and great personal sacrifices, counting all else but loss that he might rescue the bodies of these dear children from disease and the grave, and win their souls to the Saviour who came to seek and save all such.

This resolve George Holland has faithfully kept. The best of his days have been devoted to rescuing children from scenes most revolting and associations unquestionably dangerous. For thirty-two years he has patiently and perseveringly pushed forward in this Divine work. The fruits of those labours cannot be gauged in time; eternity alone will reveal them. Suffice it to say that thousands have been blessed, in body and soul. Mr. Holland is constantly receiving from remote parts of the earth encouraging letters from old scholars and former attendants at the services, whose connection with the Mission dates back close upon thirty years.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

This great undertaking, which God has been pleased to own and bless so largely, had its origin in "the day of small things," and dealt at first with little children only. There is no department of Christian usefulness more important, or one that calls for a larger exercise of faith. Having, however, gained hold of the young, it was his next duty to adopt means to reach the parents. Many of these were, and are, leading wretched and abandoned lives. They are the victims of drunkenness and sinful excess of every kind. To cope with these evils house-to-house visitation is carried on vigorously, and a weekly evangelistic service is conducted by Mr. Holland. This meeting is a most interesting one. It is composed chiefly of the poorest inhabitants of the back streets, with a few of the artisan class. The numbers that crowd into these meetings is the best proof of the high value set upon them. About six hundred attend every Lord's Day, and they form a most attentive and appreciative audience. The meeting-room is well lighted, bright, and cheerful; everything is done to make the people comfortable, so that a counter-attraction may be supplied to the glittering gin-palaces that surround their dingy and cheerless homes. The services have been wonderfully owned of God. The results, if told in detail, would make a volume of rare interest. Hundreds have been rescued from the deepest depths of sin and misery. In some cases whole families have been restored to the paths of righteousness and peace and comfort. From the lodging-houses by which the institution is surrounded many a wandering son or daughter has been rescued and restored to sorrowing parents. It was at one of these meetings that the subject of a little book, entitled "Lifted Up," was arrested from sin, and finally, by the grace of God, made the honoured instrument in the hands of the Lord of bringing hundreds to Christ in one of our Australian colonies.

Much difficulty is experienced in getting some of the inhabitants and lodging-house folks into a Gospel service; it is therefore necessary to take the Gospel to them. This is done by open-air meetings and lodging-house services. The audiences are composed of lounging men and squatting women smoking short pipes—scores of little children dodging between the speaker and his hearers. Open-air work in these back streets is no easy task, but much good has nevertheless resulted in the efforts put forth. In the earlier history of George-yard there were several houses of bad repute in one alley. The occupiers of these wretched places resisted the Gospel with a determination equalled only by that of the craftsmen of Ephesus, who saw that the Gospel spoiled them of their gains. On one occasion so mightily were they stirred up by the spirit of the evil one, that bricks, stones, cabbage stumps, and other missiles, were freely used, rendering it wise to make a speedy retreat to ensure safety to life and limb. As a proof, however, of the salutary effects of this work upon the neighbourhood, these houses have been closed for years. Public-houses have also disappeared; one having a notoriety that dates back to the days of highway-men has been taken, and a work of an interesting character is now going on beneath its roof.

In every department of work the dreadful effects of the drink can be traced. To combat this deadly foe, Gospel Temperance meetings are held, and are well attended. Without attempting to give details of results it may be said that wonderful reformations have been wrought through the agency of this branch of the work. The Band of Hope is also a power for good in the neighbourhood. It is greatly needed; for young children, scarcely in their teens, have been seen staggering through the streets.

Space would fail us to particularise all the agencies at work; we can only give the titles of them: There are week-night Bible-classes for young people and adults of both sexes. On Sunday there are classes for young men, elder girls, and young women; these are most important as all the members during the week are engaged in factories and workshops. The Friday evening Bible-class for men, conducted by Miss Brown, is a marvellous gathering; it numbers about 120 poor working men. There is a flourishing Sunday-school. There are prayer meetings, sewing-classes for boys, girls and women, industrial classes for lads, who are taught such useful industries as fretwork, model-making, mat-making, carpentering, engineering, &c. There are various other classes for girls and young women during the week. The attendance at these classes is so large that the workers are often quite at a loss to find room for the scholars. Among those who conduct them are a number of ladies from the West-end, to whose Christlike devotion and love for souls is to be attributed much of the wonderful success that has attended this department of work.

Among the other means in active operation are the infant nursery, a children's service, a recreation night, a working men's benefit club, a mutual free labour loan society, a mission to inebriate women, Christian women's Total Abstinence society, coffee and reading rooms, the Emily Loan Fund, &c. Besides these there is the care of the masses of poor people, which forms no small part of Mr. Holland's work. The temporal, as well as the spiritual difficulties of the poor are brought to him, and many are the knotty questions submitted for his judgment and decision.

Thus for thirty-two years has this work been steadily going on. Every undertaking marked out for success must have a soul or centre. George Holland has been the soul and centre of the George-yard Mission. Around him workers have rallied; feeble ones have felt encouraged; halting and hesitating ones have been induced to go forward. Nor has the influence of our good friend been confined to his own particular sphere of work. His large-hearted liberality and Christian love have been felt far to Eastward, and back again to the West, where the name of George Holland is as familiar in the upper circles as in the back slums of Whitechapel. The following letter from the late Lord Shaftesbury to a friend may seem to be excessive in its tribute of praise, but the late Earl was not in the habit of using words that went beyond what he strongly felt and believed:—

MY DEAR ——,—I have known George Holland and worked with him for twenty years, and have come to the conclusion that in all my experience I have found very few to come near him and none to surpass him. His zeal and sympathy are so strong that they cannot be wearied; he is at this moment as earnest and fresh as though he were at the beginning of his blessed career. Nothing of ill success casts him down; nothing of good success lifts him up. He is ever full of faith in sorrow and grateful humility in joy. His entire heart is toward suffering in body and sadness in soul. His peculiar love is toward little children like his Divine Master whom he obeys and follows with visible intensity of delight. Yet his has been a career in the midst of filth, cold and hunger, and nakedness, surrounded by the most degraded specimens of human existence. What would give most people a nausea seems to give him an appetite. It goes to one's heart to see his care, his gentle parental affection towards the hundreds of little things, who in all their misery smile when they see his face, and rejoice that there is one man at least who does not cast them off. I cannot express the deep admiration and friendship I have for that beloved man, or how much I thank God that I have had the benefit and blessing of his society.

SHAFTESBURY.

It will be easily understood that, during the many years George Holland has laboured in Whitechapel, it has been his painful lot to witness scenes of indescribable misery, want, and physical suffering. In time of trade depression or epidemic these have been largely augmented. Many times he has sighed unto the God of Heaven with five hundred poor children around him, who, but for the goodness of God in sending the necessary help just when most needed, might have sunk from sheer want. Scenes of this kind have often caused Mr. Holland and his workers no small anxiety. Prayer went up to God for years for help, and it pleased the Lord to move the heart of Louisa Lady Ashburton, who nobly came to the rescue of the dear children with weakly bodies and failing health. Through the munificence of her ladyship a beautiful cottage was built upon her estate at Croydon, where children are sent for a fortnight's change of air, scene, and food. Many precious little lives we believe have been and will be saved through this timely aid. Another cottage was added for the reception of weary men and women alternately. Many a father and worn-out mother have already been recruited, and have come back to their home to bless God for health restored, which enables them to continue the life struggle for themselves and for their children.

The good work did not end here. Lady Ashburton planted a third cottage, which is now in course of erection and which will receive mothers and their suckling babes. Further, an iron room has been erected, where evangelistic services are conducted for the people of the village and the friends staying at the cottages. Here there are a Sunday-school and Band of Hope, &c.; this work will doubtless enlarge as the Lord leads. The entire cost of this work at Croydon has been borne by Lady Ashburton.

All the wonderful progress made and results achieved, Mr. Holland desires to attribute to the blessing of God upon the efforts put forth in humble dependence upon Him, and for the help of those who are poor and needy. Such missions as that carried on in connection with George-yard are truly the most striking proofs of the power of vital Christianity.

MR. HOLLAND on STARVING LONDON.

AT Eccleston Hall, S.W., on Wednesday afternoon last week, Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND gave an intensely touching address on the distress in the East-end, and some of the methods adopted to relieve it. There was a good attendance, embracing, we presume, many of the dwellers in the wealthy South West. Among those present were H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck and her daughter, Earl and Countess of Rosslyn, Countess of Harrowby, Countess of Tankerville, Marquis of Ailsa, Lord Radstock, Canon Wilberforce, Rev. C. A. Fox, &c.

MR. HOLLAND said: Distress exists—widespread distress; not only in the eastern part, but all over the Metropolis, and, I suppose, all over the United Kingdom. In the East-end people go to bed supperless, tealess, dinnerless, and, I may say, in some cases, breakfastless. Poor children make their way to school without food, and sit there without food all day long unless some good Samaritan should provide them with it. A poor woman came to us last week begging us to take into our Infant Nursery a little babe she carried in her arms. It was very pale and feeble and we did not at all like its appearance. Our nurse asked the woman what she had been feeding it with. The poor creature broke into tears and said, "Well, I have been picking up the crusts that lie about in the streets. I wash away the mud and the soil from the bread and soak it in water; from the sops I feed my little child and myself." That will give you some idea of what many are passing through at the present time.

NO MONEY, NO BED.

On the second night of the recent very cold weather, in one of the enormous lodging-houses we have about a quarter of a mile from our mission, no less than sixty beds were empty. The poor men who would have occupied them if they could have paid the small sum required, were permitted to sit up in the kitchen till after eleven o'clock; then they were turned out to walk about the streets till next morning, when they were allowed to enter the kitchen again. These poor men, dock labourers, casual labourers, and such like, have told me that they often go without food for many hours. One thing always strikes me as very awful, when I look down the registrar's weekly list of deaths. Sometimes I find that the cause of death is not given. I think I can trace in many such cases that the real cause of death was want of food—starvation. Oh! it is a cruel thing—a very cruel thing, indeed—to see people, young people, especially, who have been for a long time without any food of a nourishing character; to see them gradually getting thinner and paler; to know that consumption or some other disease will soon have them in its grasp, and they will be cut off in very early life. I look at the mass of such young people who come around us in our mission at George-yard, and I think of how many of them will be called away at the age of 14 or 16. Large numbers of them never reach womanhood or manhood. It is a fearful waste of life. Is it not our first duty to see that the people are fed and clothed and housed, so that they may not perish in this way?

We have been privileged, in connection with our work, to send a large number of men and women to some convalescent homes in the country; we have sent 1200 down there. I have noticed that two-thirds of those we send are suffering really from want of proper, nourishing food. It is astonishing how they pick up after a little rest and careful treatment. There must be a very large number of those who are thus suffering for lack of proper food.

CAUSES OF THE DISTRESS.

Yes, the distress exists. Tradesmen will tell you they cannot meet their engagements, and they do not know what will be the result. Poor men and women go to their work, such as it is, badly and uncomfortably clad and shod, and not sure even of a continuance of the employment they have got. May I mention some of the reasons of this distress given by these people? Please bear with me; I am not giving you my own opinion, but their statements of belief. First of all they complain of foreign competition. They say that foreign goods are taking the place of English goods, and this takes the very bread out of their mouths. Articles are sent over to this country and unpacked; the covering is taken off, and an English covering put over the package. That covering is stamped, and the goods are shipped out of the country as English goods, though no man or woman in the country has had anything to do in the making of them.

Then, again, they say that there are many foreigners here who enter into competition with them. It is a fact that in the East-end of London there are thousands of foreigners, and they are taking the work out of the hands of our own people. I would recommend you all to read a leading article on this subject in The Daily Telegraph of Saturday, February 13, and another in the same journal of February 15, on "Socialism;" they seem to me to describe the real state of things. There is no doubt that a large portion of the trade in the East-end is getting entirely into the hands of foreigners. How do they live? I could take you into streets where they are overcrowded to a terrible extent. The master will take a house and live in it himself. He will have about him a large number of these foreigners, who work for him; there will be from five to eleven of them in one room! They work, and eat, and sleep there. And their food is not at all what our workmen will eat. Their wages, too, are very small; they will work almost for nothing, though they toil from morning till night, until they sometimes sink under it. So the trade is simply passing out of the hands of our English people into the hands of these foreigners. I mention these things because it appears to me they are not generally known. I was told yesterday at Beckenham, by a clergyman, of a stationer who, in complaining of the dulness of trade, says the English workmen do not pay the same attention to business that the foreigners do. English stationers are very slack, but the houses where German workmen are employed are so busy that they are actually refusing orders. Whether it be so or not I cannot tell, but these things are what one is compelled to listen to.

Then there are Socialist clubs. A foreigner told me the other day that there are at least a dozen of these in London. There are also strikes and immorality and the terrible drunkenness; all these are causes of the present distress. We must not overlook the fact that we have a very dangerous population in our back streets. You all know what took place lately in the West-end. There are houses in London, occupied by men who never think of working. Nobody can tell how they live, but they do live. Whenever there is any chance of a disturbance, every back street turns out its population. They cannot be depended on; they may be led anywhere and anyhow. Therefore you must expect trouble with them. They can, however, be reached with the Gospel. We go among them and seek to show them something better. We do what we can to win their hearts to Christ, and to lead them away from a life of idleness and sin.

GOOD SAMARITANS AT WORK.

I am to say something of the methods in operation for meeting the need in the East-end. To-day at our mission in George-yard I left 130 women at work in one room. They will be paid at 2d. an hour for their work. I will not say how we dispose of their work, but it is disposed of. If any friends engaged in mission work will call any Wednesday they will see the classes in operation, and I will tell them how we dispose of the work. Many of these women are in the greatest poverty. They are only too thankful to get a few hours' work; to sit in a warm room; to have kind ladies speak and read and pray with them, and to have the sympathy of those who love the Lord Jesus Christ. Nay, many of them could not go on, if they did not know that Jesus Christ is their Saviour and Friend, and that one day there will be an end to the terrible state of things from which they suffer. I am reminded of what happened one time when the late Lord Shaftesbury called upon us. He went into the sewing-class, and sat down by a poor woman and talked with her. She began to weep bitterly, and I remember hearing his Lordship say: "Well, my poor woman, it will soon be over; the Lord Himself will come, and He will set all matters right."

A word or two as to this matter of feeding. How important it is to have the children fed. I frequently go into our day-school and ask the children: "What have you had to eat this morning?" "Nothing." "What have you had, my little girl?" " other gave me a slice of bread; I did not have anything warm." So I go to one class after another, and find that there is no chance of anything like proper food for them if their fathers and mothers are out of work. There they would sit with empty stomachs all day long unless we supplied them with food. I cannot tell you how my heart bounded with joy when I found that we were able lately to feed 250 of them with good wholesome soup, and send them home comfortably well filled.

There is one class who need a great deal of care —our factory girls. Their earnings are very small and they cannot get sufficient food for themselves. Frequently they have come to our mission and simply swooned away from want of proper nourishing food. We do not seek so much to give them food as to sell to them at a very low rate. Sometimes of an evening we sell 150 basins of good soup at ½d. each, including a good slice of bread. We have known them keep their halfpenny in their pocket all day and go without anything to eat, that they might get our soup and bread in the evening. That will give you some notion of what these young people have to suffer. Think of a growing girl all day without food. Thousands of them are perishing from consumption—going into a decline and then to an early grave.

STARVING SAILORS.

I would like to mention some of the other efforts in the East-end. Miss Child, of The Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, who works among sailors, tells me that she is giving meals to poor sailors, and clothing, also, as far as her funds will allow. There is a great deal of distress among sailors. The other evening a man was at the Welcome Home, who had not had a bed to sleep in for nine nights. I can speak most highly of Miss Child's work, and commend it to every one here. Mr. Matthews, of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Shadwell, is giving free lodgings to 100 men per night; the most deserving cases are also fed. They do not give lodging to the same man two nights in succession, except in special cases.

There is another name I must mention—the name of one very much respected and beloved by everyone who knows anything of work in the East-end —I mean Mr. Archibald Brown. His missionaries go from room to room, meeting the needs of every case as far as possible. They not only supply food, but they gladden the hearts of these suffering ones, speaking to them of a better land further on. Mr. Brown's missionaries never visit a case without giving proper relief, and as they reach a great many their work is a very blessed one. There is another good man of the name of George Fuller, in Poplar, who works very hard indeed among the poor. He gives dinners to unemployed dock labourers twice a week. Some of these men come from a long distance to the docks to try to get some work. You will find men there from Nottinghill and Hammersmith. A man must be desperately badly off for work when he walks all these miles to obtain it. I have known these men in the East-end walk fourteen miles around the different docks, and get no work after all. They can do nothing but go indoors and sigh, and shed bitter tears over their hard lot. Mr. Fuller also gives teas three times a week to destitute children.

CO-OPERATIVE WOMEN.

There is another very important work I should like to bring before you. It is the work conducted by Mrs. Heckford, the Workwomen's Co-operative Association, 6, The Crescent, Minories, E. The women employed have fair wages; they do not work long hours, and they have a share in the profits. Mrs. Heckford says she has room for seventy women, and there are only five at work. What she requires is plenty of orders. Papers with a list of prices at which she sells the goods can be got from her. I consider this a very important work indeed. Just think: if seventy women could be kept employed at 15s. a week, how many little hearts would be cheered, and sick husbands comforted, and homes kept together. Yet only five are employed for lack of orders for the goods they make. Besides the 15s. a week paid, a certain sum is put aside for cases of sickness; at the end of the year the balance is distributed among the workers. As it is a co-operative affair all those employed know the details of the monies earned; they have only to go and look at the books and see how matters stand; they are, so to speak, their own mistresses. It is a very good work and I heartily commend it to you. May I read a little extract from Good Words on "Cheap Labour," which Mrs. Heckford has sent to me:—

> "A woman receives at the rate of 8d. for sewing a child's suit of clothes, and working sixteen hours she can manage to win 1s. 4d. a day. For making men's trousers she gets 6d. a pair, and can sew two pairs in the day. One penny a dozen is paid for making button-holes in collars, and by commencing at 5 a.m. and labouring till dusk the seamstress can earn 4d. A shirt is made for 2d., the maker finding her own thread, and by toiling from 6 a.m. till 11 p.m. she can win 1s. There are other branches of trade in which labour is equally underpaid. From 4½d. to 5½d. a thousand is the rate paid for making paper bags, averaging a net wage of 5s. to 9s. a week. Match-box makers get 2½d. the gross of 144 boxes, and by working sixteen hours 1s. may be earned."

And yet I read in a paper last week, of some large concern in connection with the match-making business, that they can pay 22½ per cent. dividend on the capital of the concern, with a certain surplus put by in addition!

There is yet another name I wish to mention, that of Miss Macpherson. She is carrying on a very precious work amongst poor widows who would have sunk into despair without such a friend. They are visited in their homes and brought together at the Home of Industry, in Commercial-street, where they are cheered and comforted, and receive a small sum for the work they can do. Miss Macpherson also does a great work among factory girls and men, and, as you know, she does much among the children, who are rescued, trained, and sent to Canada.

A GOOD WAY TO HELP.

Let me tell you a good way of helping these poor people in the East-end. I am very thankful indeed to a kind friend who has enabled me to help one family in the way which I will describe. There is in my neighbourhood a Scotch family, who in past times have been much better off. A few months ago through great competition their business left them, until they were reduced to the greatest straits and came to live in Whitechapel. It is extraordinary how people when they become very poor gravitate to Whitechapel. They leave Westminster and Nottinghill and Hammersmith, and find their way at length to our eastern part of the town, where we have to look after them. They come from all parts of the country; I was going to say, from all parts of the world.

This Scotch family have been sadly tried, but they have never murmured. Their children are dear Christians—little lambs of the fold, who love the Lord Jesus Christ; and the parents themselves are followers of the Lord. The husband, poor man, has tried hard to get work, but without success. He has been a respectable tradesman, yet he is not ashamed to go into the street with a shoeblack's box, to earn what he can for the support of his poor wife and children. Sometimes he will earn 6d. or 1s., or perhaps more, in a day. A few Saturdays back he found he must get 3s. 6d. in some way, to carry them over the Sunday. He went out with his shoeblack box and tried that till the rain came on. Then he turned the little money he had into matches, and stood in the streets trying to sell them. When eleven o'clock struck he was just 1s. short, having managed to earn 2s. 6d. from eight in the morning to eleven at night. The dear man, as a lover of the Lord, poured out his heart to God, and said: "Lord, what shall I do with this half-crown? Send me some more, if it be thy will." A lady was passing; she took a shilling out of her reticule and put it into the hand of the poor man, who looked at her with thankful surprise, and went home directly to gladden the hearts of his wife and children.

I had a letter from a dear Christian officer in the country, asking me if I knew of any deserving case. In my reply I gave the name and address of this Scotch family, thinking it would be better if my friend should communicate with them himself. One morning came; they had given their last bit of bread to the children, had kissed them, and sent them to school. Before doing so, the father, mother, and children had knelt down, and sung that good old Scotch psalm—

"The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want."

They went through the Psalm, and sang it with the tears streaming down their faces. The man went out with a few shoe-laces to try and sell them Just after he had gone, and the children had left for school, a knock came to the door. It was the postman, and he put a registered letter into the hands of the woman. She opened it, and, to her great delight, she found it contained a post-office order for 5s. She came running to me and said, "I think you know something about this; you have had a hand in this." Of course I recognised the handwriting and the name; but it was the hand of the Lord that had done it, through this Christian officer. The poor woman was indeed very happy. In a short time the husband came back to his home and said he had sold 9d. worth of laces. "The Lord has been smiling upon me," he said. "And the Lord has been blessing me too," she replied, and she put the letter into his hand. They fell on their knees and blessed God who had been so good to them.

But now I want to tell you how this family have been helped in a way that I should like to see many others helped. A lady wrote to me enclosing a cheque for £3, and said she would like the money, as long as it lasted, to be given to one family, at the rate of five shillings per week, so that they might be helped through the winter. When the sum was exhausted she said that if necessary she would send more. I always take these things to God in prayer. So I laid out the letter and the cheque on the chair where I knelt, and asked God for direction. At once it seemed as if there sounded in my ears the name of this Scotch family. I sent a message to the woman to come and see me. When she came she seemed very ill. She said: "Tell me what it is. I have just got up from my knees. There is nothing in the house. Perhaps the Lord is going to answer my prayer again." I said: "The Lord tells me to give you this five shillings a week for twelve weeks." Now I think that is the way to help the poor and gladden their hearts. If ladies and gentlemen would give their money in that way, and take an interest in the cases they help, and visit them, what an amount of good Christians might do. What an opportunity they would have of living out Christ before the people. I have two or three pensioners like that.

THE NEED FOR CAREFUL DEALING.

Depend upon it that work of that kind is a very important feature in these days. In dealing with the poor we ought to do it very carefully. Of course every lady and gentleman would do it kindly, but there are some who do not do so. I would not give any money indiscriminately. I have heard of people going to a place, buying a lot of bread and putting it into a lodging-house, where possibly it is not needed and will be squandered. There are some men in lodging-houses who live far better than I can live. We must take up individual cases and thoroughly investigate them. In my mission I have a great many workers. We know all the cases we come in contact with, and we know how best to help them. We should be very careful to avoid all schemes, however well meant, which may appear to be antagonistic to the interests of the poor. In these days, especially, of fear and excitement, I am convinced we ought to do all we can to meet their needs. If we cannot put our hands into our pockets and help them, let us, at least, give them Christian words of sympathy. Never let them think that we are in antagonism with them. There is a very widespread impression among them that they are being crushed, and that some of the better class are antagonistic to them. We who labour among them hear of these prejudices, especially among some of our younger people. They fancy it, at any rate, and we have to do the best we can to remove such impressions; but it is sometimes very difficult to do it. They seem to feel most acutely anything which appears to them to be against their interest. Before assisting any work it would be well to inquire as to the experience of the workers who ask for the help. Much experience is needed: but there is a great lack of it in some quarters in these days. There will be many mistakes made at the present time in connection with the distribution of relief—unintentionally, no doubt.

Above all, whatever is done must be done in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is no work, whether for body or soul, that is worth calling work, that is not done for his sake. Do you not think that it would be wise for us to look upon all we have as being his? How careful we should be in the use of our money if we looked upon it all as belonging to Christ. How careful we should use our £5 notes and our cheques if we did this. How carefully we should look at our clothing and at our homes if we felt that all was the Lord's. I never look upon the children and others that come around us without thinking: "Whose money is this that I have been entrusted with to spend on their behalf? It is the Lord's; how careful I must be in using it." I tell them the bread is Christ's bread, and they must be careful how they eat it with gratitude to Him in their hearts.

SOLEMN TIMES AT HAND.

We are living in very solemn times. Men's hearts are failing them for fear, for the things which are coming upon the earth. What do you think of the times? Is not God speaking very plainly to us for our past indifference and neglect? Ay, we have been indifferent to his glorious Gospel, and the claims of the poor upon us. Surely there is a depth of meaning underneath all the excitement and sorrow and misery so prevalent in the present day. Let those who are Christ's be up and doing. Now is the time to point these suffering ones to Him who shall sympathise with them and save them: that they may be able to say from their hearts,

"What a Friend we have in Jesus!"

I have been thinking for a considerable time that it will not be long before our blessed Lord will be here. Depend upon it He is coming quickly. Then to some of us there will be an end to all this sorrow and distress. I believe there are awful times coming on the earth. Even now the time has come when people will tell you that what you possess belongs to them. The time is coming when men and women will not know what to do; they will try to hide themselves from the things that are going to happen. My solemn impression is that the Lord will soon appear and take away those who are the salt of the earth. What then will be left behind? Oh, there will be terrible times then! But those of us who love the Lord Jesus Christ are looking, and longing for and expecting his return, when we shall be taken out of it all. I think we are on the eve of great changes, and depend upon it he only is safe whom Christ has saved and whom Christ keeps safe.

I could tell you many harrowing details—things that would make you weep; but I am not here for that purpose. I am here simply to tell you that it is your privilege, not to help any particular effort, but to help in meeting the needs of the poor; and to stir you up to prayer and to work, that you may go in and out amongst the people, and from your own heart and soul which have been blessed, be made a blessing to others.

REMARKS BY LORD RADSTOCK.

Mr. Holland added a few additional particulars and incidents at Lord Radstock's request; after he had concluded, his Lordship said:—

We must all feel deeply stirred by what we have heard, and many of you will be asking what we can do. I would add, therefore, what Mr. Holland naturally shrank from doing, except in a very indirect way. Many of you may very easily go down to the East-end and see his mission work at George Yard; it is only a little way from Aldgate Station on the Metropolitan Railway. Then you can realise something of the deep need around us. There may be others who say they cannot visit, but they would like to give something. I would only say that I shall be very glad to receive for Mr. Holland anything that you may be disposed to give. There is another effort organised by Lady Hobart, for providing funds for sewing-classes in which these poor women are allowed to earn 1s. 6d. a week by working three hours for 6d. on three days. I think you must all feel that whatever questions of political economy may arise, we have something more practical here—that any woman who is thankful to earn 6d. by honest work should not be hindered from doing it. Therefore many of you will probably be disposed to help the fund for these sewing-classes. Lady Hobart would be glad to receive such help, at her residence, 15, Eccleston-square, S.W.

There will be no plate held at the door. For this reason: we believe that those who realise their responsibility to God will feel that that responsibility is not to be settled by the gift of a few shillings or other coins we may have in our purses. It is a question, as Mr. Holland has stated, of our stewardship in general. In other words, do not let us look at our purses, but at our bank books. Then, if our revenue is not capable of producing something, let us see whether the capital account cannot be dealt with. If the capital account cannot be dealt with, let us look at our houses. I am quite certain there is not one of us, if we could realise the fact of these men and women starving in our midst, but would feel it the greatest pleasure possible to be able to sell something in order to minister to these suffering ones.

I would like to add one fact that touched me deeply. Some free breakfasts are given, as you know, in the neighbourhood of Portman-square (Gray's-yard). Hundreds of men get a piece of bread and some stuff called tea. One of these men said he was going to walk down to Lincoln to try and get work at a shilling a day. I thought to myself, I must change some of my phrases; that man belongs to the upper class, and I belong to a lower class. Yes, we shall have to change some of our phraseology when we think of those heroes who suffer and murmur not, feeling that they are sustained by an arm that never fails, and a love that never grows cold. In view of the times that are upon us, it becomes us very seriously to consider whether we should not, in a far more definite way, be followers of our Master, who came to seek and to save the lost.

The proceedings were terminated with prayer by Rev. C. A. Fox. Lord Radstock announced that Mr. George Holland would again speak on the same subject that day week, Wednesday, Feb. 24, at the same hour, 3.30 p.m.

BIBLE STUDIES.—6.

"My Master."—Exod. xxi. 5.
"A servant (bond-slave) of Jesus Christ."—Rom. i. 1.

THE slave is purchased. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price" (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20). "With the precious blood of Christ" (1 Pet. i. 19).

(2) Yet his service is a service of love. "I love my Master . . . I will not go out free" (Exod. xxi. 5; Deut. xv. 16). "The love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. v. 14).

(3) The Master's will must be his. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. vii. 21—23). "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother" (Matt. xii. 50).

(4) The work is his Master's, not his own. "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men" (Col. iii. 23). "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31). "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it" (Deut. xii. 32).

(5) The Master appoints the particular work for each. "To every man his work" (Mark xiii. 34). Philip in the midst of grand work in Samaria is told, "Arise, and go . . . and he arose and went" (Acts viii. 26, 27). "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" (Acts ix. 6).

(6) The Master supplies the means. Parable of the talents (Matt. xxv. 14—30). "Go in this thy might" (Judges vi. 14). "My grace is sufficient for thee" (2 Cor xii. 9; Phil. iv. 19). "Our sufficiency is of God" (2 Cor. iii. 5).

(7) He works with his servants. "The Lord working with them" (Mark xvi. 20). "Lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 20). "Workers together with Him" (2 Cor. vi. 1).

(8) The servant's work is never done. "Instant in season, out of season" (2 Tim. iv. 2). "Always abounding in the work of the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58). "Ye know not what hour your Lord doth come" (Matt. xxiv. 42). "Let us not be weary in well-doing" (Gal. vi. 9). "His servants shall serve Him" (Rev. xxii. 3).

(9) The servant's joy in the Master's glory. "Every way . . . Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice . . . Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death" (Phil. i. 18—20).

(10) The servant's reward. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matt. xxv. 21). "If any man's work abide . . . he shall receive a reward" (1 Cor. iii. 14).

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—I.

GIBRALTAR.

"A glorious charter, deny it who can,
Is writ in the words, 'I'm an Englishman!'"

THESE words of an old song wake up in the chambers of memory when we see that Spaniards and Italians resident at Gibraltar abjure their own nationality and claim to be subjects of the British Crown. Those born on the Rock are called Rock Scorpions. But those who come to reside there by permission of the Governor say, "Call us Rock Scorpions, or what you like, only acknowledge that we are British subjects."

But a far higher consideration is the position taken by English Christians who are bold and faithful witnesses for Christ amidst the darkness and ungodliness of the garrison and town. Two good ladies, Miss Archibald and Miss Aimers, have a very interesting work at their Mission House on the south side, where as many of the soldiers as can be induced to visit them or come to their meetings, are kindly and hospitably entertained and helped in a variety of ways. They also visit the neighbouring barracks, and have been channels of blessing to these soldier lads, some of whom have been induced to write home to their parents, who had lost sight of them; and some have been converted to God.

At the house of Archdeacon Govett, who is earnestly interested in all aggressive and progressive Christian work, we met friends of and workers for Purity, as that word has recently come to be understood. Mr. Copeland, an energetic young clergyman, has lately come out in connection with the Missions to Seamen, and is employing himself with good results in the harbour.

At the house of Mrs. Duffield we much enjoyed a Bible-reading which is held weekly, attended by Christian ministers, officers, and others. We received much kindness from Major W. W. Smith, who accompanied us through the "Galleries" cut in the face of the Rock, which form an important adjunct to the defences of the Straits.

Our readers are already aware that a Soldiers' Institute is in operation — the Governor, Sir John Adye, is the patron—and whose affairs are directed by a committee of officers. The practical management of this useful agency is in the hands of Mr. and Mrs. George Holmes, who are energetic and devoted Christians, with whom we enjoyed great refreshment in spiritual things. The Institute is not, however, advantageously situated, and its accommodation is not adequate to the demand put upon it. Negotiations are, therefore, being made for some freehold property in a central position, the cost of purchase being £1400; but a large sum is needed beyond this amount for the extensive alterations which must be made before it would answer the purpose for which it is required. Of music-halls and beershops there is no lack, but beyond the weekly Church services there is no provision made for the spiritual needs of the men. Some large and handsome recreation rooms have recently been established, at which a smoking concert is given every Tuesday; but this entertainment is not of an elevating character, and the most that can be said in its favour is that, during its duration, the five or six hundred men present are out of the way of the drink—i.e., ten per cent. of the garrison avail themselves of this privilege for two hours once a week! But even this may not last for long, as in contravention of the understanding that no intoxicants should be sold, it is now proposed to encourage the more frequent use of the reading and writing-rooms, and other permanent attractions, by the introduction of a drinking-bar. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Governor will not give his consent to this retrogressive proposal. The existence, therefore, of a bright and pleasant resort, where healthy recreation is provided under Christian influences, would be an inestimable blessing, and we need hardly urge its claims upon all interested in our soldier lads at this important stronghold.

While it is true, however, that England is "in the foremost files of time," and leads the way in all material and moral progress, there is a dark side to the picture—more mischievous, and the more deplorable, on this very account. In defiance of the will of the English people, unmistakably expressed, by which the Acts for the protection of vice were suspended in 1883, and will soon, doubtless, be abolished, they are practically in operation at Gibraltar. A special "permit" is granted to women of Spain and other nationalities, to reside upon the Rock for immoral purposes, on condition of weekly inspection. In visiting some of their houses with a constable, for purposes of inquiry, I saw their official certificates for the current week authenticating them as "healthy." The majority of soldiers in the garrison are youths in their teens, many away from home for the first time. The hideous hypocrisy of marching these boys to church on Sunday, to pray "From fornication and all other deadly sins, good Lord deliver us," while they know that on the previous day provision had been made for them to commit this "deadly sin" with impunity, places England, "the heir of all the ages," in "the foremost files" of cant.

I passed through street after street of this English town, each house containing six, seven, or eight women, their rooms neat and clean, each waiting to sell herself for a shilling. They are not taught to consider it vice; and if it be so, confession and absolution take it away. I shall never forget that sorrowful evening, not the least part of the sorrow being our helplessness to help them. There seems no honest employment for them at Gibraltar, and if they were sent back into Spain there is nothing for them to do there. As I write I feel humiliated as an Englishman, and disgraced as a Christian, to think that my mention of these heart-breaking scenes may be condemned as unreadable by good people at home, and that seemingly religious men, and even women, mothers and sisters (as I learn once more by a letter just received from a well-known literary friend at home) are saying: "There always have been such; there always will be; there always must be." In other words, some mothers' children (not their own) must be damned into the world, damned in it, and damned out of it, in order that they themselves and their children may be free from insult, and that their husbands and brothers and sons may sin in safety.

In the coming agitation for the total abolition of those flagrant Acts it will not be enough to legislate for England alone, but for Gibraltar, and all our foreign possessions. Compared with Spain we cannot, but compared with the Bible ideal, we must and do, with shame and sorrow, "deny" that "A glorious charter . . .

Is writ in the words, 'I'm an Englishman.'"

CHRIST IN THE PSALMS.

By Mr. PHILIP HENRY GOSSE.*

THE saints of God, in all ages, have found the Book of Psalms a peculiarly precious portion of the Word. It stands alone, separating the historical books on one side from the prophetical on the other; itself being very distinct from either. The Lord divided the Scriptures then extant into three parts, saying (Luke xxiv. 44), that all things written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, must be fulfilled about Himself. There is no book of the Bible that is so often quoted in the New Testament as the Psalms. More than half of the whole number are quoted (82), several of them many times.

The instinct of the new nature in the believer has doubtless led to the estimation in which this book has been held. Its contents almost wholly consist of direct converse with God—of confessions, prayers, supplications, intercessions, appeals, agonised cries; of expressions of complacency, love, confidence, hope, joy; of praise and thanks on a multitude of grounds; so that these inspired hymns seem to meet the saint in all his moods, in all his needs; to be a vehicle of thought and expression, always ready to hand, for intercourse with the Father of spirits.

Perhaps this instinctive sense of the preciousness of the Psalms is truer than the knowledge habitually exercised upon them. Let us bring the light of the Spirit's very ample use of them in the New Testament to bear on this book of unique structure and unique excellence. As a whole, the collection is usually attributed to David as author—"the Psalms of David": nay, the Spirit has used (Heb. iv. 7) the name, elliptically, just as we familiarly quote a modern author, "in Milton;" "in Gibbon;" "saying in David."

Let our devout attention, however, be engaged not on the literary, or artistic, or musical, or historical, or antiquarian aspects of the book, interesting though these all be, in their season; but on this question: What does the inspiring Spirit propose by inserting this great collection of poems in the ancient Scripture, and by his elaborate and manifold citations of them in the New? What is the secret of the high honour which He attaches to this book, to which the instinctive inner sense of the Christian—often deeper, higher, truer, holier than any clearly defining mental power—so heartily responds? Is not the secret this? The Psalms are the experiences—if of David, only slightly, superficially, unimportantly; often not at all; but mainly of the great Son of David, the true "David," i.e., the Beloved; the Son of God and Son of Man; the Word become flesh. It may seem rash even to suggest that experience written by David should ever be "not David's experience at all." Yet Peter, on the day of Pentecost, cites the words of Psalms xvi. and cx., not as containing an underlying sense which might be applied to Messiah, but as absolutely not true of David;† having no relation at all to David's personal circumstances; but uttered by him in his prophetic character, solely concerning his glorious descendant and antitype, the Christ of God. And this exegesis the Apostle makes "with boldness," as if aware that some among his hearers might be stumbled by it. This oracle of the Holy Ghost, uttered at the very outset of his ministration in the Church, is of great value for determining the question now before us.

It would seem to be a principle of exposition too self-evident to need formal argument, that, if we can satisfactorily identify a speaker (or a person addressed), in any part of a Psalm, the same speaker bears the same relation throughout that Psalm; unless a change of person is patent on the surface. Thus, if I can be sure that, in Psalm lxix., he who says (ver. 9), "the reproaches of them that reproached Thee are fallen upon me" is the Lord Christ (Rom. xv. 3), I am sure that he who says (ver. 12), "I was the song of the drunkards" must be the very same person. And this not a whit the less because of any real or supposed difficulty in the identification.

Throughout the book we find certain broad, salient features of character and circumstance, occurring again and again, delineated with such precision of individuality that, after a few observations, we cannot help recognising the identity. Thus, the book opens with the portrait of a man, whose delight is in the law of Jehovah, who meditates therein day and night, whose righteous cause is sure ultimately to prosper. Presently (Ps. vii.) we find one appealing to Jehovah to judge him, "according to mine integrity that is in me," avowing that his defence is of God, "who saveth the upright in heart." Then (xv., xxiv.) we hear authoritative challenges, demanding who, among men, can claim to ascend Jehovah's Holy Hill, of right, and to dwell there; and One accepts the challenge, on the ground of his sinless uprightness of walk, his cleanness of hands, and his purity of heart. And lo! we presently discover, as the everlasting doors open to receive this Righteous Man, this King of Glory, it is none other than Jehovah of Hosts Himself!

Now the portrait of this man of spotless uprightness and lustrous holiness is of constant recurrence. Wherever we see the lineaments we may be sure that we have before us that "Lamb without blemish and without spot," who, when He had just "convicted, in their own conscience" (John viii. 9), his rancorous foes, could fearlessly say (ver. 46), "Which of you convinceth Me of sin?" This feature alone will identify Jesus in Psalms 1, 4, 5, 7, 9, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 24, 25, 26, 35, 37, 38, 41; and many others.

But this Holy One meets with little sympathy from men. He is "small and despised;" hated without a cause; reproached for his very faithfulness; his love is met with the basest ingratitude; his steps are dogged, his words are distorted, by ever watchful enemies, numerous, lively, strong, unceasing, cruel, unmerciful, implacable, false. Very many Psalms are largely occupied by the godly Man's appeals to God's knowledge of the falsity of the charges brought against him, prayers for protection from their oppressive violence, and for deliverance from the snares which they are privily laying for his feet. It is the bitter hatred of the Scribes and Pharisees in the Gospels (Matt. xxii. 15, 46; Luke xix. 47, xx. 20; John xi. 46), but depicted more vividly, in far fuller detail; and not merely as an historical incident, but as it told upon the wounded heart of the Blessed One Himself, and as it was spread before his Father in secret. For this, see Psalms 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 28, 31, 35, 41, 71, 109, 118, 119, 129, 140, 141, 143, with many others.

SOUTHPORT.—At the Y.M.C.A. in this town very great blessing has been vouchsafed at the Sunday evening evangelistic services. The Lord has richly blessed the efforts of his servants, and at each gathering many have been led to accept the Saviour. The recent meetings have been specially successful.

"AS A MOTHER COMFORTETH."

LITTLE feet, pattering merrily
Down the street,
A fresh little voice ringing out on the wind,
Clear and sweet.
Mother has sent her out, clean and fair,
To have a nice blow in the morning air,
Which is playing now with her wavy hair
And kissing her dimpled cheek.

A horse comes clattering down the street,
Narrow here;
She runs, trying hard to get out of the way,
Full of fear.
But the little feet slip, she falls on the stone,
All muddy and wet, with a little moan,
Feeling suddenly desolate and alone,
And calls for mother to come.

Mother hears quickly her darling's cry,
Brings her in,
And, washing away the mud and the dirt,
Tries to win
A smile from the poor, little, tear-stained face,
And hushes her up in a fond embrace,
Till baby looks up into mother's face,
Saying, "Mother, is God like you?"

Baby words, teaching a lesson sweet,
Echo true
Of the promise given in ages past,
Ever new;
Telling the mourning and once-beguiled,
The aching heart and the sin-defiled,
"As a mother comforts her little child,
E'en so will I comfort you."

WARNING TO SERVANTS.

WE have been asked by the committee of the National Vigilance Association to give publicity to the following warning:—

(1) In applying for situations at registry offices make quite sure of the character of the office at which you apply.

(2) Do not complete your engagement with any employer without making inquiry as to the character of the household for which your services are required.

(3) Do not be beguiled by advertisements that you see in newspapers, whether in London or the country, promising high wages and very little work. In most cases these situations do not exist at all. The advertisements are put in by people who wish to draw you to their office, and who, when you arrive there, assure you that that particular situation is already filled, but that they will soon find you another. Their promises may lead you into making very undesirable engagements.

(4) If you live in the country be most careful in answering advertisements by letter to get some proof of the respectability of the advertiser. Many an innocent girl has been drawn up to London to her ruin by making engagements by letter with an advertiser of whom she knows nothing. Better by far stay in the country all your life than run any such risks.

(5) Be on your guard against entering any Home connected with a registry office, unless you have taken pains to know its character. Many a girl has gone with her box into such a house in the hope of very soon being provided with a situation. Day after day has gone on, a heavy bill has been run up which she has not enough money to pay, and she is turned out—often late at night—to shift for herself, without money, as best she can, her box being detained by the people of the house.

There are many highly respectable houses in London, and also some temporary Homes for Servants which may be entirely trusted. If you have no means of finding out for yourselves which these are, information will be given to you on the subject at the office of the National Vigilance Association, 36, Strand, Charing-cross, London, where also any cases of fraud or deception by registry offices will be carefully considered, or inquiries will be made (on writing to the Secretary) as to the character of any place advertised in London.

TRUE NATIONAL DEFENCES.[*]

BY REV. CHARLES GRAHAM.

> "Now Elisha was fallen sick of his sickness whereof he died. And Joash, the king of Israel came down unto him, and wept over his face, and said, O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof."—2 Kings xii. 14.

THIS Joash was the grandson of the fierce and terrible Jehu. Jehu was the appointed instrument of the Divine vengeance on the house of Ahab, He met Joram, the son of Ahab, who tried to oppose his entry into Jezreel, shot him through the heart with an arrow, and then cast his body to the dogs in the vineyard of Naboth. He had Jezebel thrown from a window, and then drove his horses over her mangled body. He forced the elders of Samaria to send him the heads of Ahab's seventy sons, and then had them piled in two heaps at the gate of Jezreel. He collected together in Samaria all the worshippers of Baal to offer a great sacrifice to their idol, had them arrayed in vestments from Baal's temple, and, while engaged in their idolatrous worship, had them all slaughtered by his guard.

Great was Jehu's professed zeal for the Lord; but strange fire, not that from God's altar, had kindled it. From the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, he turned not away: he continued the worship of the golden calves set up in Dan and Bethel. But as he had fulfilled his will in cutting off the house of Ahab, God promised to him, that his sons should sit on the throne of Israel to the fourth generation.

As the king of Syria was trying to crush Israel, and destroy its nationality, in the days of Joash, the grandson of Jehu, in order to fulfil his promise it was necessary for God to interfere. God acts through his servant Elisha, making him his instrument to deliver and inspire Joash with confidence and courage.

THE CONFESSION OF JOASH.

The king of Israel had made the discovery that the safety and power of a nation do not consist in the strength of its army, and the abundance of its military stores, but in its possession of men who have power with God. The exodus of Israel from Egypt, and the destruction of Pharaoh and his army in the Red Sea, had taught this lesson. But long before it had been taught, in the history of Israel's great ancestor, when, after Chedorlaomer and his kings had subdued revolted provinces and destroyed opposing armies, Abraham, with his trained servants and the help of three patriarchs like himself, routed Chedorlaomer and his forces, and recovered his nephew, Lot, with the captives and spoils of Sodom. It was impressively taught, also, when, soon afterwards, Sodom and the cities of the plain were destroyed by fire from heaven, because there were not found in them ten righteous persons. The whole history of Israel and Judah was the proof of this truth.

How slow men are to learn that "righteousness exalteth a nation," and that sin is both the disgrace and the weakness of any people. Our own nation is proof in point of the words of Solomon. At the time the plague swept away a third part of London, righteousness was at a low ebb, and sin reigned in England. That was the period when the servants of God were persecuted and cast out for their loyalty to Christ. After the plague followed the fire, when a great part of the city was reduced to ashes.

At every period, when England has honoured God and his truth, He has preserved her from her enemies. All know that in the days of Queen Elizabeth, Spain, then in the glory of her power, determined, by her "Invincible" Armada, to quench the light of the Reformation in the blood of our forefathers. What, then, were the chariots of England, and the horsemen thereof? From all the people of God in the land a cry for help ascended to heaven. Our little fleet fought upon the sea, but prayer ascended from the land. God Himself came into the conflict. He made the stormy wind fulfil his word. He spoke to the slumbering tempests, and they awoke, and dashed many of those great Spanish galleons on the rocks, and with their wrecks strewed our northern shores; others, with their guns and men and warlike stores, sank into the seething waters.

When Napoleon I. commenced his career of slaughter and destruction, three nations united to destroy the power of this country by sea, preparatory to crushing it by land. Napoleon himself sailed with an army to Egypt, stormed and took Alexandria as a preparation for destroying our power in the East. The eyes of Christians in this country were again turned to the Lord. In three separate engagements, the fleets of Spain, Holland, and France were destroyed, and all the schemes of Napoleon confounded. Again the Lord's people in her were the chariots of England and the horsemen thereof.

THE SYMBOLIC ACTION.

Never was there a truer patriot than Elisha: his last thoughts, and last hours are occupied with the interests of his country. His last recorded act is to teach his sovereign and his nation that "the battle is not to the strong, no the race to the swift," that, while all lawful means are to be used, success is from the Lord. But he teaches another lesson, not less important, that true success is never withheld from faith.

It was a custom among the early Romans, borrowed no doubt from older nations, when they made war on any people, to send one of their Faciales to the border of their enemy's territory, and cast a spear into it. A similar symbolic act is here performed by the direction of the prophet. He causes Joash to fill a bow with an arrow, and then, putting his own dying hands on the hands of his sovereign, directs him to shoot through the open window eastwards toward Aphek, a town on the borders of Syria. While the arrow flies through the air, the prophet exclaims, "The arrow of the Lord's deliverance. and the arrow of deliverance from Syria, for thou shalt smite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou hast consumed them."

The prophet next directs the king to take the arrow and to smite upon the ground. This the king does thrice and stops. Elisha is angry. The king is not in sympathy with his spirit and his faith. Joash must have understood that his action was symbolic. Yet he failed to realise its importance. Therefore the prophet says reprovingly, "Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it; whereas now thou shalt smite it but thrice."

The victories of the Lord's people are here seen to be victories of faith. The arrow of prayer from the bow of faith reaches heaven and brings down deliverance and triumph. The soul that goes on to pray in faith goes on to conquer. The failure of Israel was that they limited Jehovah. His word was to them, as it now is to us, "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

Beyond our utmost wants,
  His love and power can bless;
To those who seek his face, He grants
  More than they can express.

Was not this verified in wrestling Jacob? in Jonah brought up from the bottom of the sea? in Manasseh restored from the dungeon to his throne? These are mere samples of the dealings of God with those who call upon Him. When has the promise ever failed?—"Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me."

We are told that, at a time when all looked dark for the Reformation, Luther betook himself to prayer; and that one day he came out of his chamber, saying, "We have overcome, we have overcome." Immediately came out the proclamation of Charles V., that no man should any longer be molested for his profession of the Gospel.

This is a time of acknowledged peril to this kingdom, but more particularly to Ireland. Christians and Protestants there, in three provinces more especially, know what the issue, humanly speaking, would be, were they placed at the mercy of a priesthood and people who believe it is meritorious, in the sight of God, to exterminate "heretics," when they have the power. Where, at this hour, is our confidence? Shall we look to our Government? or to an arm of flesh? "The chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof" are those who, in this country and Ireland, have power with God. Did we look only at our many and great national sins, which our legislature would seem to desire to perpetuate, and the flood of our abominable vices, we might well despair; but, on the contrary, our hope is strong. God has a host of praying people in these kingdoms; and, however He may chasten us for unfaithfulness, if we wait on Him in believing prayer, He will not give us up to the will of our enemies; but will make the wrath of men to praise Him, and the remainder of wrath He will restrain.

CARING FOR THE TRAMPS.

IN December, 1844, Miss Susan E. Barnett issued an appeal to the guardians, chaplains, and masters of unions throughout the country, calling their attention to a special effort that was being made on behalf of the tramps, an enormous and neglected class, for whom there was so little spiritual provision. Miss Barnett pointed out that under the new system they were wisely detained in workhouses on the Sunday, but that they were generally prisoners, with no religious instruction. The result of the appeal showed a very deep and widespread interest in the work. Miss Barnett received about 170 replies from guardians, chaplains, clerks, and masters of unions in various parts of the country, and very satisfactory results have followed the efforts put forth. It was found that in a few unions some provision had previously been made for this neglected class, while many had been induced by the appeal to adopt means for meeting their spiritual needs. Miss Barnett writes:—

"A spirit of inquiry and deep interest has been generally aroused, which it is hoped will ultimately lead to the recognition of the claims of the tramps. Many whom I have met were 'gentlemen;' several of them have been reduced through misfortune, not misconduct. The public generally appear to think that it is impossible to reach this wandering class, but God has given us this splendid opportunity under the new system, which detains casuals in workhouses on the Sunday. Can we refuse them the Bread of Life? Among the numerous replies I have received from union authorities, is one from Mr. James Woodcock, Chairman of the Workhouse Committee, Birkenhead, who writes that 'he has succeeded in passing a resolution to draw the attention of the Local Government Board to the object, so as, if possible, to move for a National Reform in the matter.' The excellent matron of the Wellington Union called on me to report personally the result of my appeal. On visiting them she mentioned my efforts on their behalf; many of them wept and were deeply affected, saying, 'Now that we know there is one friend who cares for us, we will try and lead better lives.' This induced the matron to point out to them the 'Friend that sticketh closer than a brother.' Suitable religious books, tracts, and cards, or money to purchase such, will be gladly received by me at 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham."

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS' SOCIETY.—At the last periodical meeting of the General Board of Management the summary of relief granted to distressed shipwrecked fishermen or mariners, and widows, orphans, &c., during the first half-quarter of the current year, showed the large sum of £3,885 directly from the Central Office of the Society in London, and at its several coast agencies, in aid of the numerous destitute shipwrecked crews promptly succoured in their extremity and forwarded to their homes in all parts of the United kingdom.

For the Young.

NACHO AND SUSE.

SUSE'S father and mother live near Blantyre, East Africa, and came to me from their village when I called them to ask if they would like Suse to come with me to Scotland. He is a free boy, and his parents are, what in Africa is considered, "well off"; that is, his father has a gun, a quantity of calico and beads, and more than one wife. Suse came to the mission a very little boy, with blue beads round his neck, and was remarkable from the first for his cleverness and quickness, and for being full of fun. This is still true of him, though he is a little older now, and is about twelve.

His tribe is the Yao tribe: they are called Wiyao, or Ajawa, which is the same word. About twenty years ago the Ajawa came in conquering bands all over the Shiré Highlands, where Blantyre now stands. Perhaps you may remember that men from Oxford and Cambridge formed what is called "the Universities Mission," and sent a bishop, with other University men, to Central Africa to evangelise the heathen. Livingstone went with them, and helped them to choose their station; and you may have read that Magomero, which is only a short distance from Blantyre, was the name of that station. There is peace now between the Ajawa and Mang'anja, but when the Universities men came long ago, the fierce Ajawa, with guns which Portuguese traders had furnished, were driving the Mang'anja from house and home, and carrying away hundreds of them into slavery. The angel that looked over the Shiré Highlands saw burning villages, men dead and dying, and women with their children driven away in slave sticks by cruel masters. This was Suse's tribe. Blantyre now is like a market where both Ajawa and Mang'anja come to buy: they buy peace and the knowledge of God; and we are looking forward to the day when that knowledge, in its ever-powerful working in the heart and conscience, will constrain them by the Holy Spirit to turn unto the Lord.

Perhaps you wonder where the Shiré Highlands are. They form a large plateau with hills and streams to the south of Lake Nyasa. All round the one side, like the serpent in Northern mythology lying round the earth, circles the river Shiré. The plateau breaks off on the east, away towards the sun-rising, with a magnificent mass of mountain called Milanje, and on the north-east reaches to the mountain plateau of Zomba. Thus you see we have a wide tract of land, occupied on the east by the Ajawa, and on the west by the Ajawa and Mang'anja, who meet together at Blantyre.

Nacho's parents are, perhaps, in slavery. His father was a headman. He is one of the Mang'anja tribe, and if you would like to tell the particular branch of that widespread tribe, you would call him a Chipeta. The Chipeta are fierce, but the conquering Angoni, who are sprung from the same Zulu tribes with which we fought in Zululand, came wandering up north, and settled themselves down in the Chipeta country, and Nacho's poor people, with their bows and arrows, had no chance against the spear and shield of these Zulu warriors: thus war swept round the hills of his native land. However, you will be pleased to hear that the Chipeta were able to keep a part of their country, and that the Angoni, have lost so many men in fighting with them, that they have given up trying to conquer. Nacho, however, was caught and sold by them, when a little boy, to Mulilima, the Makololo chief, who set him to herd his goats. But Nacho's heart was too brave for slavery, and, as he had heard about the English in the hills, he and another little fellow ran away from Mulilima, and came to Blantyre. They slept in trees at night, and hid in the long grass whenever they heard any one coming; but they passed safely all dangers—dangers from wild beasts, and dangers from wild men—and arrived at the Mission-station. There Nacho found Dr. Peden, and served him to gain the liberty which all find who serve well.

Perhaps, when you thus know something about them, you may begin to feel what a great work lies before us all in that land. You must work, as well as those who are in Blantyre, by prayer, by giving, and perhaps by giving yourselves. God asks us now, What have you done, what are you doing, or what will you do, for the people of Nacho and Suse?—Rev. D. C. Scott, in Church of Scotland Mission Record.

EXPLORATION IN PALESTINE.

THE "Quarterly Statement" of the Palestine Exploration Fund once more reminds us of this work, which has now been going on for many years. It would be impossible to forget the past whilst delving beneath the mounds that cover long-hidden evidences of a nation's greatness; but, however interesting these, it is only as they point onward and upward, to the Divine and the greater glory that shall yet be revealed, that they are of real value. No one can read the pages of this "Quarterly Statement" without feeling the fascination of the subject. The first article contains an account of "Excavations on Carmel," which have yielded rich results; but as we read of tombs, with carvings of the seven-branched candlestick, and of the many remains of pottery, &c., that prove the site to have been once inhabited by large numbers of people, we cannot but think of the fiery Elijah and the God who answered by fire. As showing how great are the difficulties that meet the investigator of Biblical topography. the next article deals with the vexata quæstio of the site of the Cities of the Plain.

But the central point of all investigation and exploration in the Holy Land is of course at Jerusalem, and from thence we learn that, while at work for the purpose of constructing a new pavement, "the actual foundations of the second wall described by Josephus as beginning at the gate Gennath and encircling the northern quarter of the town," have been discovered, together with a stone ball, such as the Romans used in the siege of Jerusalem, and three pieces of pottery with the stamp of the tenth legion upon them. Besides other articles, the object of which is to fix the position of places whose site is involved in the deepest uncertainty, there are some notes on Phœnician gems and amulets, together with "A Catechism of the Druse Religion," and an article on "Yoma; or, The Day of Atonement." The principal exploration work of the year 1885 has been that executed by Herr Gottlieb Schumacher, whose memoir, under the title of "Across the Jordan," we recently noticed.

We should not close without reference to the most important work about to be undertaken by a Committee of Inquiry—that of making an investigation, by means of specially qualified agents, into the manners and customs of the various peoples and tribes in Syria and the East. The results, which will from time to time be published in the Society's Journal, cannot fail to be of the greatest value. Those who wish for further information upon Palestine Exploration should communicate with the Secretary of the fund, Mr. Walter Besant, 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

POOR IN EDINBURGH.

AMIDST so much, in the present aspect of society, especially as seen in our large cities, that is calculated to cause sorrow and apprehension in the minds of the thoughtful, there is nothing that shines out brighter than the efforts continually being put forth on behalf of the very poorest and most hopeless classes. In "The Story of the Drill Hall Breakfasts" given every Sunday morning during the past eleven years in the city of Edinburgh, we have a striking illustration of this. Principal Cairns says, "No work in our great city impresses me more than the Drill Hall Breakfast, with its kindred works of mercy."

Here, every Sabbath morning, there are gathered together nearly 1000 guests, for whom, though they may never be able to recompense, a feast is made; the average weekly cost has been £13 7s. 6d., and the average weekly income £13 6s. 8¼d. We need not picture the scene, it is, alas! too familiar. Suffice it that in this way, the poor, the ignorant, the drunken, the profligate, and even the criminals of the city have been brought under the influence of the Gospel, and Christ's work has been done in supplying a comfortable breakfast on his own day, to many a poor starving one who knew not where the next meal was to come from. Not only this, but here alone could these outcast ones enjoy the quiet rest and elevating influences of the day.

Many of the features of the work are such as are familiar to all our readers. Early on the Sabbath morning the Cowgate, Grassmarket, West Port, and neighbouring streets are scoured by the workers. In the evening the lodging-houses are visited, and services held. There is a Sabbath-school consisting mostly of those picked up at the breakfasts, and a staff of 120 teachers. Various meetings are held during the week. Many through the word spoken and the encouragement given have been led to Christ, and have returned to give Him thanks who had done such great things for them. Not a few of the rescued ones have been sent out to Canada, where they are doing well; while many of the workers have gone forth to the foreign mission fields. India, China, Japan, the United States, Africa, and the New Hebrides have all been blessed by the labours of men who had learned to labour and to wait amongst the very poorest and most hopeless classes of their own people in the Drill Hall at Edinburgh.

THE LATE PRINCIPAL TULLOCH.

THE death of Principal Tulloch has made a gap difficult to fill in the ranks of the Scottish clergy. During the sixty-three years of his life he played many parts, and played them all well. While we deplore his lack of evangelical warmth; we readily recognise and heartily appreciate his manly devotion to what he thought right.

After a brilliant student career, he was called at the early age of twenty-one to an important pulpit in Dundee. At thirty-one he was appointed to the Principalship of St. Andrew's University. That was a high position for a young man, but he proved worthy of it. He rapidly came to the front as an ecclesiastical politician. Nature had gifted him with an imposing person and fascinating eloquence. His trained intellect, backed by these qualities, carried all before it on the floor of the Assembly. In the course of a few years he rose to be an acknowledged leader of the Church of Scotland, and in that capacity he exercised great influence. He had a marvellous faculty for all kinds of literary work. The heritage of thought he has left behind is large and varied. It is yet too soon to estimate its proper worth. His histories of religious leaders and movements are full of interest and value. It is by them he will be chiefly remembered. They are honest, and strive to be impartial, but the opinions of the man appear in them too often for the pleasure of the lover of evangelical truth.

THERE IS ENOUGH LATENT POWER in the Church of to-day to carry the world by storm, if it could be aroused. But will it be aroused? Where is another Wesley, Whitefield, Finney, who will come in the old-time power, with new-time expression, and wake the slumbering Church to life and potency? What is evidently needed is a great spiritual man to develop and marshal the latent forces of the Church.—Independent (New York).

MR. AITKEN IN LONDON.

WELCOME AND THANKSGIVING.

AFTER the great things that Mr. Aitken and his helpers were able to do in America, by the good hand of the Lord upon them, it was fitting that on their return they should meet some of their English friends to render thanks to God for the past, and encouraging the hearts of one another for the future. The thanksgiving meeting, as announced, was held in Willis's Rooms, on Friday evening, and was well attended. The Earl of Aberdeen, recently appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, had been advertised to preside, and at the appointed hour he made his appearance, followed by Mr. Aitken and others.

Prayer being offered by Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, of Kensington, the noble Chairman tendered, in the name of the meeting, a hearty and affectionate welcome to Mr. Aitken, Mr. Stephens, Mrs. Crouch, and Miss Parker. He was obliged, he said, to leave at once in order to start for Ireland, where a very serious task awaited him. He shook hands most heartily with Mr. Aitken, and left amid the cheers of the meeting. Mr. T. A. Denny took the vacated chair, and, as a parting word to the noble Earl, hoped that he might have a very happy time in Ireland. Coming from a true son of old Erin, the wish was eminently appropriate, and we hope it may be realised to the full. After a few words from Rev. C. J. Atherton, Mr. Denny said that much prayer ought to be offered for Lord and Lady Aberdeen: if anyone ever needed it, they did now. Mr. Denny then referred to the wonderful success that had attended Mr. Aitken's meetings in New York, at some of which he had himself been present.

Rev. J. Stephens briefly reported on the work among the children, which had been his special department. It was a very prosperous one at Newburg, not so much so at Brooklyn, but also successful at Newark, New York, Nashville, and New Orleans. He said he was obliged to endorse Mr. Moody's remark, that America's great need is the knowledge of the Bible. In one place they visited he met a young woman of eighteen, who had been confirmed, but had never possessed a Bible. One Sunday-school teacher told him that he had never once mentioned the name of Jesus to her class, because she did not love Him herself. None of the teachers in that school ever read the Bible in their classes. One wet evening he conducted a Bible-reading instead of the regular mission service, and there was not a single copy of the Bible forthcoming in the audience.

Mr. Aitken was very cordially greeted, as he rose to rehearse something of the Lord's dealings with them on the other side. On going out, he said, he had felt greatly encouraged and comforted by the assurance of the continuous and prayerful sympathy of Christians on this side. From first to last their reception in America was most cordial, and now he could number his friends on that Continent by the hundred. While there was prejudice at first, it quickly vanished. Americans are by no means such sticklers for precedent as we are in this old country; therefore the missions soon became popular, and his experience led him to believe that, by the blessing of God, a new epoch had been begun in the history of the Episcopal Churches throughout the American Continent. Mr. Aitken proceeded in some detail to refer to the salient features of the work. At the preliminary "Retreat," clergymen, high and low, and broad, were of one accord in desiring to receive a blessing, and to have one imparted to their congregations. He passed in review the first mission at the lovely little town of Newburg, on the banks of the Hudson, and the wonderful time of blessing in New York, especially in Trinity Church, Broadway. Pretty full details have already been published in connection with this latter effort. He told of the memorable closing meeting, at which he read an anonymous letter he had received, describing the fearful results the writer had met with and experienced, through the miserable custom in many New York business houses of setting apart someone to "entertain" their customers from the country. The writer gave a list of about a dozen young men who had been the flower of their kind in the city, who had all gone down to early and dishonoured graves by reason of the contamination thus contracted. The reading of this letter, said Mr. Aitken, produced great sensation in the meeting, and in the city, and he hoped a blow had been struck at the fearful and disastrous custom.

At the close of his deeply-interesting statement Mr. Aitken asked that prayer should be made for the converts in America, and also for the mission limited in South London, which commenced on Sunday last.

HUNGRY LONDON.

WE continue to receive pressing appeals for help in feeding our hungry people:—

Mr. W. J. Temple, 21, Maud-road, Plaistow, E., states that free breakfasts are being given to poor in Millwall on Sunday mornings, at the Congregational Church Schoolroom.

Mr. R. Bilke, of the Union-hall Mission (18, Greenhill-park Villas, Harlesden, N.W.) desires to give bread, meat and coals, as well as free teas and soup suppers to the many poor in the neighbourhood of the mission halls.

Mr. George Hatton, of St. Giles' Christian Mission (4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.) sends to us details of touching scenes of misery and want in St. Giles. He and his fellow workers are longing to relieve some of the terrible destitution that meets them on every hand.

Mr. Wm. Catlin, of the Cow Cross Mission (17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.), says he will reluctantly have to stop the dinners to poor children unless further aid is given by kind friends.

Mr. J. Atkinson, Secretary of the Christian Community (10, Enfield-road, South Kingsland, N.) states that the mission are giving free teas, soup suppers, bread, coal, grocery tickets, lodging tickets and clothing. The need is in no wise abated, and help to continue the work is craved.

A correspondent states that the inmates of a Home for Blind Women in London have agreed to forego a meat dinner once a week, in order that the equivalent may be distributed among those still more deeply afflicted.

AN AMIABILITY SOCIETY.—A Roman Catholic journal of German Switzerland proposes the creation of a new society for the development of amiability. The following are among its rules: "I will endeavour to look amiable both in society and in solitude, and to secure it by communion with Jesus Christ, rejoicing in his joy. I will never refuse a request for help or service in a dry, harsh manner. I will try to spare as much fatigue and trouble to others as will be consistent with any higher duty. I will study the peculiarities of those with whom I live, and endeavour to conform myself as much as possible to their tastes," &c. Whoever we are, we must learn to exercise this true love at the feet of our Lord in obedience to his word.—Journal Religieux.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN SCOTLAND.

STEPS have recently been taken in Edinburgh to reorganise the Scottish Evangelistic Association, by which so much good work was done in Scotland in bygone years. For some time past its efforts had practically ceased, and in the latter part of 1885 its hon. secretary, Captain Mackenzie, entered into his rest. It was felt that, notwithstanding the welcome fact that there are now other agencies at work in the field of Scottish evangelisation, there is still great need for such a society, and the proposal to resuscitate it met with a very warm response from its former supporters, as well as from other Christian friends interested in evangelistic work.

The Association is strictly undenominational in its constitution and aims, while at the same time it seeks to carry on its operations in cordial co-operation with the various Christian Churches in the land. Its agents are instructed to make this feature clearly known when beginning their work in any place. The Association aims, moreover, at carrying the Gospel message to the villages and smaller towns as wall as to the larger centres of population. In this way it hopes to reach many who at present are in great part outside the sphere of special evangelistic effort. It is believed that much precious fruit might be gathered in rural districts by an evangelist, wise in the winning of the souls, and that through the holding of special meetings in such localities many Christians who have not yet engaged in aggressive work may be led to make a beginning.

The Committee of Management is composed of gentlemen well known in Edinburgh and throughout Scotland for their active interest in evangelistic work, and readers of The Christian in many places outside of Scotland will be interested to know that Dr. Moxey has consented to act as Superintendent of the Association. Communications relating to its affairs should be addressed to him at 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. At one time the Association employed fourteen evangelists, and it is hoped there is in store for it in the future a sphere of usefulness exceeding that of any period of its past history. Earnest prayer is asked for the guidance of all who are connected with the Association, and for a rich and increasing blessing on its labours.

BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

"THIS is what I have been in search of all my life," said a man brought by a friend lately to the Mission. It was well that he found the Saviour he had been in search of, as it was his last opportunity of hearing the "good news," for he lost his life shortly after. "God has opened my eyes to see the lies and errors apart from his truth, and He has given me his Holy Word which is my treasure, so I can now read the Gospel and in prayer find comfort." So spake another. Many such cases might be mentioned. The interest of the people in the general work of the Mission, and specially of the medical department, increases every day. There is an average daily attendance of 190 patients at the dispensary to whom the Gospel is made known while they are being served with medicine, and their ailments seen to, and no less than 2300 copies of the Scriptures were sold to the patients during the past year.

A great loss has been sustained by the Mission by the death of Mr. J. H. Fordham, the treasurer, and funds are greatly needed. I have no doubt some of our friends will gladly help Miss De Broen, whose zeal in the Master's service is so untiring. Her address is 3, Rue Clavel, Paris.

R. P.

THE LATE JOHN B. GOUGH.

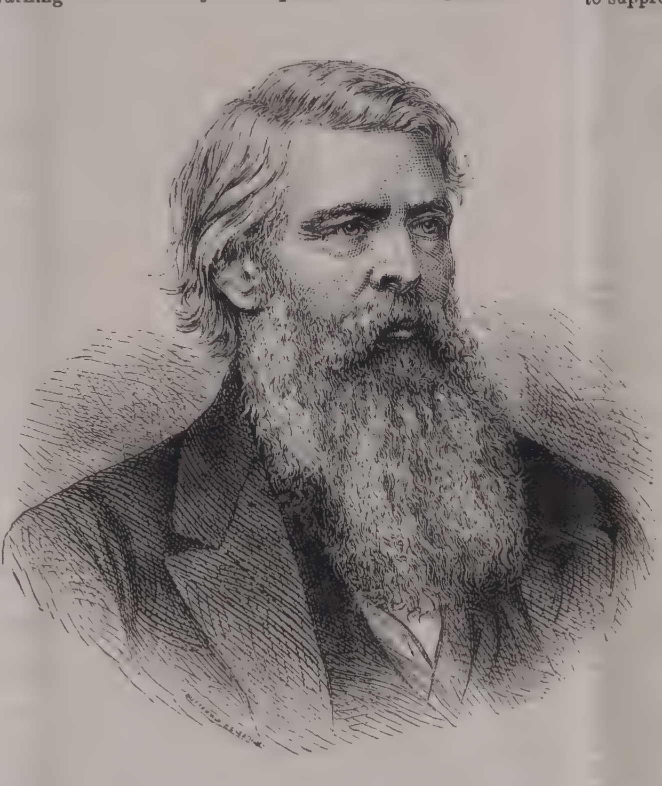
A CABLE message a week ago brought the sorrowful intelligence that Mr. John B. Gough is dead. But, as probably he himself would have elected, he died in harness. While delivering a lecture in Philadelphia there came upon him a paralytic seizure, which arrested him in his work, and silenced his eloquent tongue for ever. It speaks well for Teetotalism, on its physical side, that this man, notwithstanding the excesses of his early life, was enabled for nearly six and forty years to devote himself with unflagging zeal and untiring energy to the service of the cause which he so loved. His life extended to some eighteen months short of the "threescore years and ten." Many have thought and spoken of our departed friend as an American; but in reality he belonged to two continents; and, although chiefly resident in America, nearly twenty years of his life (including in the reckoning the periods of his visits) were spent in England. The first line of his Autobiography* runs thus: "I was born on the 22nd of August, 1817, in the county of Kent, England."

The history of Mr. Gough is at once a warning and an encouragement. It is a warning inasmuch as it shows how, in spite of good abilities and fair opportunities, habits of intemperance will drag a man down, and bring him to the verge of perdition: it is an encouragement as showing that even "out of the depths" a man can be raised up and restored, and become, moreover, a blessing to his generation. As long as the "Autobiography of John B. Gough" exists in the English language—or, for the matter of that, in any other language—so long will there be an authentic history which will tell to the weak, the despairing, and the sinning, how God brought out of the darkness and the horrible pit and the miry clay one who had fainted and struggled, and failed and fallen—even as they have done, and are doing.

On the evening of the last Sunday of October, 1842, a man of five-and-twenty years of age, but looking prematurely old, insufficiently clad, and shivering in the biting wind, was staggering along, objectless and hopeless, through the streets of Worcester, Massachusetts, when a timid little man touched him on the shoulder, and after a word of introduction, begged him to sign the pledge. The well-meant request appeared a hopeless one: the man who made it was without the personal authority which would have given weight to his suggestion; and the one addressed seemed little likely to be moved by such an appeal from such an individual. But God's blessing rested upon the effort of the humble worker; God's power was given to the moody and despairing man to whom the invitation came. The next night, as Gough himself tells us: "In my palsied hand I, with difficulty, grasped the pen; and, in characters almost as crooked as those of old Stephen Hopkins in the 'Declaration of Independence,' I signed the Total Abstinence pledge." The succeeding pages of his Autobiography, in which Mr. Gough speaks of the terrible inward struggles he underwent to hold firm to his resolve—of the gnawing, ravening pangs of thirst, which consumed him; of the yearnings for some liquid stimulus to refresh his parched tongue—are equal to, yes, and are even more thrilling than, the records of the life-and-death struggle with over-mastering appetite given in De Quincey's "Confessions of an English Opium Eater." Where Gough succeeded no human being need despair.

No wonder that—as in the case of De Quincey, when struggling against his opium-thrall—there were some instances of failure in Gough's first wrestlings with the drink fiend. These failures—there were two—are honestly confessed in the "Autobiography." But there remains the grand fact that for more than forty years Gough lived an emancipated man, and was busily occupied in testifying against the evils of intemperance—against the vice of drinking.

And what a testimony he bore! Both in America and in England, for hard upon half a century, men hung upon his lips, and drank in his marvellous utterances. With a wealth of words and a copiousness of vocabulary which took people by surprise, he poured forth a flood of impassioned oratory which carried his audiences along with him. The Daily News, of last Thursday, somewhat misstates the case, in saying, "his style of oratory was not attractive to the educated classes." Against that judgment may be put the opinion of the late Lord Chief Baron, Sir Fitzroy Kelly—himself no mean judge of oratory—who, after having occupied the chair at a lecture by Mr. Gough, at Wisbeach, said they had that night listened to "such eloquence as had rarely been equalled—never surpassed."



To use an American figure of speech, Gough "wrote his record" upon the generation in which he lived. By his winged and living words hundreds, yea, thousands, in Britain, in the States, and in Canada, were aroused to a sense of their manhood, and strengthened to shake off the shackles which bound them; whilst in scores of English-speaking homes comfort and peace and blessing reign as the result of the work of John B Gough. And many of the prominent workers in the Temperance cause to-day date their first impressions and impulses to the time when they were awakened to a sense of their responsibility by the stirring words of our friend, at whose sudden departure from this earthly sphere a whole world mourns. To his sorely bereaved wife and nieces, who ministered so untiringly to his comfort and happiness in his declining years, we tender our deepest and most heartfelt sympathy.

YORK.—A three weeks' mission is being conducted by Mr. Frederick Monk, in the parish of All Saints, in this city. A number of young men from the York Y.M.C A are rendering valuable help, and the meetings are well attended.

POVERTY AND DRINK.

THE Social-Democratic Federation put forth a manifesto, and convened a meeting of employed and unemployed in Hyde Park for Sunday last. In this manifesto, there is an omission as to one of the most fruitful causes of destitution, to which I would beg leave to call the attention of these social reformers. Let anyone open a map of London showing the public-houses in the metropolis, exclusive of licensed hotels and grocer's shops, and he will see one of the most appalling pictures he ever looked upon. The map dotted with red spots presents an appearance which can best be compared to the face of a person suffering from measles; and each red spot is a public-house supported, and often doing a roaring trade, out of the pockets of the very class who are the warmest adherents and followers of the Social-Democrats.

Far be it from me for a moment to underrate the sufferings of those who are really willing to work but cannot procure work. But these are not the followers of the Social-Democrats; on the contrary, they have emphatically repudiated all connection with them.

Let Messrs. Hyndman & Co. go to the root of the matter. Let them say the public-houses are the ruin of our men, and the licensed grocers the ruin of our women. Let us band ourselves together to suppress this perpetual drain on the pockets, the energies, the health of the poorer classes, and a blow will be struck at pauperism such as never was struck before; the root of the evil will have been reached, and real destitution and want will have been brought within remediable limits.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Nearly 800 persons have signed the pledge at Lambeth Baths since the opening of the present series of meetings.

It is said that while in New York Archdeacon Farrar induced his host, Mr. Cyrus W. Field, to become a total abstainer.

The Journal of Heredity (Chicago) is a new magazine intended to teach the science of questions relating to the use of strong drink.

In an address at Manchester, Mr. Joseph Thompson, the traveller, lately described the African Coast gin trade as "a blot on Christian civilisation."

There is not a liquor dealer or a saloon keeper in either House of the New Jersey Legislature, although there is one hotel keeper in the Assembly.

A correspondent urges the well-to-do not to give stimulants to the sick poor. She visits in a large parish, and finds the practice a great hindrance to her work.

An influential deputation of ladies and gentlemen lately waited on the Liverpool School Board, to urge systematic Temperance teaching in the schools. They were favourably received.

The police in several quarters have secured the conviction of publicans, for allowing raffles on their premises. The law on the subject is so clear that it only needs the police to do their duty.

Rev. D. W. Barrett, author of "Life and Work Amongst the Navvies," urges the erection of a Temperance shanty wherever the navvies are employed in numbers. They have few resources, and consume enormous quantities of liquor with evil results to the locality.

STAG HUNTING.

SIR,—Mr. William Saunders, M.P., has written to The Reading Mercury, a letter in reference to stag hunting, an extract from which you have transferred to your own columns and commented upon. The extract runs thus:—"As the train passed on the poor beast was dancing . . . with the certainty that in a few minutes, while still alive, its quivering flesh would be torn from its graceful limbs by the trained and remorseless enemies of its kind."

Mr. Saunders, no doubt, describes accurately what he saw, but in proceeding to describe what he did not see, he writes mischievous nonsense. Stags are kept for the purpose of giving horsemen galloping exercise, not to be torn to pieces by hounds; they often give that exercise for many seasons, never receiving a scratch from hounds, and die at a good old age in their paddocks.

Yours faithfully, Henry Noel.

THE LATE JOHN B. GOUGH.

"There are tens of thousands of persons in this country to whom the news of the sudden death of Mr. J. B. GOUGH will bring a sense of public loss. . . . . The Temperance movement owes to his genius a great and lasting impulse. . . . Few men have done more than this Temperance lecturer to leave the world better than they found it."—Vide Leader in "Daily News," February 18.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF JOHN B. GOUGH.

A CHEAP POPULAR EDITION may also be had,
With Portrait.
Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"What need be said of the 'AUTOBIOGRAPHY' itself? It should be read and re read. It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. We are made acquainted with all the leading incidents of Mr. Gough's life—a life crowned with labours which place him among the benefactors 'not of an age, but for all time!' A more perfect knowledge of such a life cannot fail to strengthen the faith of some and to inspire the zeal of others. The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures, which are not easily forgotten. The 'AUTOBIOGRAPHY' is admirably suited for the drawing-room table, or for a gift-book; but it is especially worthy of possession as a momento of Mr. Gough."—Temperance Record.

"It is the most touching, thrilling narrative we ever read. Talk of the sensational in tales, novels, and romances—none of them is as stirring, is filled with incidents of such extraordinary interest, as this life story. We will venture to say that the presentation to either a young man or a young woman of such a handsome and useful book as this, will effect more good—will cause to live more indelibly in the memory the lessons which are taught by loose and intemperate habits—than any number of angry reproofs and warnings."
Bolton Guardian.

"As a life-story we have seldom seen a more riveting book. It is characterized by an absence of self-assertion, and a real desire to present his life as it was—for the warning and encouragement of others."
Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

"This is one of the most interesting and instructive biographies ever written. The shilling edition is sure of a great circulation."—Christian Week.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

LETTER to the Rev. ROBERT DAWSON,

SECRETARY OF THE LONDON CITY MISSION,

On the dismissal, by the Committee of the Mission, of Mr. SAMUEL SHIP, one of its Missionaries, apparently as the result of his having recently adopted higher views than he formerly held of the extent of deliverance from sin offered to us in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

By JAMES PILLANS WILSON,
Local Superintendent in the Mission.

COPIES of the little book of 40 pages, of which the above is the title, may be obtained by writing to J. P. Wilson, 88, North-side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W., sending 4d. for price and postage, or without money.

"The highest-toned piece of controversial writing that it was ever our lot to read. The Christian courtesy and spirit apparent throughout are a beautiful illustration of the doctrine defended.—Divine Life.

"FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on his name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30)."

The little book of 128 pages, of which the above is the title, is a sequel to the "Letter to Mr. Dawson." Copies may be obtained by writing, as above, sending 8d. for each copy, or without money.

"These pages contain much plain truth, strongly set forth, and we do not see how many of the arguments from Holy Writ can be gainsaid. . . . . The spirit of earnest conviction runs through every page, and it is impossible to read them without being confirmed in the view that Scriptural entire holiness is a Bible doctrine."—King's Highway.

"FURTHER SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS,"

Being another little book of 128 pages, of which copies may be obtained as above, sending 8d., or without money.

"The author's aim is to show that at sundry times and in divers manners God has pledged Himself completely to deliver his people from the power of sin. The arguments consist chiefly of Scripture exposition: hence a solidity and strength that will to many be very helpful. Illustrative facts and quotations are added, and altogether the result is a very valuable setting forth of the theory and practice of holiness."—Divine Life, on both the "First" and "Further Sheets."

Extracts from Letters on the "First Sheets."

"I rejoice greatly in it. It is well calculated to stimulate an earnest desire in the hearts of the Lord's dear people to search the Scriptures more diligently and prayerfully, like the Bereans, 'daily, whether these things were so.'"

"I have read your little book lent me by a friend, and I do heartily desire to thank my God that it was put into my hands. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read. There is so little of man in it, and so much of God."

"Oh, how I bless God whenever I read anything which tells out his full salvation clearly!"

"It seems to me just the kind of book to put a solid Scriptural foundation under the faith of those who are conscious of a real and godly change of heart and of an eager desire to be only the Lord's."

"I like it because it is Scriptural."

"Thank you so much for your little book. It has helped me to realise more fully 'the glorious Gospel of Christ.'"

"I like it exceedingly, and have been much profited by it. The Lord will, I believe, make this 'your work of faith and labour of love' a great blessing. It will tend to cause Christ's Bride to make herself ready for her Lord."

"I have read the 'Proofs,' and they have opened my eyes greatly to what may be obtained by faith and prayer. I have no doubt they will prove a great blessing to many, and I will circulate them as much as I can."

"I am so grateful for your little book. It is so helpful. I pray and trust that the Lord will bless it abundantly to his glory."

"I have read it carefully, and can find nothing of man in it, but all in it to be the revealed power of God. I have received great encouragement and strength from the reading of it. It is a golden prize for all believers who receive it."

"Some little time back I saw advertised your book, 'First Sheets of Scriptural Proofs.' I wrote to you for one, and I do thank my God for ever being led to have in my possession such a book. I must tell you, dear brother, that since having your book I have realised—praise God!—those grand promises Deut. xxx. 6 and Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27. I do thank my God for a heart to believe, and I have proved his willingness to give and his power to keep. Praise his dear name!"

"I am greatly enjoying it—always find comfort as I open upon any page. How truly God helped you in writing it. I am sure it must accomplish good wherever it is read."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

Superintendents—The BROTHERS T. & J. YOUNG.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

Owing to the great distress now surrounding the above Mission, the Superintendents are compelled to appeal for help in their efforts to alleviate it. We have given this winter, Provisions, Meat, Teas, Clothing, &c., to a large number of the deserving poor; we have also established a Soup kitchen, which supplies Soup and Bread to a large number of poor people, twice a week; and on Tuesday last we gave a Tea to 600 poor children. Donations will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan; Provisions, Clothing, or Money will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Brothers Young, 16, Queen-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.; or donations may be sent to the Editor of The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

IN order to make room for the very interesting and timely address by Mr. George Holland on the prevalent destitution in London, we have been obliged to omit many articles, and among them the third instalment of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's recent utterances at Exeter Hall. We shall resume the publication of these after having got out of hand our report of the Second Advent Conference at Mildmay, which takes place next week.

One of the most attractive items in the programme of this Advent Conference is likely to be the Explanations, each afternoon, of the large model of Solomon's Temple, by Mr. Thomas Newberry.

Parents in the provinces whose sons reside in London have reason to follow them with very prayerful solicitude. Subjects calculated to violate all sentiments of taste and morality are being tolerated on the stage. A late attempt has been made to introduce a most detestable French play. It has happily failed; but such attempts deserve the severest reprobation. The tendency of the modern stage, both here and in America, is to cover grossness with fascination, to pander to the vile tastes of the corrupt, and to sound a death-knell to the purity with which youths leave their country homes.

"The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8). How pleasant it is to turn from the writings of the sceptics, big and little, who one and all seem carefully to avoid touching upon that aspect of Christ in which he appears as the Sinbearer, to a beautiful reference by our greatest living prose writer to the purposes of God in Christ. The passage, which is taken from "Modern Painters," separated from its beautiful context, reads thus:—

> As we read the mighty sentence "Let the dry land appear," we should try to follow the finger of God as it engraved upon the stone tables of the earth the letters and law of its everlasting form, as gulf by gulf the channels of the deep were ploughed, and cape by cape the lines were traced with Divine foreknowledge of the shores that were to limit the nations, and chain by chain the mountain walls were lengthened forth, and their foundations fastened for ever; and the compass was set upon the face of the depth, and the fields and the highest part of the dust of the world were made; and the right hand of Christ first strewed the snow on Lebanon, and smoothed the slopes of Calvary.

In looking over some printed sermons, recently preached, it has become very obvious that discourses now proceed from the reputedly orthodox pulpit which have the mark of two diametrically opposite schools. There are sermons that give no hint that the spirit of Christianity can be discerned by the spiritual man only. The doctrine of the New Birth, notwithstanding its profound import and relations, is almost habitually ignored. Discourses are made interesting by illustration, and the unfolding of moral duties, but are utterly destitute of truths calculated to bring the hearers into humbling, and life-giving communication with the Spirit of God.

On the other hand, there are preachers who appear to be throwing off the emasculating fetters of modern pulpit fashions. They perceive that amusements have become so ensnaring, and commercial maxims so doubtful, that spiritual ruin faces even their respectable seatholders, unless they are touched by the higher influences and emotions which "the spirit of life in Christ" imparts. There is some hope that such preachers will restore the power of the pulpit, and the well-nigh lost ideal of the true Christian life.

The difference between modern funeral sermons for ministers of religion and those preached in the last generation are mournfully suggestive. In earnest days of evangelical fervour, the best memorial of ministers was their work in the Lord—the souls sanctified, the saving efforts originated, the men won unto righteousness. Now we read discourses concerning deceased ministers in which the matters eulogised are their learned tastes, their intellectual gifts, their love of art and literary acquirements. It will be a dangerous time when a minister of religion is regarded chiefly as a man of letters, and not as one watching for souls.

"Thy will be done." Charles Kingsley once said that he never prayed until he learned to pray in those words, all possible prayer being contained in them. How many of us use them morning after morning, and night after night, without ever thinking what would be the result to ourselves if God took us at our word, and answered us by compliance. The unworthy object we have struggled for, and obtained, would be taken away; the mean and ignoble act performed for reasons of policy; the selfish sin for which we sold our Saviour; the wrong we did those over whom we have had power given us; the harm worked even unwittingly, or which flowed from our want of care to make profession and practice accord: all these would be cancelled, and instead of what seems to be success in men's eyes, but which may be miserable and criminal failure in God's sight, there would, perhaps, be the blame of men, the loss of money, the loneliness which comes to those who, deserting worldliness, follow Christ in the way. Which of us, thinking of possible loss and mortification, probable trial and trouble, to ourselves by boldly following closely after righteousness, instead of being men servers, would then kneel down and calmly say, "Thy will be done"? And yet, which of us would, after a moment's thought, dare to say the words in any other spirit?

In times of danger, and on the eve of great events, the hearts of faithful men have often been moved to send forth a trumpet-cry of appeal to the Church of God. IS THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD STRAITENED? by Rev. W. CROSBIE, of Brighton (Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d.), is a call to prayer of remarkable timeliness. Soul-stirring, intense, Scriptural, humbling, and animating, it is one of the most opportune books of the period. Such a book may well be in the hands of all pastors, and should be introduced to theological colleges. Special meetings of churches might be called to hear its eloquent words of fervour. Men of wealth could not do better than assist its immediate circulation. There may be an occasional difference as to aspects of truth presented; there will be none among evangelical believers that the true glory of this dispensation is the Holy Ghost, that there are laws which govern the bestowment of his blessings, and that there are imperative reasons just now which should engage all Christians in a united and extraordinary cry for his saving grace.

The third annual Convention for the study of prophetic Scripture, at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, has been fixed for June 15 to 17 next, the week preceding the annual Mildmay Conference. The subjects suggested for consideration are the following:—

1st day.—The Personal Pre-millennial Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Manifestation of a Personal Anti-Christ. Has all Prophecy a Retrospective and Historical Fulfilment as well as a Future one?

2nd day.—The Character of the "Great Tribulation:" will all the Lord's people who are on earth at the time pass through it? The Signs of our Times compared with the Signs foretold of the Last Days. What is the connection between the city called Babylon and the Beast, or Anti-Christ? Where will Babylon be situated?

3rd day.—Israel's prospects and place in the Millennium. Is the Holy City which John connects with a New Heaven and a New Earth (Rev. xxi.) to be connected with the World during the Millennial period? What Nations will Satan deceive after the Millennium?

A remarkable conviction has seized the mind of a young Swedish engineer. The Birmingham Daily Post states that he has been exploring in Palestine the site of the Temple and the surrounding locality, and has come to the opinion that the ark of the first Temple is buried in the valley of Hinnom. It does not appear on what grounds he has come to this conclusion. There are, doubtless, proofs yet to be revealed, which will connect the early ages of Scripture with our own, and will come as a new voice from God to our times.

We observe that a new departure is to be made by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund. Inquiries are to be made with regard to the customs, the industries, the arts, and manners of the people of Palestine and Syria. We may remind ourselves of the cry of triumph which would have arisen from the enemies of the Faith, had the results of topographical inquiry contradicted the Old Testament. Investigations have hitherto gone in an entirely confirmatory direction, and they will do this increasingly in the new and interesting researches now to be undertaken.

In the recently published report of the Mansion House Committee on the permanent distress in London, it is stated that "female labour is wretchedly paid." Unfortunately, it did not need a large committee to discover that fact, for, as we have frequently urged in these columns, the result has for long been only too evident in our streets and our hospitals. All those who have any practical experience of the terrible condition of our female workers have long since banished the word "paid" from his or her vocabulary. "There are hundreds of women who work for three-farthings an hour, and find their own needles and cotton," making shirts at three-farthings each, and lawn-tennis aprons "elaborately frilled," at 5½d. a dozen, less the sweaters' and the middlemen's profits. This also, unfortunately, is not a new discovery, for we have commented upon it and its baneful effects until we are sick at heart. Still, we rejoice whenever we see greater publicity given to the shameful fact.

Here, in our very midst, whilst we can find time in Parliament and out of it to waste in discussions upon theories of the representation of minorities, women and girls are dying almost like flies, and though their death is due to preventible hunger and compulsory vice, our legislators in Parliament and would-be reformers do not grapple with a question which so vitally affects our national life. If these starving and dying shirt-makers were in Bulgaria instead of in London, probably there would be little difficulty in taking some practical steps to minister relief, but they have the misfortune to be living and dying within a gunshot of Westminster, and many of our legislators appear to think the principles of "Political Economy" far more inspired than the precepts of Jesus Christ.

We have upon several occasions stated that the position taken by the Roman Catholic priests with regard to the agitation in Ireland will have a very grave and injurious effect upon the Romish Church in that country. Already in Ireland, as in England, the result it was easy to predict is beginning to be visible. When educated Roman Catholics see their Church not only condoning, but absolutely suggesting courses of conduct against which the moral instinct of even a child would revolt, or, what is still more surprising, when they see a Church which claims to be infallible to-day condemning, and to-morrow approving, the same action, they must indeed have fully learned the doctrine of passive obedience, if they refrain from questioning, not only the singular position of that Church, but their own attitude with regard to it.

Not only have Roman Catholics been engaged in bitter public controversy with the Archbishop of Dublin upon political questions, under which their rights as citizens conflict with their duties as Romanists, but the leading organ of the Romanists in Ireland, the Dublin Freeman's Journal, is now fighting bitterly with The Tablet, and endeavouring, to use the words of one of its editorials, "to tear from this hypocrite the mask of religion."

When we read the remarkable utterances of Archbishop Walsh at Thurles and elsewhere with their references to what the American Fenians generically term the "resources of civilisation," and when he and other Roman Catholic bishops in Ireland seem to find in the Sabbath the fittest day for political speeches, it cannot be wondered at that The Tablet, and the old-fashioned Catholics represented by that journal should be asking whether it is they or their brethren in the sister island who have slipped outside the pale of the Church.

One of our Democratic journals has discovered that the public-house system and the publican are simply instruments in the hands of the governing classes to prevent men "from seeing or seeking those rights and powers to which they are justly entitled." This would be amusing if we could forget what sorrow, sin, and suffering result from the drink traffic; but the fact is the working classes can, if they will, free themselves from the burden of over a hundred millions annually, the taxation which, by their drinking habits, they inflict upon themselves.

All the frequenters of Mr. Moody's meetings will recollect his dramatic illustration of pouring water into a tumbler to get the air out. It was putting in a materialised form the famous saying of Dr. Chalmers about "the expulsive power of a new affection." It seems to us that in dealing with the prevalent social evils of the day we have too much overlooked this principle. We agitate, and rightly, for greater restrictions, or for the complete suppression of the promiscuous sale of strong drink; but if we were to secure the closing of all the public-houses, what have we to put in their stead?

The Free Library movement is a step in the right direction, and it is one that might be indefinitely extended; especially if there can be amalgamated with it some method for giving honest refreshment and harmless recreation for the people. A most interesting work on the subject of FREE PUBLIC LIBRARIES has just been compiled by Mr. THOMAS GREENWOOD (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.). It gives copious and reliable details as to the necessary steps towards forming such libraries, and may be commended to the attention of all local reformers.

Not for two hundred years have the Houses of Convocation of Canterbury entered on such a comprehensive scheme of Church Reform as that which was last week inaugurated. The scheme embraces the subjects of patronage, security against the appointment of improper incumbents, power to remove incompetent or negligent clergy, precautions against diversion of incomes, reform in relation to endowments, further concession to Convocation of internal regulation of the Church, and the assignment to the laity of a more clearly defined share in ecclesiastical administration.

The decision to admit the cry for Reform is an eminently wise one. About Disestablishment there are differences of opinion, but in reference to reform moderate men of all parties will wish for success. To adapt the Episcopal Church to the needs of this age may prove the most fruitful of undertakings that recent years have known.

Regard for public morality constrains us to speak plainly about the Crawford-Dilke divorce case recently decided. Mrs. Crawford, a young wife, confessed to shameful sin, and at the same time named Sir Charles Dilke as her tempter. Her confession was so detailed and consistent that the Judge who tried the case (without a jury) said he felt bound to respect it. Corroboration, however, was not tendered, and the co-respondent, on the plea that no legal evidence was before the Court, made no statement in defence. Then came the verdict: the woman guilty, but the man, whom she asserted to have led her astray, has nothing against him! Her confession stands good against herself; why should it not have equal force against him? According to his accuser, his conduct was far guiltier and more shameful than hers. Why, we ask in the name of simple justice, condemn the lesser criminal and acquit the greater? Is it because the greater happens to be an able man and a prominent politician? Has it come to this, that English law condemns the weak, but supports the mighty in their wickedness?

We cannot, in the absence of legal proof, absolutely affirm that Sir Charles Dilke is guilty of the charge made against him. But he is under terrible suspicion. This arises as much from his own conduct as from that of his accuser. In August last he promised the Chelsea electors that in due time he would give "a detailed reply" to the charge. Why, if innocent, has he broken this promise? If the charge be untrue, should he not be in haste to deny and confute it? Meanwhile, we hope good men of every political opinion will insist that he shall retire from public life until he clears his character from the stigma that now rests upon it.

We hope, too, that Mr. Justice Butt, the presiding Judge in this case, will be made, by the force of public opinion, to feel the extreme gravity of the offence he has committed in thus dealing out unequal justice. While in one respect there is ground for humiliation at such a miscarriage of justice, a hopeful feature of the case is the loud outcry raised, with some deplorable exceptions, by the London and provincial Press, at such a scandalous decision.

MR. JOSEPH COOK'S BOSTON LECTURES.

THE first of the present series, reported fully in the New York Independent, was on "Saving Faith." In a fresh and brilliant way Mr. Cook re-traversed ground with which he has made us familiar; but, as the lecturer does not favour speculation in theology, that is not a matter of surprise. Four of his eighteen syllogistic propositions will indicate the bed rock on which his argument was based: "(6) Salvation for man is permanent and perfect deliverance from both the love of sin and the guilt of it. (7) Perdition is permanent subjection to the guilt and love of sin and their consequences. (8) It is clear that when we are delivered from the love of sin we are not thereby delivered from the guilt of it. (9) Deliverance from the guilt of sin we cannot demand in justice; if it is attained at all it must come from grace." Saving faith Mr. Cook designated as "Confidence in God" and all that it implies.

The prelude was on "Helps and Hindrances to Revivals." The supreme need of the day, said the lecturer, is the Christianisation of Christendom. He maintained that those churches which hold unevangelical views have been powerless in propagating spiritual force. "Nowhere are the systems of speculation producing revivals." He paid a warm tribute to the recent mission in America of Mr. Aitken, "whose system of thought and effort was in its details very nearly parallel to that of our great evangelist, Mr. Moody, whom may God bless in his roving commission from side to side of the world."

In the interlude Mr. Cook referred to the question of Home Rule in Ireland, which he favours on certain conditions. He thinks that probably the British Empire will become a Federation on a plan resembling that of the American Constitution. "Let the sun never set on the prayers that humanity offers for the good of the Empire on which the sun never sets."

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' SERVICE.

AT a very interesting gathering at Burlington Hall, Saville-row, last Friday evening, Mr. J. PEARCE, Secretary of the West-end Y.M.C.A., was presented with a gold watch, a purse of money, and a copy of the Revised Version of the Bible, as a token of affectionate esteem, on the completion of a quarter of a century of service among young men. As a previous Secretary of the branch, Mr. H. F. Bowker fitly presided. Mr. Howard Williams read letters from many absent friends, expressing much appreciation of Mr. Pearce's faithful, earnest labours. In cordially responding to the presentation, Mr. Pearce said that, by the generous help of friends of the work, the debt of £500 on the branch had been cleared off; he therefore felt free to accept of the kind testimonial, though he had always been assured of their confidence and love.

A good part of the evening was taken up with short addresses from gentlemen who in former days had received spiritual benefit from the work under Mr. Pearce.

CORRECTION.—In a paragraph last week announcing the departure of two lady missionaries for China, the name of Miss Tatchford was mentioned; it should have been Miss Tapscott.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

MY DEAR SIR,—You will rejoice to hear that the work in these Southern States is deeply interesting and encouraging. In the cities visited so far every available building has been taxed to its utmost capacity, and yet many have found no room. Frequently I have preached four and five times a day in order to meet the desire of the public to hear the Gospel. By classifying the people and holding special services for men and for women, &c., we are able to reach large numbers in each community. At the University of Virginia I preached on several occasions to the students, when many confessed a desire to accept the Gospel of Christ.

My wife, who has been with me addressing in each place large assemblies of ladies, besides mixed audiences, is about to return to our northern home at Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., while I start for Galveston, Texas, and other far southern points to follow up the labours of friends Moody and Sankey. My brother Thomas is also full of appointments in these regions, so that we are expecting the South to share largely in revival blessing.—Yours in best bonds, George C. Needham.

WHITE AND BLACK.

A correspondent of the New York Independent, in reporting the successful series of meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Nashville, Tennessee, writes:—

"There are in Nashville and its suburbs between fifteen and twenty thousand coloured people. They have about twenty churches. All these were excluded from this shower of grace. Here the white Christians have no dealings ecclesiastical with the black ones. Between them a great gulf is fixed, a chasm so wide that as yet not even the Gospel of the all-loving Christ has been able to span it. While the white Christians have been melting in meetings full of God's love, the black people outside have been growing hard under a sense of insult. You may show them a score of good reasons why things are as they are, you may argue them into silence, but the feeling is there yet. At a meeting held among them the course pursued was called "unchristian and unkind." They are sought by politicians for their votes in the meetings where all gather together. Are white Christians less anxious to save their souls? One coloured man asked, Is there to be a separate place for coloured people in heaven? Are the carpets of the First Presbyterian Church too fine for black sinners to tread on? Can men love God, whom they have not seen, and hate their black brethren, whom they have seen? Could God have anything to do with such a meeting?

"Cannot friends be raised and arrangements made so that we can have a free Gospel as far at least as Northern evangelists are concerned? The Y.M.C.A., of the South, does nothing for the coloured young man. He is excluded from its rooms, its conventions, and all its affairs. He looks on it with distrust, if not hatred. The old class of coloured people care nothing for these things. Shall we teach the new, which is growing, to hate the white people and become, perchance, leaders in a future war of races? May God forbid."

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN MEMPHIS.

A telegram from a Memphis correspondent to the New York Independent says:—

"The three days' meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in Memphis, have been greatly blessed and most satisfactory, both to the evangelists and to all the pastors of the city. The attendance was very large, many of the meetings overflowing to an adjoining church. The services were chiefly for Christians; but successful efforts were made to secure the attendance of others, with good results, and there are a number of conversions. A meeting was given to the students of Lemoyne Institute, coloured, where a precious work was already in progress; also a general meeting given to coloured people on Sunday; and there was a great crowd, with an overflow. Mr. Moody is very hopeful for his Southern trip. He will carry the South."

REV. SAM JONES IN CINCINNATI.

A telegram to our New York contemporary says:—"The 'Sam Jones' revival meetings here are phenomenal in good results, and are exciting the wonder of the community. Mr. Jones and his co-worker, Sam Small, an ex-journalist of superb talents and finished oratorical powers, have instrumentally effected hundreds of conversions.

"The interest in the meetings is intensified daily. No hall in the city is large enough to hold their audiences. Mr. Jones intended to conclude his labours on Sunday, February 7, but the vast audience, by a spontaneous uprising, requested him to remain another week. This voiced the sentiment of the community. The city is being stirred from the levee to the hill tops. Five thousand men at the 3 p.m. services on Sunday last, all rose in mass, promising a new life. There were 8000 in Music-hall again Sunday night, and more than 5000 turned away. 500 penitents stood up asking for prayers."

Mr. PAYSON HAMMOND at FINSBURY.

THE commencement of Mr. Hammond's mission here was marked by the establishment of a Noonday Prayer-meeting, in the previous week, to ask for blessing upon his work. The first meetings were real times of refreshing, and we trust the meeting (now held every day) will prove a spiritual power in the neighbourhood. A hearty invitation is given to all Christians who can find time to attend it.

Mr. Hammond's services commenced on Saturday evening, Feb. 7, and extended to Friday, the 19th. Great power and blessing have marked the meetings. One of our well-known, hard-working clergymen in an adjoining parish, expresses his surprise at the effects he has seen, and how far-reaching the real mission work has been. Experienced Christian workers from different parts have assisted, and their testimony to the work of grace has been deeply interesting. It was certainly a thrilling time, even for many of us who are old campaigners in such blessed work, to see so many babes in Christ with beaming faces, testifying to the power of Christ to save. A volume would hardly suffice to tell of all the cases dealt with by the numerous workers.

We are often met by the remark, half-incredulous, half-scornful, Will the young converts stand? Thank God, experience has shown us that large numbers stand the test of time. It was very refreshing to hear the very decided testimony of both Mr. Hammond and Mr. Spiers to the numbers they both meet with now, of young men and women, bright and happy Christians, who tell them of conversion through their instrumentality when quite children. Who can dare to doubt that the same Holy Spirit, who can break and recreate the heart of a hoary-headed sinner, can put a new heart in a gentle child, and keep it from falling. It is time that ministers, parents, and Sunday-school teachers should awaken to a sense of their responsibility. We are persuaded by blessed experience that we cannot bring a child too soon to a decision for Christ, and that this ought to be the aim of every Christian parent. H. Holme.

THE BUTCHERS' FESTIVAL, which has been an occasion of such deep interest for many years past, will be held on Wednesday, March 3, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington. We are glad to know, on the authority of Mr. Henry Varley (the originator of the movement), that the results of past festivals, as seen in the improved moral condition of the men in the Meat Market, have been most encouraging. Mr. Spurgeon is expected to speak at the forthcoming assembly.

SEVENTEEN YEARS' RETROSPECT.

THE last workers' meeting at the Home of Industry, Spitalfields, was the seventeenth anniversary of the beginning of the mission by Miss Macpherson. The first hour was devoted to a rehearsal of the goodness of the Lord in connection with the different branches of the work. Mr. R. Scott, as one of Miss Macpherson's Council, referred to the emigration department, which has been such an unspeakable boon to thousands of rescued boys and girls. Mr. Dobbin, another member of the Council, told something of the Gospel work in Bird Fair. Mr. Maude referred to the helpful nature of the monthly workers' meetings in bringing before Christians the claims of the mission fields at home and abroad, and stirring the hearts of workers to lay themselves on the altar of service. Mr. Archibald (who presided) dwelt on the many branches of home mission work carried on, with which our readers are familiar. Each of these worthy "counsellors" at the close of their remarks offered prayer, and gave thanks to God for the abundant blessing vouchsafed.

The second hour was taken up with interesting addresses on mission work in China, by Mrs. Hudson Taylor, and two of the Inland Mission workers at home on furlough. In the final prayer by Miss Macpherson she made touching mention of the goodness of God in the fellowship she had in the early days of the mission from Miss Clara M. Lowe, who is still spared to sympathise with it, and help as far as failing strength and years will permit.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For deliverance from the power of a besetting sin, through trusting entirely in Jesus.

PRAYER.—That an under-graduate who is very sceptical about Divine truth, may be brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus.——For a mission district in Dundee; that a great revival may take place. Praise God for present signs.——For blessing on meetings in Cockermouth on Sundays during March, by Mr. J. N. Carr and Mr. W. H. Wilson.——For blessing on Gospel services by Mr. James Fielding and Mr. Opie Rodway, for children and young people, at Wesleyan Chapel, Stroud.——For much blessing on services for young people at Derby.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—March 1, Num. ix. 1—14; March 2, ix. 15—23; March 3, x. 29—36; March 4, xi. 1—15; March 5, xi. 16—33; March 6, xii. 1—16.

Christmas Cards and Shells.—Miss Edith Binsteed, Blackheath, S.E., thanks the many kind friends who have sent cards to her; they have been distributed among Medical Missions and poor children in Jerusalem. She appeals for a further supply, and adds: "small common shells found on the seashore are specially valued by many poor children, who have never seen the sea. These I distribute in small ornamental boxes."

Standen Mission Chapel.—Mr. Richard Weaver, nephew of the well-known evangelist, gave an address to a working-class audience at Standen Mission Chapel, Wandsworth, on Monday week. The meeting was preceded by a meat tea, given by the friends of the place, and many faces were bright and happy for once who know little of life's joys, more especially at this season of the year. The small hall, which answers all the purposes of this Mission, was inconveniently full, proving the need of a larger place.

Our Soldiers Abroad.—Sir,—I wish to inform those kind friends who are good enough to send me illustrated periodicals and tracts for distribution that the 1st Battalion Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers is now at Echowé, Zululand. The regiment has few Protestants in it now—not more than seventy in this place, but I trust that many of these will become true followers of Christ by God's blessing on our meetings. Temperance work will also be continued, for which any Gospel Temperance literature will be thankfully received.

Eshowé, Zululand, Natal, A. J. Bridges, Schoolmaster, 1st Royal Inniskilling Fus.

Sunderland.—We learn with regret that Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who recently removed from Norwood to the Bethesda Free Church, Sunderland, has been laid aside for several weeks by illness. Although he has now resumed his pulpit duties, he is advised that the climate of the North-east is so far unsuited to his constitution that prolonged residence in it involves risk of permanent weakness. Mr. Gooch has, therefore, felt compelled to intimate to the Church the probability of his early withdrawal from the work he had entered upon among them. Much regret is expressed at the necessity for this step, as the ministry of the past few months has been much blessed.

A DEVOTED MISSIONARY.

THE following statement of work carried on by Mr. Eoll, at Port Said, corroborates all I know of him. He used to come and stay a week at the Home of Industry every spring that he might acquire greater freedom in the seven languages he had mastered and laid at the Master's feet. Any help sent to me for him I will gladly add to several sums already given.

Home of Industry, Annie Macpherson.

Returning from the East, I was delayed at Port Said, where mission work is being carried on by Mr. Eoll. He went to that place a few years ago to labour amongst seamen, as he had done for many years at Bristol. He has, during this whole time, continued working without interruption, without holidays, or any relaxation whatever. Nobody but those who have been placed under similar circumstances can know what that means in such a climate as Port Said. Mr. Eoll visits almost every ship that comes into port, talks and preaches to the sailors, supplying most of them with a Testament. He has the "gift of tongues," speaking seven or eight different languages fluently, and understanding several more. It often happens that he has to preach three or four successive times in different tongues on the same ship, or to visit as many ships during the same morning. This linguistic talent makes him eminently fitted for his sphere, and the more so that he bears in his heart both love for Christ and love for his fellow-men. Poor as he is, and often in need of daily sustenance, he is always ready to share his last bit of bread with the hungry. It only happened a little time ago that he took six sailors, destitute of everything, into his own small dwelling, housed them for days together, supplied them with food from his own scanty resources, and strengthened them with the word of God.

When Mr. Eoll is not engaged in visiting ships, he goes about in the town to seek out the poor and needy, and sailors detained by sickness. There is a dreadful moral misery in Port Said. I was told that no words can describe the demoralisation and vice in which many there are steeped. It seems as if the worst class of men had made it their rendezvous.

Mr. Eoll has a Sunday evening meeting for sailors and soldiers in his own house, and also one in the week, besides another for young men of a better standing. He is generally known in the town, and often resorted to for help in various difficulties. As I was walking with him through the "market-place," he was called in several times by the natives to administer some medicine or some comforting words to the sick; a woman brought out her child, half-blind, and a miserable sight from great uncleanliness, to show it to him, asking his advice.

Mr. Eoll works under particular disadvantages; he has little to "show" to the casual visitor, as is the case with many other missionaries who have schools full of interesting-looking children. You have to go on the high seas in order to learn from the lips of men what Mr. Eoll has done for them; for, of the hundreds and thousands to whom he speaks about the salvation of their souls, only now and then one remains at Port Said; on the other hand, you might hear the tale of many a once-wretched sailor who, after having been saved from the worst of degradation, and having been brought by Mr. Eoll to the Fountain of Life, has become in his turn a missionary amongst his shipmates. When still on board the steamer—not an English one—I asked the captain whether he could not allow one of his sailors to take a letter ashore to Mr. Eoll. The captain, complying with my request, called a sailor, asking him whether he knew Mr. Eoll. "Oh, yes," replied the sailor, "very well; he is a missionary." The sailor and captain were both Roman Catholics, and, when commissioned to take that letter to Mr. Eoll, the sailor at once replied, "I need not go very far for that, for there is Mr. Eoll himself on yonder ship;" in no time he had reached him, and brought him over to our steamer. It was my first meeting with him, and I had no idea then to what degree the Spirit of Christ was dwelling in him.

I feel it my duty to make known what I have seen and heard during a seven or eight days' intercourse with this goldly man and his most devoted wife, she being his only helper in his work at Port Said. I cannot forget the worn-out figure of Mrs. Eoll, who seemed to droop under the weight of work and fatigue of all kinds; and yet never for a moment did her eyes lose their peculiarly bright expression; nor can I forget the look of Mr. Eoll on his return home after a day's toiling in the burning heat, fatigued and parched to the utmost, and perhaps not knowing whence the bread for to-morrow would come for himself and his family. Indeed, the strength of their faith has kept them until now. They have spent, long ago, the little money they possessed and have not withheld anything from God's service. But is it not the duty of all Christians to help such a one as this, so as, at least, to free this hard-working labourer in the Lord's vineyard from these daily anxieties?

I would strongly urge all believers who pass through Port Said to go and see for themselves and to inquire deeper into the matter than most people do who have no idea of the state of affairs, for this good man would never give any explanation of his poverty, unless one inquired into it.

Mr. Eoll's great desire is to have a Sailors' Rest, so as to gather in a greater number of people in the evenings and on Sundays, and to keep them away from the public-houses, where they almost invariably lose everything; but the means have not at present been forthcoming. I feel sure that many a Christian heart will be stirred by learning under what enormous difficulties one of the most devoted servants of the Lord is labouring, and will yearn to help in this work for the glory of God.

A BATCH OF MISSION REPORTS.

HEBREW CHRISTIAN MISSION, NEW YORK.

THIS Mission amongst the 80,000 Jews in New York City, of which the fourth annual report is before us, is progressing in a way to cause much thankfulness: the prospects for doing a good work are better than ever before. There have been several converts, some of whom have had to endure much persecution, but are now preaching Christ to their brethren. The work is carried on by Rev. Jacob Freshman, at 17, St. Mark's-place, New York, in the true spirit of faith, as many striking incidents given in the report testify.

SOLDIERS IN WINCHESTER.

Ten years ago the Soldiers' Home Mission, with head-quarters now at Winchester and branches at several other places, was commenced in a very simple way, by reading the Bible to one poor beggar. Now Gospel meetings are daily being conducted and hundreds are brought under the influence of the preached word every week. Many of these gathered in the Soldiers' Home on the last evening of 1885 expressed their sense of the blessings they had experienced. Anyone wishing to help forward this good work amongst our soldiers should address Miss Perks, "The Soldiers' Home," Hyde-street, Winchester.

CORSICA MISSION.

An open door has been found, and at the same time an earnest evangelist, Mr. Schlienz-Madden, ready to enter it. In a priest-ridden country he has dared to preach the Gospel in the open air, and to expose the falsehoods by which Popery maintains its power, and the crimes committed by the priests. In this work he has the approval of the mayor, the protection of the chief of police, as well as of the judges of the tribunal. Meetings are held every evening in the mission hall. Gratuitous instruction in English is first given to boys; later on, when others have gathered, a Testament is lent to each one who wishes to read, and after a time of quiet reading, the Gospel is preached. Thus a spirit of inquiry has been already aroused, and it is believed that soon there will be a living Church in this long neglected island.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS,

There are few more interesting records of missionary effort and enterprise than that of the Moravian Missions, carried on in different parts of the world. The Moravian Quarterly tells us of city mission work in Cape Town, where a site for a church has just been procured, and it is hoped the building will be erected before long. The letters from other portions of South Africa also show that much good is being done amongst the natives. From Labrador and Alaska many incidents of missionary experience are given—some very sad, as the death by drowning of Mr. Torgersen—but all of a kind to stimulate those who realise how wide is the field into which the Lord bids his servants to go preaching the Gospel, and how urgent the call from all sides. The office of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions is at 29, Ely-place, Holborn, W.C.

RYDE Y.W.C.A.

The seventh annual report says that much blessing has been vouchsafed during the past year, both in the Association and the Sea-side Home. Many express gratitude for spiritual, temporal, and social benefits derived through the loving Christian influence of the institution, and confess to having been marvellously helped in the battle of life by the lessons of simple trust in God which they have learnt. About two hundred young women, including several Board-school mistresses, were inmates of the Home during the summer months. All young women residing in Ryde are cordially invited to Garfield House. Applications for admission may be forwarded to the Lady Superintendent, Garfield House, Ryde.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

In the report before us Rev. P. I. J. Warschawski says:—"During the past year we have been sowing seed by visitation, mothers' meetings, men's classes, Bible-readings, the distribution of Bibles and tracts, and in the exercise of Christian sympathy to the sick and needy." Employment has been found for some who were destitute, and ignorant of the English tongue, and where persecution has been followed by dismissal of the converts from Jewish warehouses. The mission room is at Albion Hall, London Wall, E.C., and is open daily for the various classes. Bible-readings in Isaiah are given on the second Monday in each month at 16, Farleigh road, Stoke Newington, N.; and a Bible-class for ladies and children every Sunday afternoon.

MANCHESTER BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN.

Last year more than 60,000 Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels were sold, besides many thousands of tracts, small books, &c., gratuitously circulated. The Fourth Annual Report says it has been "the best year's circulation of the Scriptures we have ever had," notwithstanding great opposition in some places, from publicans and freethinkers. One young man who was converted by the preaching, said it was evidently not the people's pockets, but their hearts that the preacher wanted, and this conviction led him to seek salvation. A woman said, "I shall ever have to thank God for the van coming here (Ashton-under-Lyne), for my husband has become a changed man." Another said, "I have everything that this world can give, but with it a Christless soul." She soon received Christ, and was filled with joy unspeakable. Inquiries may be made of Mr. P. M. Crane, Mersey Bank, Didsbury, Manchester.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

This place of refuge for seamen of all nations is open daily, from two till nine, providing meetings in three or four languages. Not less than two thousand services are held in the course of a year. According to the report every branch of work is flourishing—the open air work, work at the dock gates, the lodging-house visitation, the nightly Bible-class, and the children's meetings. Fifteen hundred "bags" were given away to the sailors, and a further supply is desired. The monthly meetings of workers continue to be seasons of great spiritual refreshment, and to these, Christian friends are cordially invited. Several Jews, who for the first time heard the Gospel in this place, have now openly professed their faith in the Lord Jesus by baptism. A German socialist, who was a ringleader of disturbances once, is now rejoicing in testifying for Christ frequently. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. J. T. Isaac, 168, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, E.

OBITUARY.

MR. FRANCIS MULLINER.

THIS faithful servant of the Lord passed away at Birkenhead on February 13, after a short illness of four days. One who was converted by his instrumentality writes:—He was wonderfully faithful in dealing with his friends. Besides personal dealing he was much blessed in preaching the Word. The Y.M.C.A. of Birkenhead owed him a great deal; only recently he was re-elected President.

MRS. GRIFFITH JOHN.

Friends of the Rev. Griffith John, of Hankow, China, will hear with deep regret of the death of Mrs. John, at the London Mission, Hankow. Mrs. John had been unwell for two or three weeks, but until Christmas Day no apprehensions were entertained that her illness was of a dangerous nature. On Christmas Day, however, serious symptoms appeared. All that love and medical skill could do was done for the patient, but she gradually grew worse, and died about noon on Dec. 29.

MR. JOHN HODGES.

The Ootacamund (India) Observer announces the death of Mr. John Hodges, one of the oldest residents of the station. The happiness of his life, says a correspondent, lay in making those around him happy—in promoting their highest interests. With unceasing watchfulness and vigilance he laid himself out to do all the good within his reach, to the utmost extent of his ability and knowledge, and this to the frequent sacrifice of his own private interests. His labours in connection with the Bible Society, the weekly supply of the Union Hall pulpit, and other matters, were continued up to almost the last day of his life.

WELLINGTON, SALOP.—A most successful mission, extending over fifteen days, has recently been conducted in this town in connection with the Y.M.C.A., by Mr. Henry Thorne. At the closing meeting for praise many testimonies were given of blessing received during the mission.

The Book World.

With Christ in the School of Prayer. Rev. Andrew Murray. Nisbet & Co. A remarkable book; clear, simple, and terse; bright with spiritual insight, and charged with power. Each paragraph is richly laden. We have found in this book little to question, and very much that is of great value. We hope, as soon as the great pressure upon our space, which now exists, is lessened a little, to give our readers one or two samples of the good things to be found in this modest half-crown volume.

Unpolished Gems of Scripture. No. 4. By Rev. J. Hawker. 1s. Elliot Stock. The "Gems" are verses taken casually from Job and the Book of Psalms. On each the writer makes brief remarks by way of explanation, illustration, and application. Wherever versions, ancient or modern, throw light upon a passage, they are quoted, but not translated. Mr. Hawker's expositions seem to us based on sound principles, and he loses no opportunity of enforcing the necessity of personal faith and holiness. These notes are issued quarterly.

The Expositor. Third Series. Volume ii. Hodder & Stoughton. Full of weight and suggestion, this volume cannot fail to be of great service to multitudes of those who have to teach others. It gives us, in small compass, some of the best and freshest thoughts of many of our foremost teachers and Bible students. Men like Drs. Alex. Maclaren, Marcus Dodds, Alex. Whyte, and T. K. Cheyne, Professors F. Godet, Salmond, and Warfield, or Principal Moule, of Ridley Hall, are always worth listening to. We have some of them at their best in this volume.

The Art of Thriving; or, Thrift Lessons in Familiar Letters. By John T. Walters, M.A., Rector of Norton. Second Edition. Messrs. Jarrold & Sons. This invaluable book needs little introduction; but, owing to its altered title, some may fail to recognise an old friend. The scope of the book is wide, ranging from health laws and garden gossip to the education of children, sick nursing, duties of a citizen, and difficulties of faith; yet all that is said on these various subjects is said wisely and well. We can heartily commend the book to householders of all ranks, and to those intending to keep house.

Lesson Studies from the Book of Genesis. By Eugene Stock. 2s. Religious Tract Society These suggestive studies from Genesis originally appeared in The Sunday-school Journal of America for 1880. Many will be glad to have them in a collected form. They are first-rate samples of Mr. Stock's well-known style. In a few sentences he puts many thoughts; in a few pages he supplies matter for numerous lessons and discourses. His heads are always striking, his divisions true and well balanced, his illustrations graphic and appropriate. Without needless display of scholarship, he gives the fruits of deep thought and extensive reading. The book will be a treasure to ministers and teachers.

The Forty Days of the Bible, and their Teachings. By W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D., Bishop of Ossory. Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. The number forty, says Dr. Walsh, in company with Hengstenberg and Fairbairn, seems symbolic of "probation," ending either in Divine blessing or Divine judgment, according to the use made of that period of years or days. This statement he illustrates in a forcible and interesting style from the seven most prominent forty days of the Bible. The forty days on Mount Sinai, characterised as the "Law and the Gospel," and the forty days after Christ's resurrection, characterised as "Grace and Glory," form an interesting contrast. In a note at the end of the book is a list, giving thirty-three places in which the period has a symbolical use.

Platform Aids. Hodder & Stoughton. A thoroughly well-got-up book, as far as paper, type, and binding are concerned. Its contents, too, are most attractive. Just the book to give to some overworked pastor who has many speeches to make, with little time for study, and less money to spare for new books. We have here a collection of some of the best speeches of many of the great platform speakers of our time. The topics are very various, but are grouped into five divisions—home work, foreign missions, Bible distribution, temperance, and miscellaneous. Among the speakers quoted are Drs. Moffat, Livingstone, Morley Punshon, Culross, R. W. Dale, Joseph Parker; Messrs. Moody, Stuart, and Edmond; Archbishop Tait, Bishop Ellicot, the Bishops of London, Bedford, Ripon, and Carlisle; Revs. Wm. Arthur, C. H. Spurgeon, and many others.

Handbook to the Grammar of the Greek Testament. By Dr. Samuel Green. 7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is a revised and much improved edition of a very highly esteemed old friend. But we fear that its circle of admirers is far smaller than it should be. This ought to be a well-used book in almost every intelligent Christian home. Thousands of eager Bible students, who long for a familiar acquaintance with the Greek New Testament, are held back by the well-known difficulties of classic Greek. This handbook removes that difficulty. It used to be thought that nearly the only way to New Testament Greek ran through the territory of ancient literature; and that this is the best road none can deny. But there is a short cut to which this handbook is the best guide known. Any intelligent, fairly educated person, with but a moderate gift of language, and plenty of determination, may now learn to use his Greek Testament after a few months' study. Why should not many of our lads and elder girls who have just left school take up this study? There is none nobler, none so helpful or elevating. One cannot well speak too highly of such a book.

The Clergy Directory for 1886 (4s. 6d. T. G. Johnson, 121, Fleet-street) embodies several alterations and improvements. and ought to be invaluable to all who have any dealings with the members of the State Church.

The Treatment of Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout, by J. J. Barrett, M.D. (1s. G. Gill & Sons, 23, Warwick-lane), is a brochure which may be serviceable to those who are martyrs to these painful disorders. Mr. Spurgeon, in a brief testimony, expresses gratitude to Dr. Barrett for the remedies prescribed in his own case.

Second Letter to Schoolboys, addressed to the boys of our public schools. By Mr. John Shrimpton 1s. Church of England Book Society. A dainty little volume, printed on toned paper, giving, within a very small compass, much earnest, loving counsel, and manly incentive to live a pure and godly life. We commend it to all parents and guardians of the class of boys addressed.

For a popular book of reference on all important topics of public and general interest there is nothing published, we suppose, to match Whittaker's Almanack (1s. 12, Warwick-lane). Every year sees some extension and improvement. The current issue unfortunately does not give the existing government, but the tenure of office in these days is rather uncertain, and several fresh governments may be in and out before the close of the year.

Hazell's Annual Cyclopædia is the title of a new work of reference which will shortly be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. It is compiled upon an entirely new plan, and consists of upwards of two thousand articles, mostly written by specialists, and revised up to the present month, on all questions and topics of current political, social, and general interest. It is intended to form a handy book of reference for newspaper readers, and all who wish to be acquainted with the topics of the time.

The Shipwrecked Mariner for January contains a Wreck Chart of the British Isles for 1883-4, compiled from the Board of Trade Register; showing also the present Lifeboat Stations of the National Institution. The number of shipwrecked sailors, dependent widows and orphans, including those assisted on account of disaster, losses, &c, amounted to over 4000 during the past quarter, and nearly 12,000 for the entire year. "Miscellaneous Jottings" contain items of thrilling interest. The price of this quarterly magazine is sixpence, and it may be obtained from The Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, Sailors' Home, London Docks, E.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

REV. J. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN lately conducted a ten days' mission in Brisbane, Queensland, with very marked and satisfactory results.

BELFAST.—Mr. William Smith, evangelist, has concluded a short series of evangelistic meetings in Hutchinson-street Mission-room. The meetings were well attended, and several professed conversion.

ULLENHALL.—A fortnight's mission has just been held here, conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris, with very blessed results. Persons of all classes have been reached. It is impossible to over-estimate the blessings which have been received. Some travelled from five to ten miles each night. Prayer is asked that great grace may be given to the vicar, to lead the large number of converts into the rich pastures of Divine love.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS.—The movement among students in Edinburgh still progresses. The converts of last year hold steadily together and their ranks are ever and anon reinforced from among their companions. Professor Henry Drummond is addressing full meetings on Sunday evenings with good results. A deputation from Edinburgh has visited Belfast, and a work of grace has begun among young men there.

PLUMSTEAD.—The recent mission at Cage-lane Mission Hall, conducted by Mr. Climie, a Scotch evangelist, gives us cause for increasing praise for God's leadings in connection with the work. Not only are we rejoicing over the salvation of sinners, and the restoration of backsliders, but Christians have been greatly strengthened by the evangelist's very clear, faithful and earnest teaching. Many cases of special interest might be recorded.

Kate Russell.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.—A fourteen days' mission has been conducted at Ely with much success by Mr. W. Grove, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission. Hundreds flocked to hear his stirring Gospel addresses delivered with such force and power. Souls have been saved, and the workers in connection with the Nonconformist churches have been quickened to greater zeal. Mr. and Mrs. Grove have also been working with good success at Stretham; they are now at Malden Hall, London.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.—A series of evangelistic meetings have recently been held in the village of Kier, by Mr. Hall, of Annan. A number of anxious inquirers, at Mr. Hall's earnest invitation, visited him at the close of the meetings for counsel and prayer. The minister of the parish, Rev. D. Bayne-Jardine gave cordial support to the work. One result of the mission has been the commencement of a little weekly prayer meeting in the village among the young men who have at this time made a Christian profession.

HAMILTON, N.B.—Mr. W. Spencer Walton has conducted a fortnight's mission here, under the auspices of the "Evangelistic Union." Such a time of blessing has certainly not been experienced in Hamilton for these last twenty years. On the last night of the mission—a praise night—a call was made for those who had received blessing to stand, when the large assemblage rose en masse to testify to the Spirit's work in their midst. Mr. Walton conducted largely-attended afternoon Bible-readings, and the children were not overlooked.

TEMPLE OF VARIETIES, HAMMERSMITH.—This mission hall was opened in October last by the Special Services Committee. With thankful hearts we record the interest taken in these meetings, and the great attention bestowed by those who are not in the habit of attending a place of worship. On a recent Sunday afternoon a testimony meeting was held, and the number of those who testified to the realisation of sins forgiven was only limited by the time. Will your readers remember this work in prayer?

W. J. R.

OUNDLE, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.—A series of united mission services, extending over fifteen days, conducted by Mr. G. A. Weller, of the Evangelisation Society, in the various Nonconformist places of worship, Baptist, Independent, and Wesleyan, has just been brought to a close. The services have been well attended throughout. Great satisfaction was felt in the gathering together of members of the different congregations in each other's places of worship, and it is hoped that this mission will only prove the beginning of united prayer and increased evangelistic effort in the town and neighbourhood.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY FEB. 28.—NUMBERS XIX.

THE subject of this chapter is the ordinance of "the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean," referred to in Heb. ix. 13, 14; the kind of uncleanness which it was intended to remove being that arising from contact with death. "The ordinance was probably given at this time because the plague, which happened about the matter of Korah, had spread the defilement of death widely through the camp."

2.—A red heifer without spot, &c.—"Many very different reasons have been assigned for the colour 'red.' The Rabbins and earlier theologians supposed it to denote 'sin.' Keil, Kurtz, and Bähr, on the other hand, take it to denote 'life;' Delitzsch further pointing out that the Hebrew word for 'heifer' means 'the fruitful one,' calling to mind the fruit-producing power of life, the opposite of the withered impotence of death." Keil further confirms this view by explaining the words, "upon which never came yoke," "i.e., whose vital energy had not yet been crippled by labour under the yoke." Kurtz says, "The red hue of the heifer was a characteristic sign of its fulness of life, and fitted it to become an antidote to the power of death." It points to "in Him was life" (John i. 4).

5.—Her flesh and her blood shall he burn.—The burning of the blood is explained by Delitzsch thus: "The ashes of the animal were to furnish a means of purification, in which the blood, already endowed with atoning power through the sprinkling of one portion toward the holy tent (ver. 4), formed the most important ingredient."

12.—If he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean.—The third day points to Christ's resurrection, or the basis of the preaching of the Gospel during this dispensation. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Those who do not now purify themselves, "on the seventh day (i.e., the approaching consummation) they shall not be clean."

The spiritual significance of this ordinance is pointed out in Hebrews ix. 13, 14. A Christian's works—even his best works—are defiled by contact with death—"this body of death" in which we still are (Rom. vii. 24, viii. 10); and this death-defilement sensibly affects the Christian, who ofttimes mourns over "deadness in prayer," "dead frames, feelings," &c. But if the ashes of the heifer purified the Jew of old, "how much more shall the blood of Christ . . . purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?"

MONDAY, MARCH 1.—NUMBERS XX.

The murmuring of the people for water, which is related here, took place nearly forty years after the similar scene recorded in Exod. xvi.

9.—And Moses took the rod from before the Lord.—"The rod, as the memorial of so many Divine interpositions, was naturally laid up in the tabernacle."

10.—Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?—The Lord gives as the reason of the exclusion of Moses and Aaron from the land of Canaan, "because ye sanctified Me not in the midst of the children of Israel" (Deut. xxxii. 51), or as it is here (ver. 12), "ye believed Me not, to sanctify Me in the eyes of the children of Israel." They put themselves in the Lord's place in saying "Must we fetch you water?" and by disobeying his command to speak to the rock, and smiting it instead, they destroyed the lesson of deep spiritual significance which the Lord intended to teach, namely, that Christ—for "that rock was Christ"—needs not to be smitten again. Having been once smitten for sin, He "dieth no more," but faith speaks to Him or calls upon his name, and He "gives forth" the water of salvation to all who call upon Him. The sin of Moses and Aaron sets forth in shadow the sin of Apostate Christendom, in professing to repeat the sacrifice of Christ, and that with a view to exalt the power of their so-called priesthood, "Must we fetch you?" &c.

21.—Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border.—Edom typifies the professing Church in contrast to Israel, the true Church. The professing Church in its apostasy has opposed the passage of the true Church through its border, and Israel's conduct—"Wherefore Israel turned away from Him"—corresponds to the word spoken in reference to those "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof"—"from such turn away" (2 Tim. iii. 5).

TUESDAY, MARCH 2.—NUMBERS XXI.

8.—Make thee a fiery serpent.—That is, one resembling in appearance those that bit the people. How this was done the next verse relates, "Moses made a serpent of brass." The typical import of this incident is explained by our Lord in John iii. 14, 15, but a difficulty arises. How could Christ on the cross be represented by a serpent of brass, the serpent being the well-known symbol of Satan, "that old serpent the devil?" This is best explained by remembering that in the cross of Christ, Satan himself and the powers of darkness were, as it were, transfixed there. See Col. ii. 15, "He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (i.e., the cross). The cross of Christ is to the eye of faith the place where Christ prevailed to "destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil" (Heb. ii. 14).

9.—When he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.—We must not forget, in dealing with this type, that the promise, "Every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it shall live," is explained by our Lord to typify "that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It is the look of faith, not of mere intellectual assent, which saves. "Look and live" means "believe and live."

23.—And Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border.—Sihon's conduct was like that of Edom (xx. 21), but whereas Israel only "turned away from" Edom, because he was in a sense Israel's brother (xx. 14), he fought with Sihon and overcame him.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3.—NUMBERS XXII.

5.—He sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor to Pethor.—"The exact situation of Pethor is uncertain. Balaam 'came from the mountains of the East' (xxiii. 7), i.e., from Aram or Mesopotamia; and Pethor, therefore, cannot be placed very far down the river."—Sp. Com.

"The character of Balaam has been very variously estimated. It seems probable that he was from the first a worshipper in some sort of the true God; and doubtless had learned some elements of pure and true religion in his home in the far East, the cradle of the ancestors of Israel. Such superior knowledge doubtless conduced to Balaam's reputation as a prophet, whilst it was not clear and coherent enough to deter him from employing as a trade the arts of the heathen sorcerer."—Ibid. The allusion to Balaam in 2 Pet. ii. 15, tends to confirm this thought that he was one who had "forsaken the right way," and that because he "loved the wages of unrighteousness."

12.—And God said unto Balaam.—Baur points out as a "fine distinction," that whereas from the very outset Balaam always speaks of "Jehovah," it is "God" who is said to have spoken to him. Hengstenberg, who first notices this distinction, thinks that Balaam "is thereby tacitly accused of hypocrisy." It at all events shows that while he used the name of Jehovah, he had no right to use it.

28.—The Lord opened the mouth of the ass.—All efforts of commentators to get rid of the plain meaning of these words—such as Hengstenberg and others, that the whole occurred in a vision, or "Speaker's Commentary," that the cries of the ass "became to the prophet's intelligence as though it addressed him in rational speech"—fall to the ground before the equally plain words of 2 Pet. ii. 16: "The dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet."

THURSDAY, MARCH 4.—NUMBERS XXIII.

7.—And he took up his parable.—"The word here rendered 'parable' is literally a simile, then a proverb, and lastly, a sentence or saying."—Keil. The poetical structure of these utterances (as may be seen in R.V.) would almost justify the word being rendered "poem."

10.—The number of the fourth part of Israel.—"Balaam speaks of the fourth part with reference to the division of the nation into four camps (chap. ii.), of which he could see only one from his point of view (xxii. 41)." Let me die the death of the righteous.—The word here rendered "righteous" is not that usually so translated, but one whose meaning is rather "upright." It occurs frequently in the Psalms and Proverbs, and is almost always rendered "upright." It is often pointed out how vain mere aspirations are, when one who here shows such a desire to die the death of the upright, should himself so persistently follow crooked ways. The account of his death in Joshua xiii. 22, where he is called "the soothsayer," as well as the record of his wicked "counsel" (xxxi. 16), leaves little hope that the desire was ever attained.

21.—He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, &c.—Luther's translation and some modern commentators (including "The Speaker's Commentary") would take this impersonally, "one beholds not," &c., but Keil well remarks, "The subject in the first sentence is God (see Hab. i. 3, 13)," and so R.V. makes no alteration from A.V. The Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them.—The deeper meaning of these words in their spiritual reference to the Israel of God points to the coming of Him who should be called Emmanuel—"God with us,"—and who should, when crucified as "King of the Jews," utter the great shout of victory, "It is finished."

22.—He hath as it were the strength of an unicorn.—"The animal named by Balaam in the text ("wild ox," R.V.) as an apt symbol of the strength of Israel is now extinct. . . . It is the Urus of Cæsar, who gives a formidable account of its size, strength, speed, and ferocity."—Sp. Com.

FRIDAY, MARCH 5.—NUMBERS XXIV.

2.—The Spirit of God came upon him.—"Of both the earlier utterances it is stated that 'Jehovah put a word into his mouth' (xxiii. 5, 16), but of this third it is affirmed that the Spirit of God came upon him."—Kiel. With this must be connected the fact that he now "went not, as at other times, to seek for enchantments" (ver. 1), probably on account of the word put in his mouth (xxiii. 23). The Spirit of God could not co-operate with divination, though God might overrule it to cause him to utter his word.

3.—The man whose eyes are open (margin Heb., "who had his eyes shut").—R.V. reverses this, and has in the text "whose eye was closed," and in the margin "is opened." The word so differently rendered is of very rare occurrence; in fact, only elsewhere at ver. 15. Most Hebrew scholars prefer the meaning "shut," and Hengstenberg thus explains it: "Balaam describes himself as the man with closed eye with reference to his state of ecstasy, in which the closing of the outer senses went hand in hand with the opening of the inner."

7.—His King shall be higher than Agag.—"Agag (the fiery) is not the proper name of the Amalekite king defeated by Saul (1 Sam. xv. 8), but the title of the Amalekite kings in general, just as all the Egyptian kings had the common name of Pharaoh."—Keil.

17.—I shall see him, but not now," &c.—"Him, i.e., the prince represented in the succeeding words by the crown and sceptre. The use of the pronoun to stand for a person not yet named, is common in Oriental, especially Arabic poetry. The star has amongst all nations served as a symbol of regal power and splendour. How current it was among the Jews, and accepted, too, as a well-understood emblem of the Messiah in particular, is strikingly illustrated by the fact that the well-known pretender in the reign of Hadrian adopted the name of Bar-cochab, i.e., 'son of a star.'"—Sp. Com.

"To a Christian, the connection between the star and sceptre of Balaam and the star of the King of the Jews, which the wise men saw (Matt. ii. 2), is self-evident."—Ibid.

SATURDAY, MARCH 6.—NUMBERS XXV.

The concluding words of the last chapter assert that "Balaam returned to his place;" but in chap. xxxi. 16 we get the link between that chapter and this: "These (the Midianitish women) caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor." See also Rev. ii. 14.

2.—They called the people to the sacrifices of their gods.—As in the case of Solomon afterwards, sensuality led to idolatry: they "bowed down to their gods," i.e., took part in the idolatrous worship connected with the sacrificial festival. These sacrificial meals were celebrated in honour of the Moabitish god Baal-Peor, so that the Israelites joined themselves to him, "and (as it says in Ps. cvi. 28) ate the sacrifices of the dead, that is, of dead idols, in opposition to the living God."—Hengstenberg.

13.—Made an atonement for the children of Israel.—"The signal example thus made by Phinehas of a leading offender was accepted by God as an expiation (literally, 'a covering'), and the exterminating wrath which had gone forth against the whole people was arrested."—Sp. Com.

13.—The covenant of an everlasting priesthood.—"In accordance with this promise the high priesthood, which passed from Eleazar to Phinehas (Judges xx. 28), continued in his family, with the exception of a brief interruption in Eli's days (1 Sam. i.—iii., xiv. 3), until the time of the last gradual dissolution of the Jewish state, through the tyranny of Herod and his successors."—Keil.

A SECOND PROTESTANT CHURCH has been built at Méran, in the Tryol, by permission of the Imperial and municipal authorities. The Prince-Archbishop of Trente forbade any of his flock to take part in the inaugural ceremony. After the proceedings the Catholic clergy organised an expiatory Procession, in order to pray that God would spare his chastisement from Méran, now that "the soil was profaned by idolatry."—Témoin de la Vérité.

ITALIAN MISGOVERNMENT.—A Middlesbrough gentleman (Mr. William Jones), who has recently travelled through Italy, describes his impressions of that country in a pamphlet, in which he remarks that the dismal condition to which modern Italy has been reduced, mainly through its military ambition, is terrible and widespread. Especially pitiable is the condition of the agricultural population. During the summer of 1884 a meeting of the merchants of the Campagna was held, and amongst the resolutions adopted was the following: "That dead animals shall be buried in quicklime to prevent the peasants from digging up and eating them, as often happens!"

HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION.

The distress in this neighbourhood (John-street and College-lane) is very great, on account of the depression in trade. The friends of the Mission are trying to cope with it, and desire to keep all the agencies in working order. But unless generous aid is forthcoming much of the work will have to be curtailed, and the usefulness of the Mission greatly hindered. An urgent appeal for contributions is therefore made, which may be forwarded to Mr. Henry Shaw, 15, Muston-road, Upper Clapton, N.

THE ETERNAL PURPOSE OF GOD.—REDEMPTION.—GOD'S BECOMINGNESS.—BAPTISM: JOHN, JESUS, BELIEVERS.—THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.—THE UNCLOTHED.—RESURRECTION LIFE.—REWARD ACCORDING TO WORKS.—DAVID'S MIGHTY MEN.—CROWNS.—THE RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS.—CHRIST IN THE PSALMS.—PRIESTHOOD: AARON, MELCHIZEDEK, JESUS.—SCIENCE VERSUS REVELATION.—CREATION.—DEATH.—THINGS COMING ON THE EARTH.—THE NEW JERUSALEM.—THE NEW EARTH.—THE COLONIZATION OF WORLDS.

Opinions of the Press.

"Mr. P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., has long had a notable place among devout students of Scripture, and he still brings forth fruit in old age. A new volume from his pen is before us, entitled 'The Mysteries of God;' and it is a book to be read and pondered."
British Messenger.

"The subjects treated on are of deepest moment, and by no means those which lie on the surface. Redemption is set forth in its past, present, and future aspects, time and eternity both being regarded in the light of the revealed purposes of God. Such books are rare. Mr. Gosse has added another such to the Christian literature of our times, and his work is to be cordially commended, as it must be heartily welcomed by all thoughtful readers who 'delight in the law of the Lord.'"—The Christian.

"We unhesitatingly pronounce this volume to be in every way an able production, simple in plan, but displaying great powers of thought, and full of varied and important information."—The Presbyterian.

"He is intensely evangelical, and makes it his first aim to know the mind of the Spirit. His exposition of the significance of Baptism contains much helpful and precious truth. The chapters on Crowns, and on Science and Revelation, are also fruitful in suggestions."—Baptist Magazine.

"A series of devout studies on the deep things of the kingdom. Mr. Gosse . . . is a very independent as well as very close student of Scripture; and in this volume we have some of the ripe fruits of his life-long study."—The Baptist.

"I have read and re-read; some portions many times over; each time something fresh is seen, and made a blessing to mind and soul alike. . . . Every chapter is of priceless worth; . . . those on 'Christ in the Psalms' have strengthened and confirmed what I previously believed. . . . No words can adequately convey my obligations and gratitude for Chapters xii. and xiii., 'Crowns' and 'The Rapture of the Saints.' They have been made the greatest of blessings to me."
From a Baptist Minister in Cornwall.

"'The Mysteries of God' has furnished us with precious teaching, and subject for much prayerful thought."

"I take much to the book . . . there is something in the spirit of it that I find refreshing. There are two points on which I specially like him: 1. 'Christ as the Head of his people; . . .' I don't know that I have elsewhere found the doctrine so fully stated;—certainly not so originally illustrated. 2. 'Christ in the Psalms.' Mr. Gosse has given me on this head a good deal of new light, and of food for reflection. I very thoroughly agree with him here."

[These two Extracts are from Letters of Ministers of great age and eminence in Edinburgh.]

CASE of Mr. GEO. WALTERS, of HULL.

N.B.—The case of Mrs. Walters appeared in this journal last week.

On the 6th of August, his wife being then under my treatment, as before related, I received a letter from Mr. G. Walters, in which he says:—"My chest and lungs are very weak. I have pains in the heart and left side. I have cold sweats, much hoarseness, and expectoration. I am very weary, and getting too weak for any work. My doctor tells me my left lung is very bad; but my wife is recovering, and I have read so many testimonials, I have every confidence in your treatment."

At once he commenced the medicine, &c., according to advice then given.

The letter received in September contains the following testimony:—"I wish to add my witness to the wonderful effect produced upon me AND MY WIFE by your medicine. I am, myself, like another man. As to my wife, she got worse every week, till she came under your advice. Now she has so recovered that she can attend to her household work as well as ever she could. Use this in any way you please, and may you be long spared," &c.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

RICHARD COPE MORGAN.

IN presenting to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN a portrait of its Editor, a few words of explanation will be necessary. Requests have recently been sent by distant friends and subscribers that Mr. Morgan's portrait should appear, but, as will readily be understood, he has been extremely reluctant to comply with them. Taking advantage of his temporary absence, his acting representatives have thought that that absence furnished a fitting opportunity for meeting the views of those friends who wish to possess the portrait of one whose life and life-work have been so closely associated with the history of this journal from its commencement. Every periodical is necessarily shaped and coloured, more or less, by the personal characteristics of its conductor. That has been emphatically true with respect to THE CHRISTIAN. Beyond saying this, it would obviously be inappropriate that any detailed sketch of Mr. Morgan's life should accompany the portrait, which his intimate friends agree in considering to be a striking and successful likeness. Its appearance with this issue of the paper will be deemed more timely, in connection with the very gratifying testimonies which mainly compose the Editor's current " Letter from Abroad."

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—2.

TANGIER, MOROCCO.

CROSSING the Straits of Gibraltar to Tangier, and exchanging Europe for Africa, was like leaving the nineteenth century and going back to the first, or to the nineteenth century B.C.—at least so far as the natives are concerned. Our first call was on Mr. Mackintosh, whom I had known thirty years ago, but had not seen since he left at that time for Syria, which he only exchanged two years ago for Morocco, as a mission field. His work lies chiefly in distributing the Word of God, as representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society. As the stones first cast into the sea to form a breakwater are lost to sight, so are the first efforts of a missionary; but already the results of Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh's work are beginning to appear above the surface.

We were entertained for a fortnight by our kind and beloved friends, Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin, at Hope House, the head-quarters of the "Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber Races," with whom we spent an exceedingly happy fortnight. A meeting for prayer and testimony, one evening shortly after our arrival, was of peculiar interest to us, as it revealed the fact that three present had been brought to Christ through THE CHRISTIAN, and that all the others had been led, by the same means, to devote their lives to missionary work. At Mr. Baldwin's request, I gave some particulars of the commencement of The Revival with the revival of 1859, and the subsequent history of the paper, after which the following statements were made :—

Miss CONSTANCE CALEY: Most gladly will I tell of the blessing that THE CHRISTIAN has been to me. For it was a little story read from The Revival (as the paper was then called), and the words spoken about it by a beloved aunt, applied by God's Spirit, that led me, when a child of nearly eight years, to trust in Jesus Christ as my own Saviour, and to know that his death was the atonement for my sins. The articles lately written by Mr. G. Soltau, on "The Christian Soldier," &c., from 2 Tim. ii., have been blessed to me, and, I think, to many.

Miss EMMA HERDMAN: Praise the Lord for his mercy and goodness in bringing me out to work for Him in North Africa, through the instrumentality of THE CHRISTIAN. I read there a letter from Mr. George Pearse in the spring of 1884, written from Algiers, pressing its claims as a mission field on the Christians of Eng land. Having spent a winter in Algeria, and one in Morocco, I knew that missionaries to the Mohammedans were sorely needed. I offered myself for mission work in Algiers, and was accepted, and started in the autumn of 1884, but never reached my destination, owing to quarantine. Detained in Gibraltar, I crossed over to Tangier, from which place I had often previously pleaded with the Lord to send missionaries to Morocco. I had shrunk from the hardship of working in so uncivilised a country, and also preferred the drier climate of Algiers, but the Lord stopped me on my journey thither, and has opened up a wide field of work among Mohammedans and Jews in connection with the Berber Mission here in Morocco.

Miss HUGHIE C. TULLOCH: In the autumn of 1882 I read in THE CHRISTIAN Mr. Pearse's earnest appeal on behalf of the Kabyles. His description of the great needs of Kabylia, so near to our own more favoured land, awakened in me a great interest in these people. The great question with me was—What could I do to help them? The subsequent notices in the pages of the same paper from the pens of Mr. Pearse and Mr. Glenny, and the demand that labourers might be sent out to North Africa, led me to offer myself. The Lord opened the way for me to come out to Tangier in the spring of 1885. I trust that through the means of The Christian many more hearts may be stirred up to come out to North Africa. I have often been instructed and encouraged by reading, but it has been especially blessed to me in the teaching given of the Lord's Second Coming.

Miss Jennie Jay: It was at the close of Mr. Moody's late Mission in London, that I first felt the desire to devote my life wholly to work for God. From him I had just learned the glorious truth that the Lord Jesus was coming back again, and might very soon be here, and that all Christians should daily be watching and waiting for Him. This filled me with indescribable joy and gladness, and I continually prayed that He would show me what I could do to hasten his return. I did not think of Foreign Mission work until early last spring, when I saw a letter in The Christian from Mr. Baldwin, describing the great spiritual darkness of Morocco and the scarcity of workers. I at once felt that Christ must long for more of his children to go out to that dark land as witnesses for Him, and that He might be delaying his coming on account of their unfaithfulness to his last command. For a time I tried to put the thought from me that God could really mean me to go, but I could never lose the impression that letter had made on me nor the feelings to which it had given rise. I never had any desire or thought of going anywhere else, and when at last I yielded and told God that I was quite willing to go out and give my life to work in North Africa, if that were his will, He quickly removed all difficulties and made the way plain. And I am now here at Hope House, daily learning to love these poor, neglected people more and more, and thanking God for giving me the honour of coming out to them as a witness for Christ.

Rev. E. F. Baldwin: The first copies of The Christian I ever saw were in Mr. George C. Needham's home in Philadelphia (U.S.) One of them contained an address at a Mildmay Conference by Rev. W. H. Aitken on "The Power of God in Christ." It had a marked effect on my life and my service for Christ. Through several years the copy I made of it was much used of God for the quickening of other ministers of the Gospel, notably a beloved and eminent young Baptist pastor in Baltimore. Soon after the publishers sent the paper regularly to me, and it has been a source of unspeakable and unceasing blessing to myself and family.

I will give two memorable instances. I was sitting on the porch of my North Carolina home in the twilight of a summer day some two and a half years ago. My children were around me. All were the Lord's except those quite young. I repeated to them a touching story I had just read in The Christian. It was a missionary address by Mr. J. Hudson Taylor, at Mildmay. He told of his little girl, whose sweet young life had ceased on earth in China that it might be lived on in heaven. He narrated how he and she had walked together near their home in that far-away land, and had talked of the idolatry of the Chinese and their need of Christ. They stopped to rest, and that dear child began pouring out her heart in prayer for them. Almost an hour passed before she ceased, and they went on to their home. He had immediately to leave to visit another station. Before his return she fell sick and died, and so was with the Lord. When I had finished the narration one of my little boys, seven years old, was weeping uncontrollably. I took him in my arms and inquired why. "Because, papa, I am just as old as that little girl, and yet if I go with you to North Africa I cannot tell the little children there that my sins are forgiven." The next day I trust that both he and his brother received Christ for salvation.

It was through the pages of this same periodical that my attention was drawn to this interesting people (the Berbers and Moors of North Africa), to whom I have now given my life, that I may win from among them to Christ the elect ones I am sure God has among them. Thus through The Christian it results that not only myself, but my devoted wife and children are here, and have been for more than a year, toiling at the difficult language, that we may speak to the people in their own tongue, wherein they were born, the wonderful works of God.

I need not say with what gratitude to God I heard these spontaneous testimonies, knowing also that similar experiences might have been recorded by many blessed ones who have died in the Lord, and are resting from their labours, as well as by many now gathering in the harvest, at home and in foreign lands.

We are just leaving for Oran and Algiers. I must reserve further mention of this place for another letter.

Tangier. R. C. Morgan.

SEED SOWING IN TREBIZOND.

TREBIZOND is one of the oldest stations of the American Board in Asiatic Turkey. It has a population of 35,000, of whom one half are Turks, and the remainder are mostly Greeks and Armenians. Like most sea-board towns, Christian work has been difficult in proportion to commercial success. Scarcely half a score of the early fruits of the mission remain, and these are, perhaps, the least hopeful of the little flock of evangelicals in this ancient town on the Black Sea. Some of their children are, however, among the leading members of the Church and community. Two of these were trained in the Boarding-school for Girls, of which I had charge at Constantinople.

Although often desirous of visiting this place, the way was not open for me to doso till October last, when, by invitation of the missionary family here and the native brethren, I came to spend a few weeks or months in labour among the women. The first fortnight was occupied in visiting the Protestant families, and the various schools, and then commenced my regular work among outsiders. Taking out my "seed basket" full of tracts, text-cards, and Gospels in the various languages, and with prayer for the Spirit's guidance and blessing, I went forth alone day after day to "sow." The weather was propitious, and the air mild and sunny, so that many of the women were sitting in the open doorway, or the garden, or court-yard, with their knitting, spinning, or other domestic work, and this made entrance easy for a stranger. Passing by the open door I gave the customary salutation, and inquired if there were "readers" in that house. This generally brought me an invitation to enter, or to be seated, while I showed them the "little books," and at once entered upon my mission, striving to awaken them to the worth of the soul, and what it cost to redeem it.

I called at eight houses the first day, and had earnest conversation and prayer in most of them, repeating the Lord's prayer in two homes, and leaving behind me tracts to deepen the impressions made, or a Gospel either sold or given away. Very few of the women can read, but most of the children can, and in most houses there are men who come home at night, and they are generally able to read. Some of these women thanked me for coming, and asked me to remember them again. Others were either indifferent or disposed to cavil. "Are you not a sinner?" inquired one mother who was nursing her sick child in the doorway. "Indeed I am," I responded, "and it is because I have learned the cure of sin that I come to tell you also." Another woman passing stopped to listen, and still others, till a group of mothers were gathered, while I, taking the poor emaciated infant as an illustration, pictured the ravages of sin and the love and pity of Jesus Christ, the Great Physician.

While I was selling some illuminated text-cards to an Armenian lady to send to her home in Russia, the rude neighbour came and whispered, "Is she not a farmason?" "What of that?" she replied; "perhaps I am one, also!" And then, asking me if I ever "preached," she said she would come to the Mission-house to hear me. This she afterwards did with ten or more of the neighbouring women. The father of this lady is a General in the Russian Army, and other members of the family are in high position in Moscow. In her pleasant home I found an Armenian Bible of the British and Foreign Bible Society, of 1827, also one of modern date. Thus the seed is scattered. And these details are mere samples of the work of sowing the "seed of the kingdom" in this land.

Almost every day brings some new phase of the work. Now, a Gospel in Armenian or Turkish, sold to some man or lad in a lane or by-street, or cards and leaflets given to a group of school children; then a few words of earnest conversation with young women or aged mothers passing by, giving them some suitable tracts to take home. One day I visited a Turkish house where the pleasant mistress asked for a Gospel. Both she and her daughter-in-law could read. After receiving the "Injeel" in her own language, she said, "now come and preach to us."

Another day, hearing the hum of voices, I entered a house where a Turkish mother, with her babe in her arms, was teaching a school of thirty little boys and girls. At a khan near by several Turks asked for a Gospel. An Armenian woman called me in. There I found another large, but neglected, Bible. This family were from the Harpoot field. She asked me to read and pray for her for the restoration of her eyes, but was not anxious about her soul. In two other Armenian houses I found a large Bible of our own imprint, and one aged woman with glasses, who "learned to read when young," and seemed to know the truth. She bought a Gospel, and putting it in her pocket, drew forth a sausage, which she gave me in token of her appreciation of my visit. At a "fabrica" near by ten or fifteen men were weaving. They gladly received the little books. Several Gospels, and other books were sold amongst them, and at one visit all the looms were stopped while they listened to the presentation of the truth by the teacher who accompanied me. At another visit at this and another factory these men were eager to get the tracts just published by the Bible House, Constantinople, and I heard one of them reading aloud to the others the little book, "Come to Jesus," in Armenian.

Oh, for a great outpouring of the Spirit here, to make the seed of the Gospel grow, and to quicken Christians into new life and power! Pray for all the missionaries and native workers also. Maria A. West.

WHY SHOULD WE PRAY FOR THE COMING OF THE LORD?

By Rev. CHARLES A. FOX.

"EVEN so, Come, Lord Jesus!" (Rev. xii. 22). The closing prayer of the Bible. Surely we will all pray this prayer—the last prayer God has put into our lips to pray. Anything that is the last has always a peculiar emphasis of its own; any word of anyone dear to us, which is "the last," has always some strange power and abides with us.

This prayer, then, that God puts into the lips of his Church, comes to us with all the emphasis of the last prayer, with all the emphasis of the last word—as indeed it is—of his Holy Book. It is the last Command, the last injunction, the last instruction, as well as the last Prayer; the very last thing He would press on the heart of the universal Church throughout all the dispensation. It is this prayer that consummates everything in Holy Scripture, that draws up into a head every other petition, that fulfils every other desire, that includes every other thought and longing Christ-ward—very short, and like all truly great things, very simple—"Even so, Come, Lord Jesus!"

The Lord had been perpetually pleading with men, "Come!" "Come unto Me, all ye that labour." It had been the burden of his heart's song, if we may so speak, all his life long. It seems to be the sweetest word He ever used, "Come!" It seems as if He would draw every man unto Himself, and as if He would take us all unto his Father with Him. It is one of the shortest and most blessed sermons He ever preached. It is one of the briefest and yet most emphatic words of warning, and also of encouragement—"Come!"

And it is this very same word, so precious to his own heart—that which was ever the burden of his lips all through his first Advent—that He now puts into our lips. He commits it unto us. "Now you shall say, 'Come!' All my life I have been saying 'Come!' My life has lived out one thought, 'Come!' I died to say, 'Come!' I rose saying, 'Come!' I ascended saying, 'Come!' I shall come again saying, 'Come!' but in the meantime, do you, my children, take up the blessed word 'Come.'"

We know from this very verse, and from the preceding one, that this is the word of the Spirit. If Christ formerly was saying this word, "Come!" the Spirit is now saying it. Yea, the Spirit and the Bride, both have this short word between them. It is quite enough for them both. "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come!" It seems to be all that is in the heart of God, "Only come, and only come now."

Why should we pray this prayer beyond that it is the last, and that it has this singular emphasis of Holy Scripture? Do not we do pretty well without our Lord Jesus? Is it not a hopeful time? Is not God's work going on? Would it not be all stopped, all checked, would it not be an end of everything of good work, were He to come? Would there not be all hope put away from those yet outside the fold of Christ? Are there not many families who dare not pray it? Are there not many Christians who dare not say it; because they are afraid of the Lord coming too quickly, before all their relations are in the fold? Why, then, should we pray this prayer?

The first reason is given us in Heb. ix. 28: "Unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

WE WANT FULL SALVATION.

We have only got a part at present. We want to have the full, final, and complete salvation which is promised to us on the coming of the Lord. We want the body to be saved as well as the spirit. We want the spirit to be completely saved, in every particular. We want the soul to be joined with the body again, so that we shall be a whole man, and yet a divine trinity, body, soul, and spirit engaged for ever in the blessed and ceaseless service of Jesus. We want also that this earth shall be saved—that this earth, groaning with sin and sorrow, burdened with perpetual and ever-increasing crime, should be saved; and it will only be saved with the coming of Jesus Christ our King. He did indeed come to bear the burden of our sins, and He has borne it. Now He is bearing to-day the cares of his people. If Jehovah once laid on Him the iniquity of us all, the Church is ever laying on Him the cares of all. "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." He has been the sin-bearer, He is now the care-bearer. He wants to be this one thing more—the glory-bearer: and He shall yet indeed "bear the glory" (Zech. vi. 12). Shall we not hasten that glorious day when salvation shall be completed, when Christ shall have fulfilled all his holy blessed purposes of peace, "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus!"

There is another reason why we should pray this prayer. We want not only salvation, but we want

THE GLORY OF CHRIST TO BE SHARED.

Turn to Colossians iii. 3, 4: "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." We do not want to have it "hid" any longer. In this next verse we see why we should pray this prayer. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory." We want not only now to be with Him in spirit, but to be with Him in person and manifested glory. We have been with Him in the shadows, with Him in the sorrows and sins of this life, in its dangers and trials and temptations. We have lived with Him in the discipline of this earthly state. We want to live with Him in glory, when all tears shall be wiped away, when God shall be all in all.

And Christ Himself yearns for the day when He shall share his glory with his people. It was his own special prayer, "Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am, that they may behold My glory." It is the only time that Christ said to his Father, "I will!" We have even at present glimpses of the glory—passing glimpses, just as when the sun shines out upon the landscape, and reveals in wondrous detail all its beauties, but it quickly passes away. We want the glimpses to remain; to be complete; be perpetual and universal.

There is a third reason why we should pray this prayer;

THAT HIS LIKENESS MAY BE ATTAINED.

We find this in 1 John iii. 2: "We know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He his." We want to be like Jesus! "Behold, now are we the sons of God." Yes, even to-day, purchased by his precious blood, and inhabited by the Holy Spirit. But we want to be "like Him." All these little things which disturb our peace, all these troubles and afflictions and frictions of life, we want to have left behind, and Christ to be all in all in each of us. We want to see Jesus, that we may be like Him, and our prayer for his coming breaks through even the alleluias of heaven: "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus!" "We would see Jesus," not merely to satisfy that immortal thirst of our being, but also that we may be changed into his image. I know not anything higher and holier than this—that the children of God may bear the same image that Jesus does. The Lord Jesus is "the express image" of his Father, and we shall be the express image of Jesus. Oh, day of glory, when Christ shall come, and we shall be changed into his image!

There is a further reason why we should earnestly pray this prayer day by day:

THAT OUR BODY MAY BE TRANSFIGURED.

Turn to Phil. iii. 20: "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." He shall yet bring this body into entire subjection. We know often, it may be daily, how the spirit is willing, but the flesh is very weak. Oh, we yearn for the time when this poor body of humiliation, disgraced, and filled with evil and sin, should be transformed into the Divine image; when that which has been such a hindrance to us in the past, shall yet be a Divine vehicle for every holy thought, every blessed and spontaneous desire, to carry out the will of God, like ministering servants ordained by God Himself!

There is still another reason why we should pray for the Lord to come. The place where we are to be is

THE SAME PLACE WHERE JESUS IS.

Read John xiv. 7: "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." "Then were they glad, because they were in the desired haven." The Lord cannot rest until all his children are with Him. If you had someone very dear to you in one place, and you were in another, it would be your constant desire that you should be brought together. How much more is it the desire of the Lord that He should have his redeemed children round Him. The trumpet shall yet sound, and the dead in Christ shall be the first to hear his footsteps; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up to meet Him in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

There is yet a further reason why we should pray this prayer. We find it in what we may call the second Advent Epistle, Jude 24: "That He may present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." It is that He may have

THE JOY OF PRESENTING US FAULTLESS.

Would you deprive Him of that joy? He wants the presentation day to come when He shall present us to his Father in the presence of the holy angels, faultless! "Behold, I and the children whom Thou hast given Me." Faultless! If you were educating children, how it would be the great desire of your heart to see those children grow up holy and good, and full of energy, strong in intellect and power of every kind. How you would yearn for the day when they should stand before you complete, so far as anything on earth may be complete. And do you not think that the Lord Jesus, who is educating his children with such infinite pains and patience, is also yearning for the day when He shall present us faultless before his Father? It shall be "exceeding joy" to Him. The holy angels shall say, "These are poor fallen ones, redeemed by the blood of the Lord Jesus, now faultless!" The angels of evil shall see, the devil shall see that they are those whom he had led down into the dark paths of sin, but Christ hath rescued them, and they are now standing faultless before the throne.

The expression is a very rich one, "present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." How much it requires on his part to keep us from falling. Look at Peter, taking that very little walk between the vessel and the person of the Lord Jesus. "Come," He said to Peter, and he walked one or two footsteps, and then began to sink, because he began to see. The Lord immediately thrust out his hand, rescued him, and lifted him up. He is always doing that with us in troubles and difficulties just as we are falling. "My foot had well nigh slipped, but thy mercy, O Lord, held me up." But He wants to have done with this. It is a long, wearisome task: his children are so perpetually failing, bringing discredit on Him, after all He has given and done for them. Do not you feel with Him? He is educating us with infinite pains, these 20, 30, 40, 50, 60 years perhaps. Oh, the pains He is now taking with us! He wants it all to be over. He is looking forward to that day when He shall present us faultless, his whole redeemed Church, faultless before the throne with exceeding joy. Would you deprive Him of that joy? That joy is not yet fulfilled.

There is yet one final reason why we should pray this prayer. It is a blessed reason, and we read of it in 2 Thess. i. 10. That He may be ADMIRED IN HIS SAINTS.

Surely that is a thing we could not have supposed could ever happen—that He should be "admired in his saints!" The Lord first attracts our looks upon Himself; He wants us to admire Him, and then He wants that He should be admired in us—that we should bring Him glory. Jesus puts all his glory on us; He says He wants to be admired in his people. This is the heaven of my soul. I am my Father's heaven, the brightness of my Father's glory. And Christ is our heaven, indeed, but the Church is Christ's heaven. When all sin shall be put away, then we shall give forth the image of Jesus in perpetuity.

Do you think the Lord is being admired in you now. Do you think anyone who really knows you thinks you are in any degree like Him? How much do they see of the image of Jesus in you? Do you say when you see anger repressed, "Thank God, that was something like Jesus"? Do you say when pity and compassion are shown, "There, that is something like Jesus"? Do you recognise the spirit of Jesus in your dear ones when you see them taking a humble place? When sorrow and trial are on those dear to you, or heavy care, and you see them take it up for the sake of Christ, do you say, "That is the mark of Jesus"? Is there any sign, any reflection of Jesus, not a vague shadow here and there, but a blessed tone through your whole life? As we gaze into this looking-glass of the Word, and read of this Divine life, and see by contrast what we are in ourselves in the sight of God, can we recognise anything of Christ in ourselves and others? Is it the aim of our whole being that Christ should be admired in us? Let us give up being admired by other people. They would not admire us if they knew us. If people do admire us, it is because they do not know us thoroughly. But let us yield ourselves up to the blessed Master to work his own image in us, so that it shall be apparent to others, and He shall be admired in us even now. And then we shall pray this prayer, "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus! I want Thee to be admired in me, even in me."

WHY SHOULD HE NOT COME?

This is my closing word. We have been inquiring why He should come, and I have given you seven reasons why He should come, from his own blessed Word. Now there is one reason why He does not come. What is it? "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Peter iii. 9). It is those who are yet outside, still to be brought in, it is those who keep back the Lord. He stays that all may hear and heed his blessed call, "Come!" He stays the praises of heaven that He may still catch the prayer of the prodigal; He stays his chariot wheels that any who will may yet leap up into it, and be safe. He cannot bear to ride over them, and He stays his wheels that we may help them in. He stays the alleluias of the angels—that He may hear the tear of the penitent fall. He stays all his glory from fully shining out, yea, He keeps it back that He may yet welcome the outcast sinner. It is not that He is slack concerning his promise; but He waits that more of his property may be saved.

Yes, you see people passing by you in the streets, you think how weary and anxious or how stained with sin they look, and you think what will happen to these poor souls when Jesus comes? Ah, why does not Jesus come? He is waiting that they should not perish. He can wait for his glory, but He cannot bear that any should perish. He would have us all come to the place of repentance. For this He delays his own glory, waiting and yearning that "all"—I like that word all—should come to repentance.

It is time then to be up and doing. Let us live in this spirit of Jesus, and pray this prayer, "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus." And, as we pray it, let us be ceaselessly moving out of his way every obstacle. Jesus is saying, "Here is someone perishing, I cannot suffer my chariot wheels to crush him. I cannot come until he has repented." O Church of Christ, arise, and take out of his way all the perishing ones; take them out of the way of his approaching wheels, and lift them up into the chariot of the Lord of glory. The Lord is at hand, He is very near! May God speedily fulfil this prayer; and let us now again pray it unitedly once more, "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus!"

"FAITHFUL AND TRUE."—1.

DEAR SIR,—I have endured "a great fight of afflictions," and would testify to the loving power of a "keeping" God, and to many loving answers vouchsafed to my poor prayers. As you recently observed, "many of our best experiences are too sacred and secret," concerning others beside ourselves. One I would, however, mention, which occurred a few years ago.

I was robbed of a five-pound note in London. To me this was a great loss just at that time, as rent was due, and I had five children depending almost entirely upon me for maintenance and education. I was also far from strong. I laid the matter before God, and, strangely enough—I do not know why—was led to use these words: "O Lord, for thy dear Son's sake, be pleased to restore to me the money in my sack's mouth!" In a very short time five pounds was sent me by a stranger, then another five pounds, and then two pounds more from a friend. Thus I was compensated for my original loss, and had seven pounds more than at first.

What could I do but fall down and worship before Him whose name is "Faithful and True" unto all generations. To Him be all the praise.—Yours faithfully,

A Tried Mother.

Y.W.C.A., Brighton.—The anniversary of the Institute (the Central Branch) was recently celebrated by two meetings in the Royal Pavilion. Much interest was manifested in the growth of the work during the past year. Rev. J. Dixon and Dr. Donald Fraser, in eloquent words, showed the great necessity of this and similar associations for the benefit of young women. In the evening the members and their friends, to the number of 450, assembled for one hour's social intercourse, and afterwards addresses from Rev. J. B. Figgis and Mr. E. J. Mitchell. The latter gentleman has since given most earnest, faithful Gospel addresses.

GRIPPING AND SLIPPING.

SCENES IN THE LIFE OF A PRIVATE SOLDIER.

LOOKING into my room one afternoon, an officer's servant told me that he thought Private Schofield wished to see me.

“And who is Private Schofield?”

“Why, that recruit who, on his first pay-day, when the men asked him to accompany them to the canteen, told them that he had never tasted drink in his life, and never would. Have you not heard of him?”

“I have not. Does he belong to your company?”

“He does, and No. 8 never owned a better man. In his room they call him one of the ‘holy boys,’ but I don't think he belongs to that squad yet, though I daresay he is looking that way.”

“What makes you think so?”

“Well, I know he hates swearing and that sort of thing, and last night when someone spoke of you as a ‘chest-thumper,’ he at once said he would like to have a talk with you. Shall I send him down?”

“You may. In a few minutes I shall be going as far as the firing-range; tell him to dress and come with me.”

On our way to the range Private Schofield and I talked of matters chiefly connected with soldiering, but when we had reached a secluded spot and were seated, I inquired if he had anything particular he wished to say to me.

“They call you a ‘chest-thumper,’” he replied, “and I have been long enough in the regiment to know that ‘chest-thumper’ is slang for Christian. Now I am not a Christian, but wish to become one, and it occurred to me that a conversation with you might help me.”

“I hope you will not be disappointed, my young friend, though, perhaps, I am not the best ‘chest-thumper’ you could apply to. But before we proceed, let us kneel down and ask God's guidance.”

Here we uncovered, knelt down on the grass, and asked the Great Wisdom-giver to be with us.

“May I ask,” I said, after being re-seated, “what has led you to think of becoming a Christian?”

“The explanation is this: I have been well brought-up, and the filthy language of the barrack-room is almost more than I can stand. I know that the non-commissioned officer in charge ought to put a stop to it, but, unfortunately, so far as I can see, he enjoys it. Now, I feel that one of two things must take place, if I am to remain a soldier: I must either go down to the level of my comrades and speak and act as they do, or, in order to be able to bear what I complain of, I must become a real Christian.”

“Have you made any effort to become a Christian?” “I have.”

“What have you done?” “I have prayed.”

“And has your praying been of service to you?” “I am afraid not.”

“Have you tried anything else?” “Yes; I have repented.”

“And has your repentance helped you at all?” “Not that I am aware of. Indeed, I seem to be further from the right thing than ever I was.”

“It appears, then, that your praying has failed, and that your repentance has failed. Has any other course been suggested?”

“Yes; I was told one night in the Soldiers' Home that I had nothing to do but believe, and I am sure I have done that.”

“And has your believing given you any relief?” “It has not.”

“Have you tried anything else?” “What else is there to try?”

“Were there nothing else, you must see at a glance that your case would be hopeless; for everything you speak of has, according to your own showing, been of no use. Answer me this one question, and think before doing so. Have you ever honestly tried Christ?”

“‘Have—I—ever—honestly—tried—Christ?’”

“Such is the question I wish you to answer. Now take time to it.”

“‘Have—I—ever—honestly—tried—Christ?’ That question never was put to me before, and I am inclined to think that I have been trying to pray, and repent, and believe, without any reference to Christ at all.”

“That is just what I think you have been doing. I did so myself for a considerable time, and there are few serious inquirers who have not made the same blunder. In the first verse of the fifth chapter of the Romans we read of a Christian possession called ‘peace with God.’ Do you know anything of this peace?”

“I do not. The thought of God fills me with terror instead of peace.”

“There must be a reason for that. Why should the thought of God fill you with terror?”

“Because I am a sinner. When I think of my sins and then of the prospect of meeting God, I am overwhelmed with fear.”

“But what is it you fear?”

“Punishment, I suppose. All sin deserves punishment, and sins against light such as I have been guilty of must merit punishment of the severest kind.”

“Do you believe that Jesus died for sinners?” “Yes.”

“Do you believe that Jesus died for great sinners?” “Yes.”

“Do you believe that Jesus died for those who have sinned against the clearest light?” “He must have done so.”

“Do you believe that when Jesus was on the cross he was thinking of you?” “Thinking of me!”

“Yes; thinking of you.” “That never struck me before; but as I am one of the sinners for whom He died, He must have been thinking of me. The thought is new to me, but it must be true.”

“Has it ever occurred to you that when Jesus was on the cross, and thinking about you, He resolved, rather than want your company in heaven, to bear the penalty or punishment which your sins, great and small, have merited?”

“I have not thought of the matter in that way; yet it seems reasonable.”

“Well, then, if Jesus has borne the penalty of your sins, why, in view of meeting God, should you be afraid of that penalty? According to Paul, Jesus, the Innocent, was made to be sin for you, that you—the guilty—might be made the righteousness of God in Him; or, in other words, Jesus has been treated as if He had been guilty, that you might be treated as if you were righteous. He thus takes your sin with its consequences that you may have the benefit of his righteousness, and all that his righteousness merits. Will you promise to ponder over that view of the case?”

“I will.”

“Then, as I have something to do on the range, you may now go back to the camp, but before we separate let us again kneel down and pray.”

Again we uncovered and bowed before the Heavenly Father, whose ear was not deaf to our cry.

That night, or rather, I should say, early next morning, Private Schofield was made free. “I pondered,” he said, “over Jesus as my Sin-bearer, and as I pondered the light broke in upon me. In my thoughts I was at the cross, and as I looked up I could say with confidence, ‘Jesus loved me and gave Himself for me;’ and when from the cross I looked forward to the judgment and remembered that the Judge ‘loved me, and gave Himself for me,’ the fear with which I had been tormented left me. Jesus took my sin, and I get his righteousness. Precious Gospel!”

A few weeks after his conversion, Schofield and I separated, but in less than twelve months we met again in a soldiers' prayer-room in India. I shall never forget that night. A civilian living at the station had delivered an address, and then came several testimonies.

“Do you think,” whispered Schofield, “that I would be considered presumptuous if I spoke?”

“Certainly not, brother,” I replied. “By all means tell us how you have been getting on since we parted.”

Then, rising to his feet, he spoke as follows:—

“Comrades, I cannot tell you how thankful I am that there is a prayer-room here. There is no such place for our soldier friends at home. I am thankful also to find so many believers connected with this battalion; but, as I listened to the speakers, I felt convinced that some of you, at least, are in the condition I was in up to a few days before we embarked. I was happy one day, and miserable the next. I had no doubt of my conversion, no doubt that God had forgiven me on the ground of Christ's atonement, but my experience was most unsatisfactory. Meeting with a Christian lady one day, I opened up my mind to her, and during our conversation I was convinced that I had been looking too exclusively at my relation to God, and so far forgetting his relation to me. On my bedcot that night I could not sleep, and begged deliverance from my chequered experience, and while I was praying, my Saviour appeared to me in a sort of waking dream. ‘Let Me tell you,’ He said, ‘why you are happy one day and miserable the next. You are always trying to take hold of my big, strong hand with your tiny, weak hand, and you grip and slip, grip and slip. When you grip, you are happy; but when you slip, you are the reverse. Come now, and put your weak hand within my strong hand, and let Me hold you.’ I knew at once what the Lord meant, and did what He bade me. I gave up my hand to Him, and his strong, loving hand closed over it, and He has held me ever since. I am not now keeping Jesus; He is keeping me. I am not now keeping my heart; Jesus stands sentry over it and keeps it for me. When trouble springs up I do not, as formerly, say, How shall I get over it? but, How will Jesus get me over it? and there is as much difference between the two experiences as there is between the two questions. My will is in Christ's keeping, and so long as this is the case He is responsible for me. Comrades, there is no reason why any of us should be in the gripping and slipping condition, for nothing gives our Saviour greater pleasure than to have all the holding and keeping entrusted to Himself.”

Private Schofield was much esteemed among his comrades, not merely because he was an educated young man, but because his religion was felt to be real. “There are not many Schofields knocking about” was a common saying even among the most careless, but when anyone said to him, as was often the case, “You are a good young man, Schofield,” he would, in his quiet way, reply, “In that you are mistaken. In me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; but I am in the hand of the good Lord, where you might be were you but willing.” Then, opening his little Testament, he would talk of sin, of atonement, of God's forgiveness, of righteousness and strength. Having lost his health on the hot plains, he was sent to a convalescent depôt among the hills, and was not long there when he was obliged to go to hospital. He never recovered from his illness. Previous to this I had purchased my discharge, and was now engaged in the Lord's work 1200 miles from him. I heard, however, of his triumph. An old minister—a German—connected with the American Presbyterian Mission, visited him frequently, and also a lady who is now in Calcutta. To the latter Schofield, referring to the writer, said, just a little before he died, “Tell him that the remembrance of our conversation on the range at C—— is very precious to me, and that I am not gripping and slipping, but held by the strong hand of Christ, kept by the power of God unto salvation.”

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

Women in the Church.—A notable event has happened, which should constitute a memorable new departure in Church of England history. For the first time the Bishop of London ordained three ladies as deaconesses in St. Michael's Church, Paddington. Deaconesses, indeed, have existed, but this ceremony has not taken place before in church; and this gives altogether a new importance to their official status, which has hitherto lacked real recognition. In the Established Church such a proceeding will give an authoritative sanction to the appointment of these clerical sisters. If the Order of Deaconesses can be kept from the Romish proclivities which are the peculiar danger of female cleresy, they may be a vast power for good amongst the women, and even the men of England.—Christian Commonwealth.

POVERTY AND ITS REMEDIES.

IN a letter to The Pall Mall Gazette, evoked by the recent disturbances in London, the well-known Vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, E., urges, as we have often done in these columns, that what is wanted is not so much relief, and a spasmodic development of "fads," but, along with charity, personal service on the part of the rich and the upper classes. Says Mr. Barnett:—

> They must cease to isolate themselves in one part of London, and in future aim rather at sharing than at giving their wealth. They must live nearer the poor, so that they may be known, not through descriptions by Mr. Hyndman, but by their own actions. . . . The doctrine may be hard to bear, but there will be no remedy for the distress, and for the hatred which underlies the distress, till the rich are content to know the poor, and resolve to possess no luxury which they do not share. There is no nostrum, save in the self-devotion of each individual who now recognises the facts of society.

These are brave words, and, being the utterance of a man who has spent the best part of a life-time in the East-end amongst the poor, they are deserving of more than mere passing consideration. There would soon be an improvement visible in greard to the surroundings of the poor, if men would volunteer, as Edmund Denison did, to move eastward with the view of knowing them, not through societies and almoners only, but by personally taking up their troubles, sharing their joys, and looking after the local interests which they are too busy and too weary to watch. There are hundreds of ways in which willing men and women, who feel that they are not called to direct mission work, may labour for and with the poor, and in so doing imitate the Master who never was careless as to the temporal needs of those whom He came to save.

We have it upon the authority of God's Word that "much food is in the tillage of the poor." In these days of terrible overcrowding in our cities and towns, with all its consequent evils, it may be well to bear the statement in mind when we discuss questions affecting the condition of the labouring classes. Despite all that has been written by Lady Verney and others who are opposed to small holdings and allotments, there can be but little doubt that we shall have to fall back upon some large scheme under which the poor will have something to till, if we are to stop that steady intramural influx, which not only brings down wages in towns, but adds daily to the number of those who, starving in the midst of luxury, are drawn into the maelstrom of crime and degradation. In connection with this branch of the subject, we have read with pleasure the following paragraph:—

> Mr. Samuel Morley has adopted the allotment system on his estate at Leigh, near Tunbridge Wells. He has cut up the land into plots of about twelve rods, and these he lets to bonâ fide working men at the rate of sixpence per rod per annum. The experiment has proved an unqualified success.

To all who are interested in this question—and what Christian can afford to remain careless with respect to the sufferings and surroundings of the poor?—we would commend for careful perusal, as illustrating that portion of Proverbs xiii. 23 which we have quoted, a little pamphlet by Mr. Frederic Impey, bearing the now historic title, "Three Acres and a Cow" (Swann, Sonnenschein & Co.). The brochure gives sufficient evidence to show conclusively that there are means of dealing with those pressing questions of overcrowding, of starvation wages, of pauperism, and of vice, which as yet have been applied to only a very limited extent. They are likely to be singularly successful in checking the depopulation of our villages and counties, and the startling increase of poverty and crime in our crowded towns. The interesting experiments to which Mr. Impey refers can be carried out without any interference, Parliamentary or otherwise, with vested interests in land, and, so far as they have been tried, the result has been such as to warrant their extension, in the hope of similar success in other localities.

Higher interests than merely temporal ones depend upon the mode in which these questions are approached and dealt with. The Christian man, therefore, is deeply concerned in their solution, and should by every means in his power endeavour to bring about a condition of things under which our poorer classes may have at least an opportunity of living in cleanliness and modest comfort.

HEART-CIRCUMCISION.

"THERE never has been a saint," says Calvin, "who, surrounded with a body of death, could attain to such a degree of love as to love God with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his mind." That which is not possible with man is possible with God. God has declared in so many words: "The Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live." These are the very terms in which God sets forth his highest demand in the way of obedience; employed here as a promise, they show that the grace of God which bringeth salvation is equal to the total exigencies of our case. While it is a question of what we can achieve, we are still under law, which sets forth the Divine requirement without any proffer of Divine aid. But what the law could not do, because of our unconsenting and incompatible nature, that the grace of God, conveying the power of God to the very heart of our corrupt nature, secures, when there is the adequate faith on our part.

Faith in Christ, for the work of sanctification implies the complete collapse of faith in one's own power of attaining. The body has no more power to hinder in the work of sanctification than the soul gives it. It has great power to hinder so long as it is met simply by our own resolutions, efforts, and unbelieving prayers; it laughs to scorn our attempts to bind it with chains, just as the man who dwelt among the tombs burst the bonds laid upon him. But when confronted by the power of Him who cast out the legion of devils, its power collapses, dies, and is not. This is beautifully shown in the transition from Romans vii. to viii. In Romans vii. the conflict is between the evil incarnate in us and our perception of the law as holy, just and good, and the latter continually fails to secure its observance; but passing to Romans viii., the body of sin and death finds itself in the presence of the Holy Spirit, God the Spirit, the Executive of Christ in the soul, who accomplishes by the revelation of God's love in us, all that the law aimed at.

"But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." This refers not to a future resurrection of the material body, but to such an operation of the Spirit of God within us as shall make all our faculties, the physical included, to be perfectly at the disposal of our sanctified will, in other words, controlled by the Spirit of God. For the work of quickening referred to relates to what is accomplished by the Spirit of God while He is dwelling in us. "If ye through the Spirit do mortify the body, ye shall live." "That ye may know what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the greatness of the power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in heavenly places."

Not only here in Romans, but elsewhere Paul seeks to indicate the blessedness of discovering the all-sufficiency of Christ's grace with reference to the overcoming of evil within us. "For I, through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God." As he went on trying to attain to conformity with God's revealed will, he became aware of the breadth and spirituality of the law of God, requiring him to be perfect in love as God is, and then he soon became aware of his utter inability to achieve this, and the next step was to learn that the same Saviour whose blood atoned for his sinfulness, offered to be his complete Deliverer from sin by the power of the proffered Spirit. So he says, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live (I am not a mere dead, impotent thing); yet not I, but Christ liveth in me (Christ is my life, the Vanquisher of my body of death); and the life which I live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."

Now how strangely it reads, "There never was a saint who could love God with all his heart, with all his soul, with all his mind." Calvin was a wise man, with a deep insight into the things of God, and competent in many respects to teach his generation, but he missed seeing that, while man was not able to rectify his heart, soul and mind, the Gospel yet revealed a power adequate to that end. He did not believe in a Purgatory, a place between earth and heaven where the incomplete saint could stop and be made whole before entering the place where nothing that defileth may enter, and yet failed to see that this essential preliminary could be secured in this life. When we abandon utterly the idea of self-rectification, and put our whole trust in Jesus as a Saviour who first, expiated our past sins by his death, and second, vanquishes the sinful tendencies of our nature, by the Holy Spirit who sheds abroad the love of God in our heart, we find out the all-sufficiency of divine grace. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."

MILLWALL JUVENILE AND ADULT MISSION.

THIS Mission was founded about five years ago, and has been signally owned of God to the salvation of many. It was started at first for juvenile work only, but the conversion of boys and girls led to the conversion of parents and other relatives. The work gradually prospered, until it was found necessary to hold Gospel services for adults.

A much larger mission hall is required in orde to meet the wants of the people, and to carry on the various branches of Christian effort in operation. The Mission is entirely unsectarian.

Mr. W. H. Massey has been appointed Superintendent of the Mission, and already his efforts have given a new stimulus to the work. It is proposed to commence a noonday prayer-meeting; probably a Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. will follow in the nea future. Any desirous of helping will be furnished with particulars either by Mr. H. White, 14, Pier-head, Millwall, Hon. Secretary; or Mr. F. Ballard, 4, Pier-head, Millwall, Treasurer.

A "FREE" PLATFORM.

THIS is an age of Conferences; but there are Conferences and Conferences. Many, indeed most, of the assemblies that meet under that designation, are simply occasions for the delivery of set addresses by carefully selected speakers. The root idea of the word Conference, viz., the courteous but untrammeled expression of opinion—even divergent opinion—on any given subject, is largely ignored. In some respects this plan has very decided advantages. Free discussion too often leads to unhappy bickerings, loss of temper, with a corresponding loss of edification, and the airing of "crotchets" by those who have espoused partial and immature notions of religious truth. On the other hand, it argues little for our spiritual attainments as professedly Christian communities, that we seem unable, as a rule, to meet and discuss topics on which we are not fully agreed, without breeding bad blood, dissension, and strife.

A praiseworthy attempt to set up "a free platform" is contemplated in a "British Congress of Christians." In a preliminary circular, signed by W. T. Moore, W. Durban, and Geo. Brooks, Kensington Chambers, 73, Ludgate-hill, E.C., these gentlemen announce that they were appointed a committee at a recent meeting of a number of Christians to arrange for a Conference "on lines not hitherto planned in England." It is suggested that it should be held in London some time during April, and the idea is that "there should be the utmost liberty of expression as far as this is in harmony with the rules of legitimate discussion." The subjects proposed to be submitted for consideration are as follows:—

(1) The Relations of Church and State.
(2) Is Christian Unity possible, and what is its true basis?
(3) Why do the Churches fail to interest the masses?
(4) The relation of the secular Press to religious life.
(5) What is the position in regard to futurity of those who are outside the pale of Christian profession?
(6) Social problems viewed in the light of the Gospel.
(7) Under the present condition of things, is the world growing better or worse?
(8) Do the times demand a new religious reformation?

In this programme there is certainly scope for the widest divergence of view. Though we are by no means sanguine as to the result, if this Conference should take place, we think the effort is worthy of being made, in the spirit of the apostolic maxim, "Forbearing one another in love."

AYAHS IN LONDON.

DEAR SIR,—An article, headed "Ayahs' Home," appeared in The Homeward Mail of February 9, calling attention to the fact that the house—No. 8, Duke-street, Aldgate—well known among old Indians as "Rogers's Ayahs' Home," was shortly to be pulled down for the widening of the street; and urging the necessity for such an institution in London. The present proprietors of the Home will not be able, for want of funds chiefly, to take another suitable house and carry it on any longer on their own responsibility, though hitherto it has been self-supporting.

The suggestion is made that a society should be formed for the purpose of opening another Home of the kind in this same neighbourhood, and carrying it on under the supervision of a committee of ladies and gentlemen. Having been accustomed for the last six or seven years to visit the present Home as "Missionary to the Asiatics in London," I can testify to the value and importance of the institution.—Yours truly, GEORGE SMALL.

Asiatic Strangers' Home, Limehouse.

"NEIGHBOUR SMITH."

"IF I know that my neighbour Smith thinks me a fool, I shall never shine in neighbour Smith's company." This saying has a world of philosophy in it. But, alas, how many "Neighbour Smiths" there are! And what mischief they work! Many a boy who, with due encouragement at home. might have become a useful man, has grown up to be a "nobody," just because his father despised his ability. We have known ministers, too, who could never "be themselves" among their own people. There were a few "Neighbour Smiths" in the pew, and the poor men knew it. Try as he would they could not do their best before them. Oh, this "Neighbour Smith!" He has blighted myriads of hopeful lives, and spoilt many a faithful man who, but for his malign presence, would have proved an able minister of Jesus Christ.

The sad thing is that the greater part of us are so prone to act "Neighbour Smith" to someone else, and that we find it extremely difficult to avoid doing so. It is not easy to attain to that blessed charity which "hopeth all things." We need to watch well against a baleful habit of depreciating criticism, born of a subtle and unsuspected egotism and uncharitableness, which qualifies us perfectly for the rôle of "Neighbour Smith."

Sometimes, however, we play this part through our extreme anxiety for the moral improvement of children and others who may be under our care. Out of sheer concern for them, we learn to see their faults out of proportion to their virtues and possibilities. Insensibly both our faith in, and our respect for, them is lessened, until we have become a veritable "Neighbour Smith." As a chilling March wind restrains the waiting woodlands from unfolding the fresh young splendour of the spring, spoiling much of its delicate beauty, so "Neighbour Smith" by his very presence retards the development, and blights the beauty, of many a fresh young heart. We respectfully invite "Neighbour Smith" to imitate the April sunshine rather than the March wind; for nothing grows well in the frost or in the shade.

BEDFORD INSTITUTE, SPITALFIELDS.

THE nineteenth annual report of this Society contains a very gratifying account of successful Christian effort. Associated with the Institute which is carried on by the Society of Friends, are five other agencies, one at Hart's-lane Hall, Bethnal-green; Meeting-house, Ratcliff; Peel Meeting-house, Clerkenwell; Meeting-house, Deptford; the Memorial Buildings, Bunhill-fields. In addition there are Convalescent Homes at Epping and Folkestone. The total attendance of men, women, and children at the First-day (or Sunday) schools during the year was 2,052, and the total number of teachers is 170.

One interesting fact is exhibited by the statistics of savings banks at these several centres of spiritual life. No less a sum than £1455 8s. 1d. remained on deposit, at the close of last year, in the names of 570 depositors. That such a spirit of thriftiness should have been cultivated as is represented by these figures, speaks well for the moral influence exerted, and the results, in a spiritual sense, must be incalculably greater.

The evangelistic efforts comprehend every known means for sowing the Gospel seed. On Sundays and week-days the Gospel is preached both indoors and out. There are tea-meetings for their own members, and breakfast-meetings for the outcasts. We are especially glad to note how strongly the value of Temperance work is recognised in the speeches made at the annual meeting, and exhibited in Temperance societies and Blue-ribbon bands, and Band of Hope meetings, which form so prominent a feature in the work throughout. The Committee appeal for larger contributions, to enable them to carry forward the work with energy, and to open the new hall in Hart's-lane, Bethnal Green-road, free of debt.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THE ANXIOUS.

By CHARLES SHIRREFFS, ABERDEEN.

REMEMBER that you are fellow-sinners. You were, you deserve to be, in the same condemnation, so be firm and true when you think of and look to God; be tender and patient and loving with your friend—No force—never!

(2) Be mindful that this is the work of the Spirit, and that the Spirit is at work before you. This surely will keep you humble, as it ought to keep you hopeful. Lean all your weight on Christ. Have the glory of God before you. "The wind bloweth where it listeth."

(3) Try to discover quietly the difficulty. Doctrinal it may be, or practical, or perchance an unwillingness to give up all.

(4) Don't lecture; put the Bible into his hand, get him to read aloud—you question. "The entrance of Thy Word gives light." Show his need—God's provision—his sinfulness—his helplessness—Christ's sufficiency.

(5) As Christ's ambassador, throw the responsibility on the person. Here is God's gift—accept—refuse. "Be ye reconciled to God" (2 Cor. v. 20, 21). Be true, be natural, don't humour pride, don't fawn before position—be firm, respectful, solemn.

(6) Don't say he is saved. God will reveal his own work in his own time and way.

(7) Warn not to confuse the work of Chirst for him with the Spirit in him. We stand on what Christ has done (Gal. iii. 13), here is God's Word for it—let people say their say!

(8) While with the heart man believes, with the mouth confession is made. So advise in humility and gratitude, giving God the glory (Rom. x. 9; 2 Cor. ix. 15; 1 Cor. iii. 21—23).

(9) Show that the Saviour claims our all. He is Lord. He is also keeper: (1) by his peace our hearts and thoughts in the present (Phil. iv. 7); (2) by his power, unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time (1 Pet. i. 5). Ours to commit all (1 Pet. iv. 19).

(10.) In all and through all "grasp the faithfulness of God" (Mark xi. 22).—The Reaper.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. GOODELL, ST. LOUIS.

THE sudden and unexpected death, while yet in the prime of life, of this well-known American pastor, has awakened widespread regret. He was very earnest and active in forwarding all evangelical and evangelistic movements; he rendered hearty assistance to Mr. Payson Hammond in a Gospel campaign in St. Louis. He was a voluminous contributor to American religious periodicals, and will be much missed in many circles. Five thousand people are stated to have followed his remains to the grave.

REV. HUGH STOWELL BROWN.

After a short illness, Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, of the Baptist Church, Myrtle-street, Liverpool, died last week, in the sixty-third year of his age. Having begun life as a railway engineer, he subsequently went into training with a view of becoming a clergyman of the Church of England; but, being unable to accept the doctrines contained in the Liturgy, he seceded to the Baptist denomination. In this sphere he wielded great influence far beyond the confines of Liverpool. As a lecturer on all kinds of subjects he was most popular, and he had a peculiar gift in attracting the sympathies of working men. He did much to promote evangelistic missions in that city, and his assistance was freely given in every philanthropic enterprise, especially those for the elevation of the working classes. His lectures were delivered in many parts of the United Kingdom, as well as in the United States.

Mr. Wookey in Glasgow.—This earnest evangelist has been in Glasgow for a week, and his labours have been greatly blessed. His audiences have included some four hundred sailors, a throng of poor people in James Morrison-street hall, the Blackfriars branch of the Foundry Boy's Society, a meeting in the Christian Institute (which will be long remembered), four hundred mill girls, a gathering of young women, &c. On each occasion a deep impression was made, and it is believed many decided for Christ, while the movement for social purity has been greatly strengthened. A correspondent states that Mr. Wookey's visit has been productive of very much good in the important city of Glasgow.

For the Young.

LITTLE KATIE.

DOWN a quiet street, close to the river in a little Hampshire town, lived Katie H——, with her father and mother, her sister Florrie, and three little brothers.

Katie was a lively, bright little girl, nine years old. One day she paused in her childish games, and said, "What does conversion mean, mother?"

"'Conversion,' Katie. Why, it just means coming to Jesus. Don't you know He bore our sins on the cross, and anyone can now come to God by Him for pardon. When we come to Him, then we are converted."

"Yes," said Katie, thoughtfully, "I see, and I do believe that, mother. I suppose, then, I am converted?"

"Certainly, if you really put your trust in Him."

Oh! how glad Katie's mother was that her little girl had given her heart to Jesus. Katie gave something more, she gave her lips too; very often she got the children together to pray with them and for them, that they too might love the Saviour. Little Katie went to school every day; she had very hard lessons to learn, but she tried her best, and hoped she would gain a prize. But when the prizes were given away she did not get one, and she was so disappointed. "Oh! mother," she said, crying, "I did not get a prize, and I am so sorry."

"Never mind, my little Kitty," said her mother, gently comforting her; "if you get a prize in heaven—a golden crown, there! won't that be enough?"

"It will, mother; oh, it will;" and the child was glad and pacified at once.

Turning over the leaves of her Bible one day, Katie exclaimed, "Oh, mother, here is a beautiful text. Do listen—'My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not.' Fancy God speaking to little children like me, mother."

Katie felt that was God's voice to her, and so she tried every day to please Him and do his will. Very soon God saw that this little child of his had learnt nearly all the lessons He had given her to learn, and so He sent a messenger to call her home.

It was one day last June she first fell ill; such a trying cough she had, and nothing seemed to do it any good. So Mrs. H—— had to send for the doctor. He watched her closely for some time, and then said to her mother that little Katie could not live long; he hardly expected she would be with them at Christmas time.

That was a sad day for Mrs. H——, but when Katie heard the doctor's verdict she was so glad. 'Oh! that is good news," she said.

"Aren't you afraid to die?" asked a friend.

"Oh, no," she answered, "I'm quite ready. I'm not a bit afraid. Jesus died for me. Oh! it would be such a dreadful thing if I grew up, and wandered away from Jesus."

Days followed, full of pain and suffering to Kitty, and often, when her cough was incessant and sleep went from her, she became very irritable indeed.

"My darling," said her mother one night, "you must really tell Jesus how cross you are, and do ask Him to make you patient." Kitty did not answer; she kissed her mother, and, putting her head down on her pillow, said good-night.

Next morning Mrs. H—— was tidying up the sick-room, when the child called her to her bedside.

"Mammy," she said, "I did what you told me."

"What was that, my Kitty?"

"Why, I just told Jesus that I was cross, and I said, 'Lord, make me patient;' and then He came, mother, and made me so happy, and took all the cross feeling away."

And indeed He did, for the child was never cross again.

Shortly before Katie's death she begged that her day-school teacher would come and see her, and bring all the children, too. Her mother said, "You are very ill, dear Katie; what do you want to see them for?"

"Oh, mother, I do so want to tell them that I love Jesus, and I want them to promise me that they will meet me in heaven."

Some came to see her, and listened while she pleaded with them to give their hearts to Jesus.

The child had one great sorrow, and it was this: Her father did not love the Saviour. "Oh! I do so want to speak to Daddy," she said; "will you ask him to come here?" Her father came quietly into her room. "Daddy," said the child, "please promise me three things: that you will give up the drink, that you won't scold mother, and that you will meet me in heaven."

"All right, child," answered her father, "all right."

"Oh, Daddy, promise me," pleaded the child earnestly, "promise me, my Daddy."

"Well, yes, I will."

"Oh, Daddy, that won't do. You must promise me faithfully to meet me there. Oh! do," she cried, sobbing bitterly.

"Yes; I will," said her father, touched to the heart by his little daughter's dying request.

"And you, Florrie," she said, turning to her sister, "you promise me too."

Florrie was so sad, and her heart so full, that she could not speak, and went out of the room. Then little Katie said: "Oh! please do all come, and sing my hymn—

"Jesus, my Lord, to Thee I cry,
Unless Thou help me I must die:
Oh! bring thy free salvation nigh,
And take me as I am."

But heavy hearts cannot sing, and little Katie would have sung almost alone had not a kind neighbour tried to join her.

Very soon He came Himself, and "gently took the little hand in his, and gave it room among the angel-harpers."

I had Katie's Testament in my hand this afternoon, and, turning over the leaves, I came to a page folded down. It was at these words: "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." I cannot but feel that Katie is echoing back to my young readers to-day the invitation of Jesus. Will you come? Then there will be nothing to fear, for, once we come to Him, "we have passed from death unto life." There is no more death.

A few weeks before Christmas (Nov. 13, 1885) little Katie was laid in the grave. Many friends followed her there, and all the Sunday-school children. Her grave was covered with wild flowers, gathered by loving hands, and from the country cemetery sweet songs of praise went up to God, for the happy entrance into "The city bright," of the little pilgrim.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

THE twenty-fourth band of children sailed for Canada last Thursday, and a fine, sturdy, intelligent set of sixty lads they were as could be picked out anywhere. The events of the last few weeks in various parts of the country have made those who espouse the cause of the Sheltering Homes doubly thankful that their labours have been directed for the past thirteen years to placing young people of both sexes in the broad lands of "Greater Britain" across the seas, where honest labour always pays, and industry and talent have a high road to success open before them. The lads who sailed last week in the ss. Circassian will, Mrs. Birt feels assured from the number of applications received last year in Canada, speedily find good situations and kind homes.

Some of the party are lads whose parents or grand-parents once held good positions, but through misfortune or early death have left their families helpless and unprovided for. In these cases there is a good foundation to build upon of intelligence and ability, and likely they will pioneer the way for others of their families. To some others the most fearsome thought would be their coming again under the power of their cruel and unnatural guardians. Others, again, are lonely wee creatures, seeming not to know a relative on earth, to whom the happy, cheerful life, and loving, interested friends at the Sheltering Home have been altogether a new revelation. Some of the band are going right up into British Columbia.

Pastoral Changes.—Rev. J. F. B. Tinling has resigned the pastorate of his church in Eastbourne. Rev. J. Train, of Buckhaven, Fife, has accepted a call to the church in Hull, of which the late Dr. Mackay was minister.

THE SECOND ADVENT.

By Rev. Dr. HORATIUS BONAR.

IT draweth near!
That day,—of days the day,—
For which the Bridegroom waits,
For which the virgins pray;
For which earth sighs, and hastes
To greet it on its way;
Asking, as on it comes,
Why this so long delay?
It draweth near at last!
Who shall its advent stay?

It hastes to rise!
That sun,—of suns the sun,—
Whose rising is the pledge
Of evil all undone,
Of darkness at an end,
And heavenly day begun;
The war of ages o'er,
And the last battle won.
It hasteth to arise,
Its glorious race to run.

It breathes o'er earth!
That balm-exhaling air,
In heaven's own odours steeped,
To a sick world to bear
The health of that pure realm,
Where sickness is not, where
True life has its abode,
And in which all things rare
Flourish, but never fade,
Divinely soft and fair.

It swelleth forth!
That song—of songs the song,—
Creation's melody,
From harps till now unstrung.
The new, sweet matin hymn,
As yet on earth unsung,
Poured in rich burst of praise
From every heart and tongue;
The anthem of a world
Redeemed from woe and wrong.

Behold, He comes!
And with Him comes the love
Which makes these wastes below
Like heaven of heavens above;
When round his central throne
Shall all creation move;
No atom out of place,
No will to swerve or rove;
Swayed by the silent breath
Of the eternal Dove.

He comes in power!
The King—of kings the King—
All righteousness and peace
In his right hand to bring;
Into the last abyss
Each rebel crown to fling;
Time's ages of misrule
To end; that now may spring
Order, and law, and light
Beneath his holy wing.

. . . . .

Thrice-happy earth!
Guilty, but now forgiven;
From which has been expelled
The all-defiling leaven.
Oh! what a day is thine,
The brightest of the seven!
The day of days, ere long
To be in mercy given,
When heaven shall be on earth,
And earth shall all be heaven.

Thrice-happy earth!
All perfect and all fair;
Which of the orbs above
May once with thee compare?
Gem of the universe!
The seat of beauty rare;
Dear home of love and truth,
Of all things perfect, where Reigneth the righteous King,
Creation's Lord and Heir.

Seaman's Mission, Yokohama.—A correspondent who lately visited this Mission under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Austin, says it is a comfortable, well-lighted, and well-kept place, where seamen and others of all nationalities are welcomed. He did not see a copy of THE CHRISTIAN among the literature supplied, and he thinks if some kind friends would send copies they would be highly appreciated.

MISSIONARY BREAKFAST AT OXFORD.

ON a recent Saturday morning a large gathering of seniors and juniors of Oxford University, 237 in number, assembled at the Clarendon Hotel, in response to the invitation of Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, rector of St. Aldate's, to breakfast, to meet the Bishop of Oxford, Rev. Handley Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, two veteran missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, and also Mr. C. W. Moule, tutor of C.C.C., Cambridge. Mr. CHRISTOPHER, before the conclusion breakfast, said the meeting was in harmony with the simultaneous meetings in connection with the Church Missionary Society which had been held all over the country. He gave, as an example of the power of influence which God could exert by means of one man, and as an encouragement to college tutors, a narrative of the work of the late Pastor Gosner, at Berlin. Gosner was a Roman Catholic priest until he was fifty-five. He then became a Protestant pastor at Berlin. But he did not begin the great work of his life until he was sixty-five. Christian students in the University of Berlin used to think it a privilege to be allowed to give Gosner some hours a week to train his candidates for missionary work. Mr. Start, an English clergyman of fortune, was at that time seeking missionaries in England in vain. Mr. Müller, of Bristol, told him of Pastor Gosner. Mr. Start hastened to Berlin. Thus God, in his Providence, brought the man with the money and the man with the men together. Gosner worked at this work of training missionaries from the age of sixty-five to that of eighty-five, at which age he died. He sent out 200 missionary workers, counting the wives, who were as devoted to the Lord and his work as their husbands.

Rev. E. HATCH said he had been asked to say something about Bishop Hannington, a member of this University, who had, they feared, recently passed away. Fifteen or sixteen years ago they had at St. Mary Hall one of the most good-natured and fun-loving undergraduates he had ever met. He took his degree and became ordained in ordinary course, and they heard of him as the incumbent of a pleasant parish in the south of England, but two or three years afterwards they were even more surprised than they were delighted to hear that he was at the head of a mission party going out into Central Africa. He conducted that mission with so much success that at the end of a comparatively brief time the Church Missionary Society proposed that he should become the bishop of all the newly-formed Christian churches in that vast district which he was exploring. But his health had almost completely broken down. When he came back he told him he had been stricken with fever thirty-seven times in one year. He recruited at home, but the call was too strong for him. The offer of the bishopric was again made; he accepted; he went out, and he had found that a missionary had to face other perils beside those of the jungle and the swamp; and after living the life of a Christian hero, he had died, they had very great reason to believe, the death of a Christian martyr. It had been the privilege of this University to have contributed in a single generation two names to the sacred roll of those who had died for the faith in distant lands.

Rev. H. C. G. MOULE said his interest in the news about the death of Bishop Hannington was deepened by the fact that a dear friend of his own, recently a student with him at Ridley Hall, Cambridge, was on his way across another of the so-called roads, the thousand-mile long roads which had to be traversed on foot as the one way of reaching the lake missions from the coast. His friend, Douglas Hooper, was on his way toiling, step by step, along another and less dangerous road at the Bishop's own desire. He need not say their interest was great on his account. He went out in the most absolutely unostentatious way, and he did not suppose many scores of people in this country knew of his going at all, or had taken any notice of it, but he could not but think of him, he trusted as amongst the living and working for the Saviour, with feelings which were not easy to express. It was but five or six years ago, that Mr. Hooper was a man more likely to be found on the Newmarket racecourse, than in the classroom, but by the grace of God he became a very different man within the last few years, and grew so rapidly into such height of Christian character and life and strength, that it was for himself a life-long benefit to have had anything whatever to do with his training for the ministry.

Mr. Moule, proceeding to speak of missions in China, said they had had at Oxford a remarkable visit within the past twelve months from some of the Cambridge members of the China Inland Mission. Among that company there were three very dear personal friends of his own. Of the vastness of China he need not remind them. China now seemed on the verge, as far as they could read the signs of the times, of developing into one of the great powers of the world. There was going to be from Pekin an active effort to centralise the forces of China, and in all probability to begin seriously the experiment of railroads. Meantime, what had Protestant missions done for China? He thought Professor Legge could say, from personal recollection, that, within forty-five years ago, all the known converts of American and English missions in China occupied one room, and did not crowd that, for there were just six. The English Episcopal Church landed no missionary in China until exactly forty years ago. The elder of his two brothers went out in 1857, and the younger in 1861, and they of course were now among the veterans in the field. What had been the result on the whole? Nothing to be very jubilant over, but certainly much to be thankful for. The number of the English and American converts together now amounted to something like 50,000, as against half a dozen forty-five years ago. In one mission of the Church Missionary Society, in the province of Fuh-Kien, there were some 2000 baptised members of the Church of Christ. He would solemnly and earnestly remind them not only of the explicit commands of our Lord and Master, about the evangelisation of all nations, and, therefore, of China, but in the simplest and most practical way to remind them of the need. He pointed to one absolute fact, that for the Chinese there was an absolute need of our Lord Jesus Christ. He was forcibly reminded of this by an interview he had three years ago, at Cambridge, with a very interesting young Japanese student, who had been sent by his Government to study both in England and in Germany, western political economy. He had now gone back to be professor of it at Tokio. He first met him in the inquiry-room, during a remarkable mission week, in Cambridge, in 1882, and they had a short talk over his own views and ideas of the faith. He had read, he said, the New Testament, and was beginning to read the Old; he found in it much to admire, but this above all, that, while they had many admirable precepts in the Buddhist and Confucian literature, they had no motive power, and we seemed to have that. Within a few days after that he heard that he had with great joy given his heart to Christ as his Lord and God, and he was shortly afterwards baptised in the church in which he (Mr. Moule) served in Cambridge in the presence of a remarkable assembly of representatives from the East and from the West. If he understood right from what he saw at Cambridge, the one great secret of the extraordinary influence that the young advocates of the China Inland Mission exercised was, that in appealing for missionary help they began by very strong and simple appeals, straight to the devotedness of the Christian's heart to his Lord and Master for his own Holy sake, and for it alone. They began with the question, "Have you laid yourself not at, but under the feet of Christ for his interests and purposes, and not your own?" That was the gist of the message with which they always began, and he could only say that its power in Cambridge was something of which he had never seen the like before. There was an extraordinary presence of Divine reality in the conscience and in the will, and though many were disappointed that more men had not actually gone out from Cambridge, yet he knew personally they had many and many a man with his heart perfectly ready, at the immediate call of God's Providence, to go out to wherever Christ might call him, and who would in all human likelihood ultimately go out.

A short address followed from the Bishop of Oxford.

HUNGRY LONDON.

THE wintry weather continues, and the poor continue to feel the pinch of hunger and cold, and too often of nakedness. We have received further calls for help in alleviating these sorrows of the city:—

KINGSLAND, N.—Mr. G. Fry, 491, Kingsland-road, E., writes that the soup kitchen here is in full operation, as far as means will allow. Clothes, boots, bedding, and coal tickets would be welcome.

NEW CUT, S.E.—Messrs. T. & J. Young, of the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut, S.E., are feeding many of the hungry little folks in this teeming neighbourhood; they want to persevere in this good work, if friends will not grow weary of providing the wherewithal.

CLAPTON, E.—Mr. E. Dunmore, 117, Glenarm-road, Lower Clapton, E. (of the Benevolent Society connected with Chatsworth-road Tabernacle), says the poverty in the district is so appaling that he must needs cry for aid, in the effort to cope with it by giving food and clothing.

UPPER HOLLOWAY, N.—A similar story comes from Pastor Frank Smith, of Hornsey Rise Chapel (Miranda House, Miranda-road, N.). He and his helpers are giving dinners, teas, coals, grocery, bread, and clothing. He says they could make one hundred gallons of soup a day, and distribute it, too, but their money is all spent.

MR. WALTER PENROSE, Costermongers' Cottage Mission, Catherine-street, Vinegar Ground, City-road, E.C., earnestly desires help for the relief of the distress amongst the costermongers and their families for whom he labours. Free meals, groceries, clothing, &c., are distributed, as well as money gifts. His funds are exhausted.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

DEAR SIR,—If anyone wishes to get pea flour to make food for the poor, he can have it on the following terms from Mr. James Snodgrass, Saucel Mills, Paisley, N.B., if he mentions my name and sends cash:—280 lb. bags, 30s. each; 140 lb., 16s. each; 70 lb., 8s. 6d. each; 112 lb., 13s. 6d. each; free on rail, bags not charged for. It is the packing in separate parcels which makes the pea flour, as ordinarily sold, so much dearer.

The following receipt will give a dinner to 100 people at the cost of about 5s.:—Pearl barley, 12lbs.; pea flour, 8 lbs.; salt, ½ lb.; vinegar, 3 pints; water, 12 gallons. This must be slowly simmered for four hours, and when ready to serve, add 6 lb. of bread cut into small pieces. To cook this mess economically, a special boiler is needed, made double like a glue pot, so that the soup may not be burnt. The outer space is filled with water Very little fuel is needed, as the soup should not boil, only be kept near the boiling point. If rice is used instead of pearl barley, the cost will be less. One pint of this soup is a full meal for an adult, and might be sold for 1d. I would urge the establishment of soup kitchens where this soup could be sold all over London.

Yours, &c., A. W. WALLACE, M.D.

Parsonstown, Ireland.

London City Mission.—By invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, a conversazione and concert were held last week at the Mansion House, chiefly to bring together the friends of the London City Mission, which is doing an important work among the poor. A large number of ladies and gentlemen attended. The Lord Mayor referred to the beneficial change which had taken place in the condition of the poorer classes during the past fifty years. He referred in detail to the valuable work carried on by the Mission in evangelising the masses. Among the other speakers were Rev. H. J. Berguer, Alderman Sir W. McArthur, Mr. F. A. Bevan (treasurer of the Society), and Mr. S. A. Blackwood.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will be a DOUBLE NUMBER (price Twopence), and will contain a full report of addresses at the Second Advent Conference being held at Mildmay this week. In the same issue there will be a portrait and sketch of Dr. Horatius Bonar, of Edinburgh.

A suggestion that, during the Church season of Lent, people who fast should give to the fund for the unemployed the amount which otherwise they would have expended upon their dinners, has induced a counter suggestion, that, during the same period, intoxicating drink should be given up by those who are anxious to make a sacrifice in order to contribute to the relief of the deserving poor. The result would be pre-eminently satisfactory we are certain, for in London alone the drink bill exceeds a million and a quarter each month, and although, unfortunately, it must be admitted there is a terrible amount of intemperance among the "lower classes," that huge amount is contributed to very largely by those in higher grades of society. Self-denial upon the suggested lines would benefit them, perhaps, as much as their charity would benefit others.

When we say, "Give us this day our daily bread," do we ever think of the frightful waste going on around us, and of, perhaps, our responsibility for a portion of the sin? Taken from this point of view, and in the lurid light of the famine deepening around us—myriads of men, women, and children crying hoarsely for a bit of dry bread—the British national drink bill indeed is a disgrace, not merely to our civilisation, but to our Christianity. The time has now come, if we did not reach it long ago, when each Christian should ask himself or herself, very solemnly, how far indulgence in unnecessary stimulants implies part responsibility for the national waste—a wilful waste, which, in the presence of those who have died from starvation, asks unblushingly, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

The Birmingham Daily Post lately contained a just eulogy on the influence of benevolent ladies in the East-end of London. A special correspondent remarked of this part of the Metropolis:—

> They say that it is entirely owing to the exertions of the women that the population is maintained in peace and quiet. A lady with whom I have sometimes the opportunity of conversing, and who has taken up her abode amongst them for some years past, expresses the deepest admiration and reverence for the wives of the working men. "The women," she declares, "will save the men from moral degradation and physical starvation; they will save the nation itself from perishing."

Whether this be so or not, these times of trouble are showing how inestimable has been the unselfish devotion of Christian ladies in these East-end districts.

The "Inventories" of last year, at South Kensington, is being converted into the "Colonies" of this. Among other illustrations of colonial and Indian life, says The World, there is to be a department for "opium-smoking and betel-nut paraphernalia." If this exhibition of degrading and destructive Eastern vices is to be in a realistic form, the deepest pain will be given to a large number of visitors. It is to be hoped that there is some mistake; otherwise a great scandal will result.

A distinguished writer has said: "It is civilisation and not barbarism which has ruined the world." Ancient history confirms this opinion. Is England to go through this process? A civilisation which is without the controlling influence of true religion; which weakens the ties of family life; which multiplies facilities for intemperance and vice; which tries to cure the evils of the people by amusing them, may foster a deep-seated distaste, and even repugnance, to work, and this must inevitably be followed by a rude awakening. Are we not coming to this?

"We believe that the close of this nineteenth century will see a great revival of true religion," is the declared conviction of two leading Evangelicals, Professor Cave and Rev. W. Crosbie. It should, however, be remembered that the great revival of the last century was outside those Churches that had fallen into unscriptural views of the Divinity and Atonement of Christ. Such Churches were hostile to it. If modern Churches fall back into these old errors, all the lessons of the past teach us that revivals will not begin in them.

A correspondent thus follows up the "Thoughts" expounded in The Expositor, for February, which were recently referred to in these columns:—

> "He stooped down and wrote on the ground" (John viii. 8). Dr. Adam Clarke says, "We never find that Christ wrote anything before or after this; and what He wrote at this time we know not." On this the pious Quesnet makes the following reflections. "(1) Since Jesus Christ never wrote but once in his whole life that we hear of; (2) since He did it only in the dust; (3) since it was only to avoid condemning the sinner; (4) and since He would not have that which He wrote so much as known; let men learn from hence never to write but when it is necessary or useful; to do it with modesty and humility, and to do it with the spirit of charity."

The Council of the Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance have issued their annual invitation to the observance of Wednesday, March 17, as a day of united and special prayer for Ireland.

In an article on "Samoa" in The Nineteenth Century for last month, by Mr. C. Kinloch Cooke, there occurs the following gratifying testimony:—

> Previous to 1873 rival royalties were constantly fighting against each other for supremacy, but in May of that year, by the good offices of the missionaries, hostilities ceased and peace was proclaimed. It is to the missionaries that Samoa owes its present state of civilisation. They have done more actual good for the natives than any other body of men. Not only have they Christianised a people who formerly knew not God, but, by mastering a language hitherto unknown to Europeans, they have initiated an education which has had the effect of vastly increasing the commerce of these islands. While steering clear of political squabbles, they are ever ready in the interests of peace and justice to act as mediators in native quarrels, or to aid the representatives of foreign Powers in maintaining law and order.

The traveller in North Africa, so spiritually dark and lifeless, whether highly civilised like Algeria, or centuries in arrear like Morocco, reads of English Christianity with joy and praise. The February simultaneous meetings of the Church Missionary Society are a direct proof that the answer has already gone forth to such cries as those of Dr. Pierson for "a consecrated ministry." Not only a consecrated ministry, however, but a consecrated people, is necessary. As a matter of fact, the revival of 1859 came about (so far as man could trace it) not by means of a consecrated ministry, but through two humble "laymen" who had been strengthening their souls in God by reading the Lord's dealings with George Müller.

We cannot prescribe how and whence the Spirit's breath shall come upon the dry bones; but it is well to feel the need, and to give thanks when, as now, the Lord of the harvest answers even before we call upon Him. The greatly increasing interest in missions is like the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, which when David heard, he was commanded to bestir himself, for then was Jehovah gone out before him, to smite the host of the Philistines (2 Sam. v. 24). Not only Ethiopia, but all of Africa, is stretching out her hands unto God. And the responsive sound in the tops of the mulberry trees is God's reply. "The Dark Continent" is within four or five days of England, and hundreds of vacant lives of men and women, old and young, might there be filled up with joyous work, which would wind up every day with the anticipative song of harvest—

> We shall come rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves.

We would call special attention to the subject of National Prayer and Humiliation, as dealt with in our correspondence. When, a few years since, the nation set itself to intercede for the life of the Prince of Wales, God sent a gracious answer. How much more is prayer needed to-day! The times are terribly serious. In the present, trouble, vast and far-reaching; in the future, perplexity and fear. Seldom have the calls to united prayer been so many and so urgent. In a note just received, Mr. Archibald Brown writes:—

> Things are in a sad condition. I often wonder what the end will be. I look to the future with no little degree of apprehension. A weary world needs the return of its Lord.

We suggest that the leaders of every Christian denomination in the land, from the Archbishop of Canterbury downwards, should consult together and fix a date, when the nation, as such, should "fear, and set itself to seek the Lord." We hope that each reader of these lines will take this great matter to heart, and do his utmost in moving for the appointment of such a day of prayer.

Professor Dana, the eminent geologist, of Yale College, New Haven, U.S., in a recent lecture said, among other things:—

> The only source of information of the creation which we have is the first chapter of Genesis, and this must be inspired. There would be no object in putting this description of the creation in the Bible had it been untrue. The order of the creation must, for scientific reasons, have taken place as described in the Bible. . . . Geology proves that everything which exists must have had a beginning. Science accords with the Bible in that light must have first existed, plants must have existed before animals, to feed them and to absorb the carbonic acid in the air. . . . No evidences have ever been found of any inferior race from which men could be sprung. The similarity between the recent study of Nature and the Mosaic law ought to satisfy the doubting students of Nature of the truth of the creation as related in the first chapter of Genesis.

We understand that confusion has been caused in the minds of some interested in "young Englishwomen in Paris," by the similarity of the titles frequently given to Miss Leigh's Mission and that of Miss Pryde. We are requested to state, on behalf of some of Miss Leigh's subscribers, that the two missions are quite distinct.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

LETTER to the Rev. ROBERT DAWSON,

SECRETARY OF THE LONDON CITY MISSION,

On the dismissal, by the Committee of the Mission, of Mr. SAMUEL SHIP, one of its Missionaries, apparently as the result of his having recently adopted higher views than he formerly held of the extent of deliverance from sin offered to us in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

By JAMES PILLANS WILSON,
Local Superintendent in the Mission.

COPIES of the little book of 40 pages, of which the above is the title, may be obtained by writing to J. P. Wilson, 88, North-side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W., sending 4d. for price and postage, or without money.

"The highest-toned piece of controversial writing that it was ever our lot to read. The Christian courtesy and spirit apparent throughout are a beautiful illustration of the doctrine defended.—Divine Life.

"FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on his name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30)."

The little book of 128 pages, of which the above is the title, is a sequel to the "Letter to Mr. Dawson." Copies may be obtained by writing, as above, sending 8d. for each copy, or without money.

"These pages contain much plain truth, strongly set forth, and we do not see how many of the arguments from Holy Writ can be gainsaid. . . . . The spirit of earnest conviction runs through every page, and it is impossible to read them without being confirmed in the view that Scriptural entire holiness is a Bible doctrine."—King's Highway.

"FURTHER SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS,"

Being another little book of 128 pages, of which copies may be obtained as above, sending 8d., or without money.

"The author's aim is to show that at sundry times and in divers manners God has pledged Himself completely to deliver his people from the power of sin. The arguments consist chiefly of Scripture exposition: hence a solidity and strength that will to many be very helpful. Illustrative facts and quotations are added, and altogether the result is a very valuable setting forth of the theory and practice of holiness."—Divine Life, on both the "First" and "Further Sheets."

Extracts from Letters on the "First Sheets."

"I rejoice greatly in it. It is well calculated to stimulate an earnest desire in the hearts of the Lord's dear people to search the Scriptures more diligently and prayerfully, like the Bereans, 'daily, whether these things were so.'"

"I have read your little book lent me by a friend, and I do heartily desire to thank my God that it was put into my hands. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read. There is so little of man in it, and so much of God."

"Oh, how I bless God whenever I read anything which tells out his full salvation clearly!"

"It seems to me just the kind of book to put a solid Scriptural foundation under the faith of those who are conscious of a real and godly change of heart and of an eager desire to be only the Lord's."

"I like it because it is Scriptural."

"Thank you so much for your little book. It has helped me to realise more fully 'the glorious Gospel of Christ.'"

"I like it exceedingly, and have been much profited by it. The Lord will, I believe, make this 'your work of faith and labour of love' a great blessing. It will tend to cause Christ's Bride to make herself ready for her Lord."

"I have read the 'Proofs,' and they have opened my eyes greatly to what may be obtained by faith and prayer. I have no doubt they will prove a great blessing to many, and I will circulate them as much as I can."

"I am so grateful for your little book. It is so helpful. I pray and trust that the Lord will bless it abundantly to his glory."

"I have read it carefully, and can find nothing of man in it, but all in it to be the revealed power of God. I have received great encouragement and strength from the reading of it. It is a golden prize for all believers who receive it."

"Some little time back I saw advertised your book, 'First Sheets of Scriptural Proofs.' I wrote to you for one, and I do thank my God for ever being led to have in my possession such a book. I must tell you, dear brother, that since having your book I have realised—praise God!—those grand promises Deut. xxx. 6 and Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27. I do thank my God for a heart to believe, and I have proved his willingness to give and his power to keep. Praise his dear name!"

"I am greatly enjoying it—always find comfort as I open upon any page. How truly God helped you in writing it. I am sure it must accomplish good wherever it is read."

BELFAST CITY MISSION.

£400 urgently needed

For the erection of Mission Hall and Schools in Campbell-street. Mission Premises overcrowded. Numbers turned away for want of room. Irish Church Missions have given £100 to secure the site.

READER, WILL YOU HELP?

Contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by Rev. HORACE W. TOWNSEND, or W. PASLEY, Esq., 11, Buckingham street, Strand, London; or by Rev. EDMOND ROBINSON, 3, Holborn-terrace, Belfast.

One of the East-end workers among the poor, in writing to acknowledge the receipt of help given through our readers, says :—

> By the disbursement of the Mansion House Fund upon the lines of the Charity Organisation Society, the thousands of our nomadic poor get no assistance whatever. From over an hundred poor men of this description I dealt with at the docks yesterday not one had received help from this Fund. Many of the men thought the funds for the daily dinner given them came from this source. But it was my duty to undeceive them, and assure them from whence the assistance came.

The remarkable Conference last week on Temperance legislation, at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, in which the opposing views of total abstainers and liquor dealers were advocated, did not seem to advance the settlement of the matter much. The brewers and publicans argued strenuously for compensation if licences were taken away; the Temperance reformers as strenuously resisted the idea. The practical thought suggested is that no legislation will be effective that is in advance of a strong public opinion; ergo, educate, educate, educate the people.

There are many hopeful features in connection with the assumption of the office of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland by the Earl of Aberdeen. The Irish people do not forget that Lord Aberdeen is a landlord, who has in a most practical manner shown that he understands that property has duties as well as rights; and if they were not aware of the fact before, they have lately been informed by the National journals that the Countess of Aberdeen is foremost in many good works affecting the well-being of young women, shop-girls, and others—agencies by which, as one writer puts it, "it is sought to bind the different classes together and to encourage industry and well-doing."

Lord Aberdeen cannot but dignify his elevated office, and he will have many opportunities of strengthening and deepening the good impression which has already been made. Too long the Lord Lieutenant has been looked upon merely as the centre of a circle of fashionable and thoughtless gaiety. To have as the holder of the office a consistent Christian, almost stern in his simplicity, coming to his official duties fresh from a religious meeting, and beginning each day's work with public service in the Chapel Royal, will not be without its influence upon the public mind, or without effect upon the higher grades of a society which is too much disposed to be utterly frivolous. The possibilities before Lord Aberdeen are very great, and we pray that as he enters upon his work in Ireland under a deep and solemn sense of responsibility to God, and free from any ignoble personal motive, he may, in the strength of the Master whom he gladly serves, succeed in widening the boundaries of righteousness and justice.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers.—Professor George L. White, organiser and director of the famous Jubilee Singers, who lately made their appearance in Buffalo, U.S., for the third time since 1871, said to a reporter: "The Fisk University has now from 400 to 500 students in attendance. It was started with the object of testing the educational capacity of the freed men of the South, and the result has been very encouraging. In Buffalo one of the graduates is engaged in the practice of law; another is in Washington, in charge of a fine church there; and there are others engaged in preaching at New Haven, Cleveland, and elsewhere. Four or five graduates are at the head of the coloured branch of the Agricultural College of Missouri. The Fisk University is not endowed, as it ought to be. It is now dependent upon the American Missionary Association for aid. The singers used to appropriate to the educational work the full amount of every entertainment; now the proceeds are divided with some special work wherever we go."

Letters to the Editor.

THE ACCOUNTS OF CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

Sir,—Having been for many years interested in this department for various Charitable Institutions, permit us to endorse and emphasise the remarks of a correspondent in a recent issue of The Christian, that this service for such Institutions should not be "performed in a loose, careless, and slovenly way."

Many Institutions of this kind have very small beginnings, and the attention of those engaged in the management of them is almost necessarily fixed on the accomplishment of the particular end for which the Institution exists, often to the neglect of any systematic account-keeping. This latter demands a certain amount of time and care, even in the hands of a competent accountant; consequently the keeping of the accounts is very often neglected altogether, or shelved in favour of work which the directors consider of greater moment. In this way matters drift, till something arises to compel inquiry, when it is often found that past neglect is only to be rectified at a cost of time and money, out of all proportion to what would have sufficed had proper attention been given to the accounts at the outset.

By way of offering a few practical suggestions, we would say: however urgent other duties may appear, never neglect to keep daily records of all financial transactions—whether moneys received or paid. Where possible, let the payments be in every case made by cheque on bankers; carefully register the names and addresses of all donors and subscribers; and faithfully secure and preserve all receipts and vouchers. Having done this, it is always possible to obtain from a professional accountant such assistance as will enable the preparation of complete accounts; and probably this method will result in such a saving of labour and anxiety to those concerned in the management as will doubly compensate them for any expense incurred.

A thorough system of accounts is in all cases important; and to Institutions dealing with charitable funds, anything less than this—together with an annual audit—should be impossible.

Chartered Accountants.

THE EXPERIENCES OF A DONOR.

Dear Sir,—I should like to add my testimony to that of a correspondent in your issue of February 18, who complains that donations in aid of the Lord's work are frequently not acknowledged until after unnecessary delay.

I have long taken a deep interest in many branches of Christian work, but only lately have I been able to help them by gifts of money. When, however (through a sum bequeathed to me), I was enabled a few months since to send help to various workers, I did so with great delight, picturing to myself the relief from anxiety which my cheque would bring to some of the smaller charities, and that it would not be unwelcome even to huge societies which are accustomed to far larger donations.

I will not excuse myself, I know it was wrong, but nevertheless it remains a fact that, when some days passed without a word of acknowledgment for certain cheques, my ardour was damped; and when days again passed, and still there was no reply, I began to think, "Those urgent appeals cannot mean much." And before the last tardy receipt arrived, I said to myself, "I will never give a penny to those institutions again!"

Whether I shall hold to my hasty resolve is another matter; but it is a question for secretaries and superintendents of missions and homes whether donors accustomed to business punctuality may not turn their charity into other channels when they observe such carelessness, and whether some of our institutions are not suffering in consequence.

I think I ought to add that the cases in which my donations were acknowledged by return of post were in the proportion of one to six, and that I noticed that those who were most prompt and most apparently grateful were the representatives of institutions which were not pressing their claims on public sympathy by advertising their poverty.

Yours faithfully,

An Observer.

NATIONAL CONFESSION AND PRAYER.

Dear Sir,—Now that calls for prayer for Ireland have arisen, shall we not only respond earnestly to them, but add this further petition to our gracious God: That He would lead the hearts of our rulers to appoint a special season of humiliation and prayer; that the heart of the nation may be turned to Him, to confess the sins that have caused Him to send his chastenings on us; to seek his pardoning grace; not only to confess, but to put away from our midst, the Sabbath-breaking, the love of gain, the grinding of the poor, the drunkenness, and the hideous moral evil that has been laid bare, that is gnawing at the very heart of our social life. Oh, that God's believing people may be stirred up to entreat for this national humbling before Him, not only that his judgments may be averted, but that with our whole heart we may seek the righteousness that alone exalteth a nation.

Is our faith too weak to expect that this prayer would be granted? From the touching account in The Christian for October 8, 1885, of the days of humiliation and prayer set apart in Basutoland to plead for rain, and the almost immediate answer that followed, may we not learn a lesson, and plead with our God for the gracious spiritual rain on England and Ireland, for which He is waiting to be asked? Zech. x. 1; Isa. xxx. 18—25; Ezek. xx. 19, 20. Yours in Christ, M. Q.

Sir,—I recently heard a remark in a sermon in which the preacher, after referring to the present state of agitation, perplexity, distress, &c., unparalleled in his experience (I think he said) within the last forty years, added what was to his mind the saddest feature of all. Amid all the extraordinary excitement and strenuous efforts connected with party strife and tactics, he had not observed one combined movement, or concert for prayer for guidance and counsel to Him who has "the kingdom" in his hand, whether national or in connection with any of the great Christian communities, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Congregational, Baptist, &c. If this is indeed so, can we reasonably expect any better state of things?—Yours faithfully, J. L.

Balham.

"EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD."

Dear Sir,—Not so very long since Rev. H. Price Hughes in speaking of Church work in the Metropolis, said that London would never be evangelised on the "old lines;" and there are many who feel this is true in relation to foreign mission work. If the outlying world is to be evangelised within the present century, the work must be conducted on new lines, i.e., there must be new efforts, existing societies must extend their boundaries, the unconsecrated wealth of the churches must be laid at the Master's feet, and, while many possessing means go forth at their own charges, others must labour looking to God for the supply of all their need, and not leaning upon any Society.

In the letter of Rev. F. B. Meyer, published in your issue of February 11, he urges the proposal he made at the Leicester Conference, viz., the sending out of Christian mechanics to all parts of the world as self-supporting missionaries; and if these were selected with some degree of caution, helping forward only those who were already engaged in some department of Christian work at home—men with plenty of spiritual stamina, one cannot but feel what a power for good such might become, as living witnesses for the truth, amidst the ungodly Europeans, and also the heathen with whom they would be surrounded.

It seems to me the first thing needed is to ascertain what openings exist in other lands for such workers, and, with a view of making a beginning, I should feel obliged if friends who are in sympathy with the object would kindly send me the addresses of Christians residing in foreign ports or inland cities with whom I could correspond with regard to this matter.

I should also be glad to learn from friends at home of any foreign contracts undertaken by Christian firms, where skilled labour would be required.—Faithfully yours, Wm. T. Float.

The Manse, Foxton, Market Harborough.

The Pimlico Mystery.—A coroner's jury has returned a verdict of wilful murder against Mrs. Bartlett and Rev. G. Dyson, a Wesleyan minister, in connection with the mysterious death of Mr. Bartlett. Mr. Dyson writes to his parents declaring his innocence. Mr. Spurgeon, in his lecture to his students on Friday week, made the case the basis of some very emphatic cautions as to the need for marked discretion by ministers in all their dealings and conversation. A number of Mr. Dyson's friends have expressed their belief in his innocence, and are getting up a Defence Fund.

SOUTH LONDON EPISCOPAL MISSION.

We extract the following from the full and interesting account by the correspondents of The Record:—

Some twenty parishes have taken part in the South London Church Mission, and from what I have seen at the various churches I have visited, the movement seems to be a success so far as numbers and the general demeanour of the congregation are concerned, but it is, of course, too early to speak yet of spiritual results. Special efforts have been made to draw in the people; no effort has been spared to bring the largest possible number under the influence of the Mission.

The grand old parish church of Lambeth was one of the first I visited. The missioner is the Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, vicar of Kensington, the addresses to children being delivered by Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore. The Archbishop of Canterbury preached a sermon on Sunday morning. The topic being man's fallen condition. . . . East-street, Walworth, is one of the most narrow, dull, dirty, busy streets which are typical of a certain phase of London life. The mission hall, however, is at the quieter end of the street, where shops give way to gloomy respectable residences. Rev. Herbert H. Lucas, who is taking up the work, has for the last two months with two lay helpers (he wants more than double that number), been striving to gather people to hear the word of God. Some success he has had. On Sunday morning there were gathered about one hundred and fifty persons for the first general service of the mission. A special feature here is the children's service. Speaking of children's services reminds me of one with which I was much delighted, at All Saints' Church in South Lambeth. Rev. J. Stephens on Monday afternoon addressed a churchful of boys and girls, chiefly of the Sunday-school type. Several stayed to the after-meeting, when Mr. Stephens addressed them with great earnestness and power. The general missioner at this church is Rev. W. M. Hay Aitken, who has given many impressive addresses, of which perhaps the most so was that delivered to an audience of men only on Sunday afternoon, on Christian liberty as the true liberty.

The parish church of Newington—St. Mary's—is situated in the Kennington Park-road, and here—as at the Chapel of Ease, St. Gabriel's—the service is somewhat "high." The rector, Rev. G. T. Palmer, has secured Rev. Canon Body and Rev. A. W. Deacon as missioners, and several members of Mr. Charles Powell's Working Men's Society are helping in the work. I met a large procession of these men on Saturday night in the busiest part of the Walworth-road, and your readers can imagine the commotion they made when I say that there were five banners, a processional cross, and well-nigh fifty lanterns carried in the procession. Canon Body, when I heard him, appeared depressed at what he thought seemed the dullness and the want of life among the congregation. "I'm miserable about you," he said; but this was not quite such a lecture for the people as they had the previous morning from his fellow missioner, who declared that they were dead—"dead as mutton." As far as I could judge there were about 300 persons gathered in the church last night. There were but very few decidedly poor people; and many of the better class of persons had doubtless come from a distance to hear the mission preacher. Canon Body, it is well known, is a preacher of great power, but a sermon of sixty-five minutes in length was a little too much for the patience of ordinary mortals, and it is not surprising, therefore, that only about one-third of the congregation remained for the after-meeting. His subject was the Agony in the Garden, and very graphic and very telling was Canon Body's description of the scene. But it was somewhat startling to hear him speak of our Lord as "The Penitent." What his meaning was I could not grasp, and, indeed, I must say, beautiful though many of his points were, they were far over the heads of the majority of the congregation. Repentance was, he said, soul sorrow for soul sin, and it would be shown in penitential words and acts. He emphasised that it was not a mere feeling, but was (1) self-condemnation, (2) regret, (3) forsaking and confessing sin. No reference was made in the discourse to auricular confession to a priest, but a tract on "Confession" by Canon Body was distributed amongst the people. As I read it, it filled me with sorrow and shame. Auricular confession is not practised as far as I know at either St. Mary's or St. Gabriel's. It is common enough at the neighbouring churches of St. Agnes and St. John, Kennington (which, by the way, are taking no part in this Mission), and it will not be surprising if Mr. Palmer finds, when it is too late, that some of his regular congregation, bewitched by Canon Body's advice, have joined themselves to those churches where they can put the advice into practice.

At St. Matthew's, New Kent-road (vicar, Rev. W. Walsh), the missioner is Rev. Frank Webster, Principal of the Church Army Training Home, and formerly curate to Mr. Christopher, at Oxford. He has brought with him several of his working-men cadets, and he is also assisted by a staff of lady-workers from Brunswick Chapel (Rev. E. W. Moore's). Rev. Wilson Carlile opened the Mission on Sunday, preaching three times. The population of this parish is extremely poor, and there are not a few of the very worst characters living within a stone's throw of the church. To reach these every effort has been made, and with a very encouraging amount of success. The workers meet for prayer at 7 every evening, and then march out in procession round about the parish, inviting the people to the church and holding a short service at one or two prominent points. On Wednesday evening there was a large congregation, and Mr. Webster preached with great power on "Soul Insurance." Nearly the entire congregation remained for the after-meeting, when Mr. Webster expounded the way of life still more simply. He asked all who intended to yield themselves to Christ to hold the right hand up. Several hands went up, and some before leaving the church professed to have found peace. What struck me with this service was the entire absence of anything approaching unhealthy excitement; the Gospel message was delivered with power, albeit with the greatest simplicity.

St. Paul's, Lorrimore-square, Walworth, is one of the best-worked parishes in the South of London, and here three missioners are at work—Rev. Forbes E. Winslow, vicar of St. Paul's, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, Rev. B. G. Hoskyns, curate of Canon Wilberforce's church, at Southampton, and Rev. S. R. Wakefield, vicar of Lower Sydenham. The services on the whole are well attended, though on the night of my visit the church was not so full as I expected to find it. There is a feature that calls for notice: the congregation are requested to drop petitions for prayer into a box provided for the purpose, and the missioner afterwards reads them out, and when there is time offers a short prayer after each, or else groups them together in a special prayer at the end of all. At St. Mark's, the parish church of Kennington, the missioner is Rev. Rowland Ellis, from Edinburgh. Special services are also held at the mission rooms close at hand. At the conclusion of the service in the parish church, resolution cards are given to many, with a form of words, promising in the name of the Holy Trinity to fight against such sin or failing as the holder of the card after prayer and self-examination should be moved to set down as his or her peculiar besetment. At most of the churches the afternoon address is specially intended for wives and mothers. At St. Mark's, on Tuesday and Thursday, domestic servants were specially invited to the afternoon services. The meetings for instruction in the spiritual life are taken independently, but bear on the previous discourse.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

The Quarterly Conference of the friends and workers of this mission was held on Friday week at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks, and was well attended. Mr. George Wade presided. Rev. G. J. Hill, Mr. W. Butcher (German Missionary), Miss Messer, and a number of workers gave most cheering accounts of the past three months' work. Large numbers of seamen had signed the pledge, and many had professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. About one hundred meetings had been held every week, above 6000 visits had been paid to ships and boarding-houses, a good number of vessels had been supplied with libraries, and many thousands of tracts, periodicals, and Testaments had been circulated.

Mr. Robert Paton said he had derived encouragement, pleasure, and profit from the interesting accounts of work. He addressed the workers on the duty and privilege of confessing Christ before men, and his thoughtful, earnest, and stimulating words were listened to with deep attention. The Conference closed with praise and prayer.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

"I SHOULD like to hold a meeting of the unemployed, and hear what they have to say themselves, concerning their numbers and present condition," I remarked to the office-bearers of my church, on Sunday, February 21.

"Very well," they replied; "we will do all we can to help."

So we sent out large bills inviting all the unemployed for half a mile round Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kentish Town-road, to meet in the church on Wednesday evening, February 24, at eight o'clock.

The meeting assembled. There was no confusion outside; they filed in quietly, took their seats as appointed, and when some hundreds were assembled, I rose quietly and asked an elder to commence with prayer. After prayer, I said it might save time to ask questions, and reply by votes. How many had been unemployed one month? Scores of hands held up. Two months? About twice as many hands. Three months? As many as at first went up; and I had no heart to pursue the investigation further.

The next question was searching; before putting it I requested the audience to look steadily at me. How many of you are hungry, and have nothing to eat? Slowly, at first, the hands went up, then more rapidly, until nearly a hundred were uplifted. Then details were asked for, and they were given in heart-breaking profusion and depth of suffering. There were no complaints of those in better position. No suggestions of any kind of spoliation or robbery, but terrible narratives of long periods of enforced idleness, of the gradual selling, pledging, wrecking of home, of arrears of rent, of exhausted credits, of hungry wives and children, of wives striving in every way to keep out gaunt hunger; these and other experiences made many eyes hot with unshed tears. The most noteworthy among many suggestions made was, that all the money hitherto given had come from the rich; that little or none had been given by working-men in employment, and it would be well to have Saturday subscriptions at workshops and factories, outside churches and chapels, and in the streets after the fashion of the Hospital Saturday Fund. It was agreed that the suggestion should be forwarded to the Mansion House Committee. So our meeting went on, the keenest attention being paid to every speaker, no interruption, commotion, or noise from beginning to end, when the meeting closed with prayer.

At the close, the hungry were requested to remain. A small slip giving name, address, &c., was handed to each to fill in, and was exchanged for a ticket supplying necessaries value one shilling. Nearly one hundred tickets were given.

CROYDON Y.M.C A.

The annual meeting of this Branch was held last week at the Public Hall. The lengthy report, read by Mr. Thomas Smith, Secretary, showed a vigorous and well-directed life in the Association. A debt of £440 on the premises unhappily was reported.

The Mayor, who presided, promised a donation, and strongly commended the work, as did also Messrs. Hind Smith, R. Paton, and Pye Smith. Addresses, full of good counsel to young men, were given by Revs. C. E. Griffin, W. Park, and J. W. Braithwaite.

Belfast.—A great impetus has been given to rescue work among children in this city by the generosity of Mr. A. O. Reid, who is erecting an Institute at Ballygowan, 12 miles from Belfast, at a cost of £8000. It will accommodate from 200 to 300 children. In order to complete the furnishing, &c., another £1000 will be needed. Mr. D. Henderson, Elim, Crumlin-road, Belfast, one of the trustees, writes to say that the younger children hitherto cared for at Elim will be transferred to Ballygowan, and the former Institution will be used as a training home for working lads.

Homes for Working Girls in London.—On Friday evening, Feb. 19, a large number of the residents in these Homes, in response to the invitation of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, attended a lecture at St. George's Institute, Little Grosvenor-street, by Miss L. M. von Finkelstein, entitled "The Homes and Haunts of Jesus." The lecture, as many of our readers know, is a most interesting and instructive one, and was listened to by the audience with rapt attention. It closed with a thrilling peroration reminding the young women of the power of woman at the present day, if their lives were consecrated to Christ.

GOSPEL WORK AT HOME AND ABROAD.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

DURING the past week this evangelist has been working in the northern suburb of Hampstead. He has been fortunate in having the hearty sympathy of pastors of all the evangelical denominations; Messrs. Head, Sharp, Karney and Kirkman, Episcopalians; Mr. Matheson, Presbyterian; Mr. Brock, Baptist; Mr. Horton, Congregationalist; Mr. Greeves, Wesleyan, &c. God has answered united prayer, and there have been not a few professed conversions.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

An interesting Conference was held at the Reeve Room, East-street, W., on Monday, February 22, in connection with the West London Auxiliary of this Mission. Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, in a sympathetic address threw out some practical suggestions for discussion. Several preachers testified to the blessing God had vouchsafed to their work. In the course of the evening it was stated that a band of from fifteen to twenty devoted ladies had commenced a regular open-air campaign in the district.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

These evangelists, by latest reports, had entered on their mission in New Orleans. Judging from the dark picture of some aspects of life in that Southern city, drawn by Mr. Aitken at his welcome meeting the other evening, there is much need for a prolonged visit from Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. The Times Democrat, of February 10, in reporting the opening meeting, says it was the largest and most enthusiastic religious assembly ever held in New Orleans. "Men even climbed on the roof of the building, and listened through the upper windows." Mr. Sankey sang his solos with clear, sweet notes. Mr. Moody preached to Christians on the use of talents; his illustrations had a marked effect on the audience, many of whom were in tears.

REV. W. HASLAM AT TORONTO.

The mission services concluded at St. Paul's Church, have excited deep interest, and caused an unusual stir in the neighbourhood and city of Toronto. Mr. Haslam is now well known in Canada, having conducted numerous missions in various parts during the last six months. The marked success which has followed these efforts, has been such that the effect is being felt far and wide. The services during the mission were well attended from the commencement, and as the interest increased it was difficult to find room for all who came. Space will not allow of my giving a detailed account of the numerous cases of blessing which have resulted from the labours of Mr. Haslam and his talented wife. The daily meetings for ladies held by her have been of immense value, and in no small degree have contributed to the success of this special effort. There is a strong desire on the part of those who have attended the services to prevail upon Mr. and Mrs. Haslam to extend their visit here, but previous engagements at Woodstock, London, and other places prevent their doing so. THE McALL MISSION AT LYONS.

The past year has been one of steady progress in the work of this Mission in Lyons. Twenty meetings a week are now held, with an average attendance of over 1000 persons. The four Sabbath-schools progress favourably. The monitors, both young men and women, are, in several remarkable instances, themselves the fruit of the Gospel work in the Salles. The work has been carried on in the face of many obstacles; but, one after another, by the goodness of our covenant God, many of these have been removed from the path, so we thank Him, and take courage.

In November last, with the aid of Pastor Vernier, of Valence, we commenced in all the Salles a series of special meetings, which were blessed to the salvation of souls. Whole families gave themselves, in their individual members, to the Lord. As the outcome, we have organised, on Sabbath afternoons, a special meeting for those who declare they have given themselves to the Lord Jesus. Two hours quickly pass in praise, exhortation, testimony, and prayer.

The evangelical pastors and laymen, who aid in the Salles from time to time, have been much encouraged by witnessing the notable advance in the work: one and all testify to its reality. I am convinced that in France thousands upon thousands of Catholics and Protestants alike are only waiting for the faithful proclamation of the word to awake from the sleep of death, and give themselves to the Lord. A. S. D. Colquhoun.

BRIEF EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

A fifteen days' mission at the Bible Christians' Chapel, Southampton, has been held by Mr. F. C. Spurr. The pastor of the chapel reports several conversions, and a quickening of the life of the Church. Mr. J. W. Moodie has had a very encouraging season of work at Annan, N.B. Rev. E. Young, Congregational Pastor, writes that there were many inquirers, and, as far as man can judge, a goodly proportion of them believed unto salvation. Mr. Moodie's addresses on The Tabernacle were singularly interesting. Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan have lately been blessed of God in their labours at various points in the Isle of Wight. Mrs. W. E. Legg has seen much fruit of Gospel effort in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at Cookley, near Kidderminster. Gipsy Smith, of Hanley, has concluded a mission at the Carmarthen-road Chapel, Swansea; this is his third visit to the chapel, and on each occasion there have been seals to his earnest ministry. Mr. Thomas Payne lately held a Gospel mission at St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, which was crowned with much manifest blessing. For six weeks Mrs. K. Yeoland has been conducting a mission at the Congregational Church, Church Stretton, Salop. A great and good work has been done in the town and neighbourhood. Very successful evangelistic services have been conducted in the Methodist Free Church, Helston, Cornwall, by Miss North, of Axminster, Devon. Many professed to find peace in Christ, and the members of the Churches, who attended in great numbers, felt that the services were times of much refreshing. Mr. Spencer Walton has revisited Whitehaven, and there has been much revived interest, with some fresh conversions. Mr. Henry Varley has conducted Gospel meetings in the Victoria Baptist Chapel, Deal, with many signs following. Our venerable friend, Mr. R. Simpson, of Glasgow, has been preaching the Gospel at the little town of Avoch, Ross-shire. Crowds have flocked to the Congregational Church to hear, and several hundreds have professed conversion. The place has been deeply stirred; prayer is desired that the work may continue and spread.

MR. NOBLE AND MR. GOUGH.

DEAR FRIENDS, — You will have heard before this of the death of our dear friend John B. Gough. We met on the 15th at the "Depôt," Philadelphia, and arranged to spend a few hours together at the St. Denis Hotel, New York, the following day, previous to my departure for San Francisco on the 17th, my forty-fourth birthday. He left to speak at Frankfort, and I at Trenton, and the following morning I read the telegram announcing the sad news of his being stricken down. Yesterday I received a telegram to say that he was "sinking very rapidly," and hastened at once to Frankfort, Pa., where I arrived two hours after his death. In a list of his engagements sent by his niece, who travelled with him, is the following: "Feb. 18, home"—the very day he took his departure from us, and went home to be with his Lord.

I have postponed my departure to the colonies for ten days to attend the funeral at Worcester. I purpose leaving San Francisco on March 13 in the usual mail boat. Friends may address me, care of Rev. C. Worboys, Auckland, New Zealand. I hope (D.V.) to return to England about November next. My health was far from good the first three months after my arrival, but I am thankful to report that I am now much better.

Yours sincerely, William Noble.

Philadelphia, Feb. 19.

The visit of Mr. William Noble, says a New York paper, has been one of the most agreeable and fruitful elements of the Gospel Temperance work in the United States during the past seven or eight months. He has revived many of his old American associations, and has spoken through a large part of the country, under the auspices of the most important organisations. On the eve of his departure for the Sandwich Islands, New Zealand and Australia, his friends in New York resolved to signify their appreciation of his efforts in the cause of Gospel Temperance, and their wishes for his future success, by a farewell reception. This was given at Chickering Hall, under the auspices of the American Temperance Union. Quite as large an audience was in attendance as greeted Joseph Cook in the same place two weeks before—in other words, every seat was filled, and hundreds were obliged to stand. Mr. John B. Gough, whose interest in Mr. Noble's work has been manifested on many occasions, came from his home in Massachusetts for the special purpose of being present at the meeting.

"A MOTHER IN ISRAEL."

A LOVED and venerable servant of God has just passed from amongst us. Mrs. Aitken, the widow of Rev. Robert Aitken, of Pendeen, finished her course and passed to her rest on Sunday evening, the 21st ult., at the advanced age of eighty-one. She was the sister of the late Hay Macdowall Grant, of Arndilly, so well known as a devoted and indefatigable lay-preacher and evangelist. In her early years, while enjoying very few spiritual advantages, she was led to give herself to the Lord. The sudden death of a dearly loved brother was the first thing that led her to see the hollowness and vanity of the world, and the need of something better. She and her elder sister, the late Mrs. Macdowall, of Garthland, at once began to work, in a quiet way amidst the poor of Arndilly, and the little school-house at Maggieknocketer, erected by their efforts, remains an interesting memorial of her early work.

After spending some years in the West Indies, when her father occupied the position of acting Governor of Jamaica for some time, upon her return to London she found her sister much interested in the preaching of Robert Aitken, who was at that time doing a great work at White's-row, Spitalfields. Under his ministry she received a great spiritual blessing, and entered upon a life of more complete devotion to her Master.

Some little time after this Mr. Aitken became a widower, and in the year 1839 he and Miss Macdowall Grant were married. Their son, Wm. Hay Aitken, whose name is now so familiar to our readers, was born in 1841, and the late Mrs. Nankivell, at Perran Uthnoe, in Cornwall, in 1843. The last twenty-four years of Robert Aitken's life were spent at Pendeen, a parish in a remote part of Cornwall; and there the body of his devoted wife was laid beside his on Friday last, amidst the tears of many who remembered with grateful love her assiduous and devoted labours in that parish, where she was looked upon as indeed a mother in Israel.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Aitken has resided at Bournemouth with Dr. Nankivell, who married her daughter, and she was much loved and venerated by those who knew her there. In 1882 death deprived her for a season of the society of her dearly loved daughter, and since then she has been waiting patiently, but with much strong desire, for the summons home. Yet she never seemed to lose her interest in the things that concerned the kingdom of God that were passing around her. To the very last her mind retained all its vigour, and her heart its warmth. Often has her son referred, both in public and in private, to the fact that he knew he was being continually supported by the intercessions of his aged mother, and often has he spoken of the deep debt of gratitude that he owed to her for the early influence and teaching which, more than anything else, were the means of bringing him to yield his young heart to Christ.

She fell asleep, without pain or struggle, just after having heard her daughter, Mrs. Savage, sing—

> I heard the voice of Jesus say,
> Come unto Me and rest.

She came—and she rests.

The Directors of the London Missionary Society have arranged to hold a public missionary prayer-meeting in the Board-room, 14, Blomfield-street, E.C., on the first Monday afternoon of each month, from half-past four to half-past five.

ALL-DAY MEETING, NEWCASTLE.

THE twelfth anniversary of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Noon Prayer-meeting was celebrated by an All-day Meeting on Monday, February 22. The congregations were large, from the opening of the meeting, though the weather was very unfavourable for the country friends.

At noon the chair was taken by Rev. Dr. Bruce. The first subject, "Connection between Prayer and Christian Service," was introduced by Rev. F. W. Boumphrey (Church of England), in an earnest discourse. No child of God, he said, should attempt to do Him service except in the spirit of prayer. The consideration of the subject was continued by Rev. J. Pearson (Presbyterian), after which the requests for prayer were presented.

At one o'clock the Rev. Richard Leitch (Presbyterian) presided, and read a portion of Scripture. Rev. W. Lenwood (Congregational) addressed the meeting on "The best means of winning souls." After reviewing various special methods advocated and practised by Christian communities, he contended that the great aim of the Church of Christ should be to be imbued by the Holy Spirit. It was by no means sufficient to have mission stations in connection with churches. The whole Church of Jesus Christ wants to be a mission station, and the whole of the members should be missionaries. The work should not be left to the minister, however earnest. He did not care to see too much distinction drawn between "the ministry" and "the laity;" the members of a Church were as responsible for the winning of souls as the minister. Mr. B. Cawood (missionary) said they wanted more work on the part of the church, and more direct and individual sympathy with the careless thrown into it. Remarks followed by Mr. Donaldson, Rev. W. J. Townsend, Rev. J. Pearson, and several other speakers.

The next subject, "Scriptural Holiness," was opened by Rev. Thos. Cook (Wesleyan Evangelist), who fortified his positions by copious quotations from Scripture. He feared much of the Christian work of the time would not stand the test because it was not done out of love to God, and love to man. When God filled them with his love, they would be made partakers of his nature; and they would spontaneously do what God would have them to do; duty would become a joy. That was the secret of true Christian liberty. Other speakers followed up the topic with much earnestness and feeling. The Chairman said, the more they humbled themselves before God, and were prepared to follow Christ and give up everything that was sinful and even doubtful, in that proportion would the Holy Ghost possess their souls.

At three o'clock the chair was taken by Rev. Jas. Cuthbertson (Wesleyan), and the subject of "Doubtful Things" was introduced by Rev. Thos. Waugh (Wesleyan Evangelist). As long as a man clung to whatever was doubtful he could not enjoy the full sunshine of God's blessing. What was true of the individual was true of the Church itself. He loved his church, but there were things connected with it that often caused him bitter tears. In their congregations they had balls and dancing parties and theatre-going. He had no sympathy with the distinction drawn between a religious and a secular life, for if a man was thoroughly leavened with the principles of God's religion, everything he did was religious. Rev. R. Leitch said that by receiving Jesus Christ more fully into their hearts, and with a full surrender of themselves, all doubtful things would be put right; all these questions of church irregularities, as of personal bad habits, would settle themselves. Other speakers pursued the subject, manifesting unanimity of sentiment.

The closing topic, "How to deal with Inquirers," was introduced by Mr. H. Armstrong (Secretary Y.M.C.A.), who handled the subject with clearness and force. From his experience he found that in dealing with inquirers they should not pester them too much; the first thing to do was to get out of the way and let Jesus Christ enter the hearts of the inquirers Himself. To deal with inquirers, a man should himself be an out-and-out Christian. The practical arrangements should be such that they could talk without being interrupted, and without interrupting others. It was frequently a terrible ordeal for inquirers to go through, and they should be dealt with in as gentle, considerate, and cheerful manner. The speaker closed his remarks with interesting references to several inquirers mentioned in Scripture. Rev. T. Waugh said every inquirer had a desire, and they should strive to reach that without pressing them too much. Mr. T. H. Bainbridge (Wesleyan) said his first question generally was, Has the Holy Spirit made you willing to surrender? Messrs. M'Callum, J. A. France, Joseph Spraggon, and other speakers, followed in rapid succession in a most profitable manner.

The interesting and successful meeting closed at five o'clock, after which a large number of the friends partook of tea in the lower hall.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The arrests in Manchester for drunkenness in 1885 were lower than in any year since 1875.

Ninety-six churches are affiliated with the Glasgow Free Church Presbyterian Temperance Society.

The Lancet opposes the granting of a licence for the ordinary sale of drink at the East London People's Palace.

In the Temperance Department of a leading Life Assurance Society, the death rate for the past year has been less than four per thousand.

A public-house in London, for the goodwill and lease of which £9300 was paid in 1882, was lately offered for sale, and the highest bid was £6200.

Rev. Joseph Hargreaves, who recently passed away, was fifty-six years in the Wesleyan ministry, and over fifty years an abstainer. He died in his 80th year.

The United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union, inaugurated in 1882, has branches on nearly all the large railways, and a membership of about ten thousand railway employés.

During a Gospel Temperance Mission, conducted by Miss J. Sherman, at Cameron, W. Va, containing one thousand inhabitants, the citizens bought the entire stock of liquor in the chief saloon of the town and poured it into the gutter.

The Toronto Globe sent two commissioners to Maine to report on the Prohibition Law. One was a prohibitionist, the other a pronounced anti-prohibitionist, but both reported that the law was a success.

There is a prospect of solid action on the part of the Temperance party in the House of Commons. A large and influential committee, and four secretaries, who will act as "whips," as occasion may require, have been appointed.

The annual business meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission was held on February 23, in the Mayor's Parlour, Town Hall. The report was an encouraging and suggestive record of self-denying work.

"The Unemployed" should take care what "leaders" they follow. Two of the leaders in the recent Birmingham demonstrations were tipsy the same evening, one of them spending the night in a police cell; a third has several times been in custody for fraud and felony.

The eighth anniversary of the introduction to England of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance movement was recently celebrated at Hoxton Hall, Mr. W. I. Palmer in the chair. Several speakers referred with pleasure to Mr. Noble's expected return for next winter's work.

In the city of Mexico, pulque, an intoxicant, is the drink of the masses. The Government sternly prohibits its sale after six o'clock at night, as otherwise fighting and even murder would be common. By a strange inconsistency, expensive bar-rooms for the upper classes are not interfered with.

At a meeting of the British Medical Temperance Association, Dr. Norman Kerr, Consulting Physician to the Dalrymple Home for Inebriates, gave a resumé of the results of a second year's experience at the Home. Seventy-eight cases had been admitted. Of the sixty discharged, and whose after-history was known, one-half had been so much improved as to be able to fulfil the duties of their station in life. The success of the Home had exceeded Dr. Kerr's expectations.

The International Congress of the British and Continental Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice is announced to be held in London in June next.

A Branch of the Y.W.C.A. for Kilburn has been formed; suitable rooms for an Institute have been taken at No. 103, High-road, Kilburn, and will shortly be opened.

The Laws in most of the United States for the protection of girls are very faulty, the protected age being generally ten or twelve, when it should be sixteen, at the very lowest.—Independent.

Scripture Union portions for the ensuing week.—March, 7, Num. xiii. 17—33; March 8, xiv. 1—12; March 9, xiv. 13—25; March 10, xiv. 26—45; March 11, xvi. 1—11; March 12, xvi. 12—22; March 13, xvi. 23—35.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.—We greatly rejoice to learn that the Duchess of Grafton has generously contributed an amount sufficient to cover the entire cost of a new mission vessel to be placed with the Lowestoft fleet.

Theatrical Tea Meetings.—A meeting for women engaged at the theatres, held the other night at Waterloo-road School-room, was addressed by Mr. P. McLagan, M.P., Mr. Thomas Watson, M.P., Mr. C. H. Wilson, M.P., and Mr. W. Saunders, M.P.

DR. CHARLES STANFORD.

DO Londoners know that one of the most remarkable ministries in their midst is carried on at Denmark-hill Baptist Chapel, Camberwell? It has always been remarkable during the many years of its faithful exercise; but it is wonderful, now, when it is considered that the preacher is almost entirely blind. Dr. Stanford is known to many by his biographies of Alleine and Doddridge—books that combine learning and charm, as Lady Jane Grey did; books full of sweetness, light, and fire, as well as of research. But the careful worker has almost lost his sight, and cannot any more decipher obscure manuscripts. But his spiritual vision is as distinct as ever, as any one may discover who visits his chapel on a Sunday morning.

Denmark-hill Baptist Chapel has honourable traditions. Dr. Edward Steane, of the Evangelical Alliance, long preached there. It is not a large or imposing building; but there is evident intelligence and sympathy in the congregation; and the preacher is followed with close and respectful attention. Prayers and sermons alike are marked by a sure and unfailing beauty of thought and language. The preacher never hesitates, never misses a word. If Londoners had known of Dr. Stanford, the place would have been too strait for him long ago. As it is, how many are starving for fresh, devout, intelligent teaching, who might find bread enough and to spare here?—Contemporary Pulpit.

Mission and other Appeals.

Mr. Henry Cook (Seamen's Mission, Gosport), who writes of blessing in connection with the visit of the mission vessel Mystery to Plymouth, asks for a further supply of Gospel books, tracts, and book bags (8 in. by 7), also Bibles and Testaments, English and French.

Wandsworth.—A new hall is about to be built near the site of the old Howard-street Gospel Mission. It will accommodate from 250 to 300 persons. Mr. John Soames, hon. superintendent, 7, Bromfelde-road, Clapham, S.W., writes that the hall is greatly needed in the locality, and he asks for help in defraying the cost of its erection.

Free Library, London-street, Bethnal Green, E.—An effort is being made to induce some of the many girls and young women to be found sauntering about the East-end streets to spend their evenings at this comfortable and instructive place of resort. Help is asked for carrying on the work. The librarian is Mr. G. F. Hilcken.

The National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, Woodhouse, Wanstead, Essex, seeks to save young girls (not thieves), between the ages of eleven and fifteen, whether orphans or otherwise, who are, from any circumstance, in danger of becoming abandoned. It has saved over 1300 such, and has now 71 under its care. The committee regret that, from want of funds, 29 vacant beds cannot be filled. The office is 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W.

Lady Aberdeen's efforts to reform the moral as well as the social condition of the labouring agricultural classes in the north of Scotland are already showing good results. Associations are being formed, and schemes, simple yet embracing vast improvements, set up. Perhaps in no class was reform so urgently needed.

Cambridge.—About one hundred and twenty undergraduates lately assembled in the Alexandra Hall to hear an address from Rev. E. W. Moore, London, entitled, "The Christian's Portrait" (Gal. ii. 20). The meeting was a remarkable one, and the words were spoken with great power. About sixty remained to a short after-meeting, when many made a surrender to the Lord, signifying their desire to live "All for Jesus."

SUNDAY, MARCH 7.—NUMBERS XXVI.

1.—It came to pass after the plague, that, &c.—The census of Israel which was taken in the plains of Moab (which forms the subject of this chapter) does not differ essentially as to its total from that taken at Sinai (chap. i.). That gave the number of Israel as 603,550; this as 601,730. The greater part of the tribes show an increase of numbers, and the most serious decrease of any is in the case of Simeon, which at Sinai was 59,300 and now shows only 22,200. This may, perhaps, be accounted for by Zimri, the chief offender in the recent transgression, belonging to this tribe (xxv. 14). His example may have misled his tribesmen, and so have involved his tribe more than any other in the ravages of "the plague for Peor's sake." It is also worthy of note that "in the parting blessing of Moses, uttered at no great interval from this date, the tribe of Simeon alone is omitted."—Sp. Com.

11.—Notwithstanding the children of Korah died not.—Why this distinguishing mercy should have been vouchsafed to the children of the worst offender in the rebellion recorded in chap. xvi., we cannot say. It is interesting, however, to find this family, thus preserved as monuments of mercy, taking the chief part in leading the praises of Israel. "They served as musicians in the sanctuary. Heman, one of the three precentors, was a Korahite (1 Chron. vi. 18—23), his fourteen sons belonged, together with the four sons of Asaph and the six sons of Ethan, to the twenty-four heads of the divisions of the musicians (1 Chron. xxv.). The Korahtes were also renowned even in the days of Jehoshaphat, as singers and musicians (2 Chron. xx. 19)."—Delitzsch.

56.—According to the lot shall the possession thereof be divided.—"This method was, doubtless, adopted not only in order to preclude jealousy and disputes, but also that the several tribes might regard the territories as determined for them by God Himself. Comp. Prov. xvi. 33."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, MARCH 8.—NUMBERS XXVII.

1.—The daughters of Zelophehad.—"The command given (xxvi. 52) to divide the land among the people 'according to the number of the tribes of their fathers,' suggests the petition of the daughters of Zelophehad, now brought before Moses; and the decision in this case leads to a general enactment respecting the right of inheritance when a man died and left only daughters behind him. It does not appear that women in Israel had up to the present time enjoyed any distinct right of inheritance."—Sp. Com.

3.—Them that gathered themselves together against the Lord in the company of Korah.—A superficial view of the sin of Korah might have regarded it as rebellion against Aaron, or Moses and Aaron, but the daughters of Zelophehad view it rightly as "against the Lord," who had appointed Aaron to the office which Korah and his company would fain have shared.

14.—Ye rebelled against my commandment . . . to sanctify Me at the water before their eyes.—The commandment was, "Speak ye unto the rock before their eyes, and it shall give forth his water." This would have "sanctified the Lord before their eyes" as the Source and Giver of the water. Instead of this, Moses and Aaron seek to make much of their own merely ministerial functions—so much so as to shut out from view the real Source and Giver of the blessing. "Hear, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock? . . . And he smote the rock twice" (Num. xx. 10, 11). Here we have a picture of the similar rebellion in Christendom against the commandment of the Lord, who instituted a speaking ministry, but not a performing ministry, as ritualistic priestcraft teaches.

18.—Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is the Spirit, and lay thine hand upon him.—This laying on of hands, which was carried out (ver. 23), did not convey the Spirit to Joshua for it was there before. But it solemnly appointed him to the office for which God had previously qualified him.

TUESDAY, MARCH 9.—NUMBERS XXVIII.

3.—Two lambs of the first year without spot day by day, for a continual burnt offering.—This is a repetition of the ordinance of the daily offering already enjoined at Sinai (Exod. xxix. 38—42). There it is given in connection with the consecration of the altar, as though indicating the chief purpose for which the altar was set apart. It thus formed the foundation of all the sacrificial use of the altar, as every particular offering or sacrifice which might be burned upon the altar was laid upon fire, which was thus continually fed by the daily sacrifice of the lamb every morning and evening. When John the Baptist said of Jesus, "Behold the Lamb of God," he pointed Him out as the fulfilment of this long continued type, as Isaiah liii. 7 had already prophetically announced him. Although there had been through Israel's sin and punishment cessations from time to time of the daily offering (which cessations were regarded as temporary suspensions of their national life) it was not till the fulfilment of the type, in the death of the Lord Jesus, "in the midst of the week" (Dan. ix. 27), that it could be said, "He shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." The word "to cease" here is literally "to rest," from the same root as "Sabbath," and it denotes a cessation not caused by violent interruption, but by the work being finished, which affords valid ground for rest (see Gen. ii. 1, 2). The actual cessation of this "continual burnt offering" did not, it is true, take place till the destruction of Jerusalem; but the shadow was virtually supplanted by the substance, and so "caused to rest" when Jesus said, "It is finished." The accompanying meat-offering seems to typify the consecration of Christ's people to Him in their lives—the living sacrifice of Rom. xii. 1—while the drink-offering is the pouring out of the life or dying in his service: see Phil. ii. 17, and 2 Tim. iv. 6, in both of which texts the Apostle speaks of his approaching death as a drink-offering.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10.—NUMBERS XXIX.

This chapter continues the subject of the last, viz., the offerings that were to be offered in connection with the various festivals—weekly, monthly, and yearly, over and above those that constituted the pecular feature of each festival. For example, at ver. 7 we are told the offerings that were to be offered on the day of atonement, but no mention is made of the great sin offering (Lev. xvi.), which constituted the chief feature of that day's ritual.

12.—And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month.—"The feast of Tabernacles, the special regulations for the celebration of which are contained in Lev. xxiii. 34—43, was distinguished above all the other feasts of the year by the great number of burnt offerings, which raised it into the greatest festival of joy. On the seven feast days, the first of which was to be celebrated with Sabbatical rest and a holy meeting, there were to be offered, in addition to the daily burnt offering every day, a he-goat for a sin offering, and seventy oxen in all for a burnt offering during the seven days, as well as every day two rams and fourteen yearling lambs. Whilst, therefore, the number of rams and lambs was double the number offered at the Passover and feast of Pentecost, the number of oxen was fivefold. This multiplication of the oxen was distributed in such a way, that instead of there being ten offered every day, there were thirteen on the first day, twelve on the second, and so on, deducting one every day, so that on the seventh day there were exactly seven offered, the arrangement being probably made for the purpose of securing the holy number seven for this last day."—Keil.

THURSDAY, MARCH 11.—NUMBERS XXX.

2.—If a man vow a vow unto the Lord.—After laying down the general principle of the binding character of vows or oaths made unto the Lord, certain cases of deliverances from such obligations are recorded. These are confined to women: (1) To one "in her father's house in her youth" (3—5), in which case her father may disallow her in the day that he heareth of it; but if, when he hear, he does not disallow her, her vow or oath shall stand.

(2) To one who "has at all a husband" (6—8). "The 'at all' intimates that the case of a girl betrothed but not yet actually married is here especially contemplated. Among the Jews the ceremony of betrothal was hardly less important than that of marriage."—Sp. Com. In this case, too, the husband on hearing it can disallow her vow, or "the rash utterance of her lips wherewith she hath bound her soul" (ver. 6, R.V.).

(3) Widows and divorced women could not escape the obligation (ver. 9).

(4) A married woman living in her husband's house can be freed by her husband disallowing it (10—15). "Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void" (ver. 13). If this disallowing take place on the day he hears it, then the vow or oath is made void; and even if this be only done afterwards, he still has power to free her from her obligation, only "then he shall bear her iniquity" (ver. 15).

The spiritual application of all this is deeply interesting, whether we view it in relation to Israel, or to the Church, or to the individual believing soul. The Lord Jesus has undertaken vows from which there is no escaping: "I will pay my vows before them that fear Him" (Ps. xxii. 25). But from many a "rash utterance of the lips" whereby "he binds his soul" the believing soul is delivered by his Father, or his Husband (Eph. v. 25) disallowing it. How gracious is this provision for delivering souls from promises and vows, often inconsiderately made, such as Israel took upon themselves at the foot of Sinai, when they said, "all that the Lord hath said we will do, and be obedient" (Exod. xxiv. 7).

FRIDAY, MARCH 12.—NUMBERS XXXI.

"The command of xxv. 17 is now ordered to be executed, and a war of vengeance against Midian is undertaken. This war, and the transactions connected with it, are narrated in this chapter; and would seem to have occurred immediately before those closing addresses of Moses to the people which form the Book of Deuteronomy. The result of this war completed and secured the conquest of the promised land east of Jordan. The employment in this work of so small a number of Israelites as 12,000 (ver. 4) against the whole nation of Midian: the selection of an equal number from each tribe, irrespective of its warlike strength; the appointment of Phinehas, famous for his zeal against the very sin to which the Midianites had tempted Israel, to take the lead in the war 'with the holy instruments and trumpets' (ver. 6); and the extraordinary preservation of all those engaged (ver. 49), are tokens that on this occasion, no less than when the cities of the plain were destroyed by fire from heaven, the hand of God directed the stroke. It is but analagous to his general dealings, to scourge the Midianites through the instrumentality of their own victims."—Sp. Com.

"The Midianites furnish a type of that peculiar kind of influence which the world exerts over the hearts of the people of God—the fascinating and ensnaring power of the world, used by Satan to hinder our entrance upon our proper heavenly portion. Israel should have had nothing to do with these Midianites; but having, in an evil hour—an unguarded moment—been betrayed into association with them, nothing remains but war and utter extermination."—C. H. M.

SATURDAY, MARCH 13.—NUMBERS XXXII.

The cause which led to the settlement of two and a half tribes—Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh—on the eastern side of Jordan is here recorded. One is reminded at once of Lot's choice (Gen. xiii.), and as in his case "flocks and herds" suggested the desirableness of the "well watered" plain, so here "the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle" (ver. 1).

5.—Bring us not over Jordan.—The spiritual lesson taught by the incident recorded in this chapter would seem to be very similar to that derived from Lot's conduct in Gen. xiii. Lot's separation from Abram "that had the promises" resembles the separation of these tribes from the tabernacle of the Lord, the dwelling-place of the God of Israel. This separation subsequently brought them into trouble, as we hear in Joshua xxii. Moreover, being on the wrong side of Jordan, they before others fell victims to the invasions from Assyria, by which eventually Israel first, and subsequently Judah, were swept away. This will clearly appear from 1 Chron. v. 26, "and the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul king of Assyria, and the spirit of Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria, and he carried them away, even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan, unto this day." This was about fifty years before the general captivity of the ten tribes, and nearly two hundred years before the captivity of Judah.

32.—We will pass over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan may be ours.—The two tribes and a half were ready to go over Jordan to settle Israel in its possession there, but only that they might return to the land of their choice where they had left their cattle. Apt picture of those who, whilst professing to be "partakers of the heavenly calling," "mind earthly things." It is better to wait for God's appointed inheritance for his people, "incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven," than choose to have our portion here on this side of Jordan.

Principal of Bristol Baptist College.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED:

A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple.

Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"In Dr. Culross' new work, entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this present life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust, and small gain in bread-corn; and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender in good weight and measure. It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes; but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Thoughtful chapters based on the leading incidents in the life of John. The admirable manner in which the subject is treated, and the excellence of the ideas themselves, should win for this work a large share of attention."
Rock.

"In a series of nine chapters of singular freshness and beauty the various aspects of the life, labour, and teachings of the beloved disciple are traced. While a tender affection for the subject of the work is evident, anything like hero worship is carefully avoided, and it is never forgotten that 'the servant is not greater than his Lord.' For the young Christian just entered upon the new life, as well as for the more advanced believer, the book is invaluable."

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Miss S. S. L., of GUILDFORD.

This young lady has been a patient, on and off, for more than two years. Had circumstances permitted her to continue right on, no doubt she would have recovered in one-third of the time. Attacks of bronchitis had reduced her to a pitiable state. Writing me in November, 1883, she states: "My cough is very bad, my throat inflamed, with white specks very thick at the back of my throat. I have much pain, all down the left side and through to my back, and under the collar-bone. I bring up large quantities of phlegm. I am very weak. My left foot swells, sometimes all over. I have much flushings of the face, and perspire profusely at night."

In about a month after the above letter, Miss L. reports:—"I am happy to tell you that the cough is easier, breathing relieved, and acute pain gone" (other symptoms remained). She adds:—"I am so thankful I was led to you."

In another month she writes:—"Throat much better, flushings of the face less frequent; I eat and sleep better—a little return of pain." In the spring she writes:—"I sleep well, my cough is much better. The Liniment has relieved the pain. I use the Balsam twice a day." (This was not in accordance with explicit directions, three times a day.)

In the summer of 1884 she writes: "I walked out on Sunday morning, the first time I have left this house for one year and a half. I cannot express how thankful I feel."

Several other letters report a gradual improvement. Slow, however, because (as she acknowledged) she took her medicine only twice instead of three times per day. At this time she expressed a sanguine belief that she would recover her health and strength.

I did not hear from her for several months after this. Although she had never taken her medicine with due regularity, she was then so far recovered as to be hoping to resume her position as governess.

On October 8 last, she writes:—"I keep beautifully well; I can with confidence say as well as I have ever been in all my life. Wishing you every blessing," &c.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

THE distressing symptoms of Nervous Exhaustion and Debility are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed Galvanic Belts, which are so arranged as to convey a powerful electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of waste and decay.

Dr. Golding Bird, Physician to Guy's Hospital, says:—"I can hardly recommend Mr. Pulvermacher's invention too strongly."

Dr. R. M. Lawrence, Physician to Great Northern Hospital, says:—"I have frequently used Pulvermacher's appliances, and can testify to the great merit of this invention."

Dr. Vines, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, says:—"Having used Mr. Pulvermacher's Belts for many years in the course of medical practice, I am in a position to speak of their great value as a curative agent in cases of nervous disease or functional maladies."

Messrs. J. L. PULVERMACHER & CO., the eminent Medical Galvanists, who have had upwards of 36 years' experience in the treatment of Nervous Diseases, give advice daily at their Galvanic Establishment, 194, Regent-street, W., free of charge, and patients who are unable to call should write, describing their symptoms.

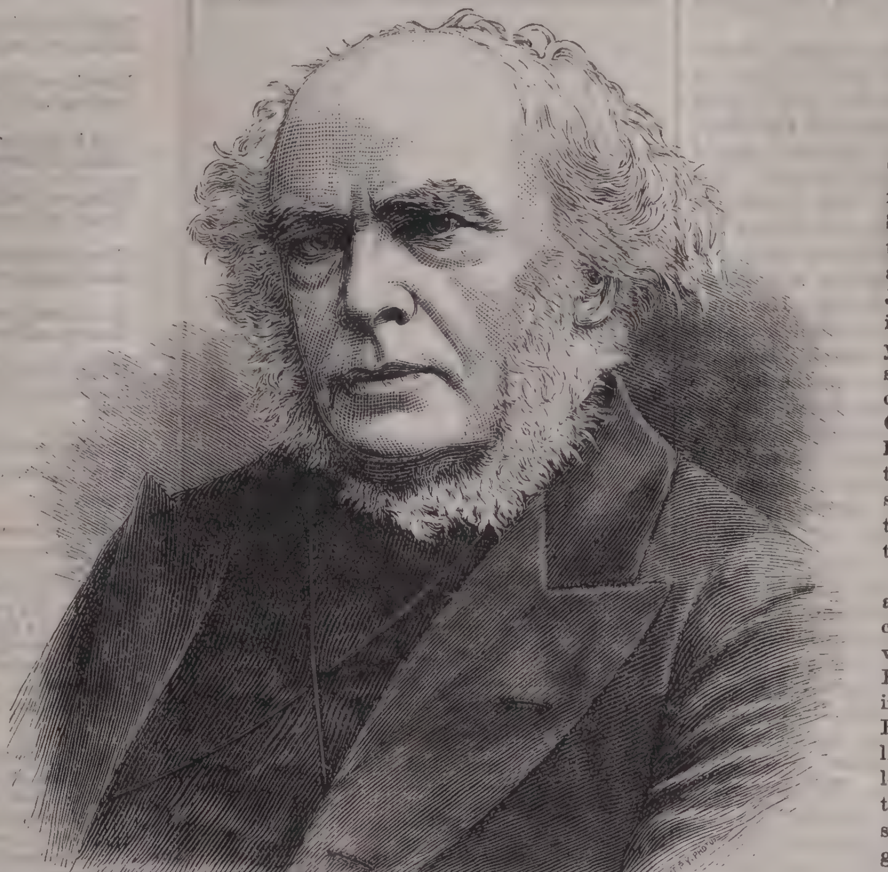
REV. HORATIUS BONAR, D.D.

BONAR is a loved and honoured name in Scotland. It has been borne by men who did much for religion by their life and teaching. Before 1688 John Bonar, minister of Torphichen, was a torchbearer in dark days. His work was carried on by his descendants, of whom the subject of this sketch is a living representative.



From Photograph by Messrs. Elliot & Fry.

HORATIUS BONAR received his early education at the High School and University of Edinburgh. In youth he devoted himself to the service of God, and chose the Christian ministry to be his life-work. He was fortunate in having Dr. Chalmers for a teacher. The lessons taught him by that divine were doubly helpful: they laid the foundation of the solid learning which has grown with growing years, and they filled him with the enthusiasm of a master mind consecrated to the highest aims. The value of such a training can hardly be over-estimated. It gave tone and strength to a life, when most susceptible of influence.

In 1837 the student became a minister. His sphere of labour was the famous old town of Kelso, situated on the banks of the Tweed, and surrounded by a country celebrated in song and tale. He gave himself up to his work with unflagging assiduity. In the pulpit he preached with fire and unction; and in house-to-house visitation he proved himself the comforter of the sorrowful and the guide of the perplexed. Varied and numerous as were the calls on his time, he managed to spare some hours to edit The Presbyterian, a magazine which did yeoman service for evangelical truth in its day. This was the literary apprenticeship of the skilled writer. He loved to handle the pen, but his chief joy lay in preaching. The impulses he got from his teacher were deepened by his fellowship with the saintly M'Cheyne, of Dundee. A great revival had sprung up in Dundee. The Spirit of God was poured forth, and many souls were saved. A tide of blessing swept through the land. Mr. Bonar entered heartily into the movement and helped to spread it. He spared not himself in his effort to carry the Gospel to the perishing. At home, and from home, he spoke as a dying man to dying men. The result was many conversions. This success did not satisfy him. He wished to do more. He thought his pen could reach those beyond his voice, so he wrote "The Kelso Tracts." His aim was threefold—to warn the careless, to put salvation simply, and to edify saints. These messengers of life entered hundreds of homes, and were eagerly read. They were not arrows sent at random, but struck with convincing power. Their circulation in Scotland and England was very large; and they met with a warm reception in America. Their work is not yet ended, for to this day they are blessed of God.

Mr. Bonar had then, as now, a special influence over the young. His winning manner and gentle tones caught their attention, and his weighty words impressed their hearts. His Sabbath-school services in Kelso are still remembered with delight. He wrote for each service a hymn, which was sung by the boys and girls. These hymns have since found their way to most Sabbath-schools. Among them were such favourites as "I lay my sins on Jesus," "I was a wandering sheep," "A few more years shall roll." After the singing came a short address, in which the love of Christ was told. These hours among the lambs of the flock were full of pleasure. They gave rest to the pastor, and were attended with the best results.

The Disruption came, and brought with it stirring changes. Some ministers were perplexed, but Mr. Bonar was not. He cast in his lot at once with the Free Church. He had not, like most of his brethren, to leave his church on leaving the denomination. It was secured to him and his congregation by some clauses in the title deeds. As the years rolled on it became increasingly a centre of light and usefulness. Its pulpit gave forth no uncertain sound, but declared fully the faith delivered to the saints. Its people were full of zeal and good works. Fired by their pastor's example, they followed him as he followed his Master.

But we have not so much to do with the pastoral as with the literary work of these years. The one was narrowed to a provincial town, but the other reached to every town in the land and to foreign countries. Mr. Bonar wrote much and well. His mind was stored with knowledge gained from many books, and his heart was on fire with love to Christ and souls; so his were winged words. His theological reading was unusually wide for a busy minister. He was quite at home with the fathers, studied the literature of the Reformation carefully, and revelled in the Puritans. What he got, he could not keep to himself: he was but a steward, gathering to enrich others. His books were very popular. They were welcomed at many firesides, and read with profit. His "Night of Weeping" was a balm to bereaved hearts, comforting them in the presence of an open grave; and his "Morning of Joy" lifted the thoughts of the sorrowful to that land where suffering and death are unknown. Other volumes taught lessons in Christian experience, and unfolded the truths of the kingdom.

Dr. Bonar is a well-known champion of premillenarian views. He embodied his opinions in "Prophetic Landmarks," which has become the handbook of those of his way of thinking. Nobody can read that book without feeling the author's earnestness, and his power of making out a good case. His advocacy of these beliefs has also been promoted in The Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, which he conducted with singular skill for many years.

The years of the Kelso ministry flowed smoothly. They had not much in them of external interest, but they were full of good work well done. In the pulpit, in the study, and at the fireside, the minister showed himself worthy of his high calling. The round of parochial duties was broken in 1856 by a tour through the desert of Sinai and the Holy Land. The strain of long labours so crippled his strength that his sympathetic people gave him the rest he needed. He turned it to good account. On his return home, he wrote a book describing in graphic language what he had seen, and flinging the light of careful observation on Bible scenes. So the holiday served a double end: it supplied the weary worker with fresh vigour, and furnished many readers with a new picture of places very familiar though never seen. Other services to the elucidation of Scripture followed. The most valuable of them was "Light and Truth: or Bible Thoughts and Themes." It is a series of studies on texts in the Old and New Testaments, so arranged as to form a kind of continued exposition, and abounding in passages which touch the heart and cling to the memory. In all he wrote, as in all he said, Dr. Bonar was consistent to his life-purpose—God's glory and the profit of souls. He did not seek earthly honour, but it came to him. His name got to be a household word, and his writings won a high place in the devotional literature of our century.

As his reputation grew, efforts were made to lead him to a larger sphere. Such efforts were unsuccessful, till, in 1865, a handsome new church was built in that suburb of Edinburgh called The Grange. He was asked to fill its pulpit, and he consented. Like-minded men and women flocked round him; and for twenty years he has ministered to them. Few visitors to Edinburgh have missed the opportunity of hearing him preach. They might go out of curiosity to see and listen to the sweet singer, but they were not long in the pew before they forgot the poet in the preacher. The opening prayer lifted them into the presence of God, and there they remained as the rich voice went on to speak of a love stronger than death, and of the deep experiences of Christian living. A Sabbath at The Grange is, as we have reason to know, a treasured memory to many tourists.

Dr. Bonar is now old and feeble. He is unfit for the heavy duties of his pastorate, so the Edinburgh presbytery have given permission to the congregation to call a colleague. The last days of an aged saint seem to us like a summer sunset; they are full of peace and beauty. The strong sun has run its course, and as it sinks to rest it bathes the landscape in a golden glow, which makes the already beautiful more beautiful still. So is it with Horatius Bonar. His long life has been spent in giving light, and its close is aglow with the beauty of saintliness. Men feel better because of such a history, and in presence of such a career. The letter to Mr. Mathieson, read at the Advent Conference last week and printed on a succeeding page, shows that while the natural force of the aged servant of God may be abated, his mental vigour and power to discern the signs of the times, are still in fullest exercise.

Before we finish this fragmentary sketch, we must say something about Dr. Bonar's poetry, though we do not need to say much; it is so well known. His "Hymns of Faith and Hope" are the fruit of thirty years' thought and feeling. They appeared in various magazines, and have now been collected. Their title is very appropriate, for they sing of faith triumphant in difficulties, and of hope that never grows old. They are not sectarian, but seek to utter the experiences of all who serve the Lord Jesus Christ. They contain poetry of the highest order. Such gems as the following are to be found amongst them:—

The star is not extinguished when it sets
  Upon the dull horizon; it but goes
To shine in other skies, then re-appear
  In ours, as fresh as when it first arose.

The river is not lost, when, o'er the rock
  It pours its flood into the abyss below:
Its scattered force re-gathering from the shock,
  It hastens onward, with yet fuller flow.

The bright sun dies not, when the shadowing orb
  Of the eclipsing moon obscures its ray;
It still is shining on, and soon to us
  Will burst undimmed into the joy of day.

The lily dies not, when both flower and leaf
  Fade, and are strewed upon the chill sad ground;
Gone down for shelter to its mother earth,
  'Twill rise, re-bloom, and shed its fragrance [round.

. . . . . .

Thus nothing dies, or only dies to live;
  Star, stream, sun, flower, the dew-drop, and the gold;
Each goodly thing, instinct with buoyant hope
  Hastes to put on its purer, finer mould.

Thus in the quiet joy of kindly trust,
  We bid each parting saint a brief farewell,
Weeping, yet smiling, we commit their dust
  To the safe keeping of the silent cell.

In his poetry, as in his prose, Dr. Bonar never forgets that his work in the world is to proclaim "Christ and Him crucified." The cross is for him the centre of the universe, and the atoning sacrifice of Calvary is his loved theme.

Thy works, not mine, O Christ,
  Speak gladness to this heart;
They tell me all is done;
  They bid my fear depart.
    To whom, save Thee,
    Who can alone
    For sin atone,
    Lord, shall I flee?

The Doctor's poetry is rich and varied. He strikes many chords in the harp of music with a master hand. Some further selections may show something of the power he has to sing to the weary, the sorrowful, and the struggling. The faith which turns earth into heaven and fills the heart with hope finds fitting expression in:—

Life is coming, death is going,
Quickly, past us, time is flowing,
    Amen, amen!
Day is dawning, night is flying,
Soon shall end this grief and sighing.
    Amen, amen!
Rest is nearing, toil is ending,
Homeward now our path is bending.
    Amen, amen!
Right is hasting, wrong is leaving,
Earth ere long shall cease its grieving.
    Amen, amen!
Love is coming, hate is going,
Seeds of unity are sowing.
    Amen, amen!
Fear is passing, hope is brightening,
Burdened brows and hearts are lightening.
    Amen, amen!
Cells are bursting, chains are breaking.
Weary spirits cease their aching.
    Amen, amen!
Tears are dying, songs are breaking,
Earth's glad echoes are awaking.
    Amen, amen!
Graves are opening, dead are meeting,
Heaven and earth each other greeting.
    Amen, amen!
Hill and vale put on their gladness,
Not a trace remains of sadness.
    Amen, amen!

But sometimes the dark cloud of sorrow dims this hope; then the burdened soul finds relief in prayer.

When the weary, seeking rest,
  To thy goodness flee;
When the heavy laden cast
  All their load on Thee.
When the troubled, seeking peace,
  On thy name shall call;
When the sinner, seeking life,
  At thy feet shall fall;
Hear then, in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling-place on high.

. . . .

When creation, in her pangs,
  Heaves her heavy groan;
When thy Salem's exiled sons,
  Breathe their bitter moan;
When thy widowed, weeping Church,
  Looking for a home,
Sendeth up her silent sigh,
  Come, Lord Jesus, come!
Hear then, in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling-place on high.

Dr. Bonar, like every true poet, has come under the spell of David's matchless psalms. He has turned them into English verse with considerable success. How he has carried out this difficult task may be inferred from his rendering of the Twenty-third Psalm—that lullaby of childhood and song of trust in old age:—

Jehovah, He my Shepherd is,
  I shall have neither want or ill;
In pastures green He lays me down,
  And leads me by the waters still.

This soul of mine He lifteth up,
  And me He leadeth gently on,
Along the paths of righteousness;
  And all for his name's sake alone.

Yea, and when walking in the vale
  Of death's dark shade, I fear no ill;
For Thou art ever with me, Lord,
  Thy rod and staff they comfort still.

A table Thou hast richly spread
  For me, mine enemies before;
With oil Thou dost anoint my head,
  My cup with blessing runneth o'er.

Goodness and mercy all the days
  Of my life here shall follow me;
And then for length of endless days
  My home Jehovah's house shall be.

His strong faith in the near approach of the Second Advent colours much of Dr. Bonar's poetry. His hope is in the day of the Lord's appearing; he looks with eager longing for the dawning of the day when, as he has beautifully expressed it in the verses given in our last issue—heaven shall be on earth,

And earth shall all be heaven.

Quotations might be multiplied; but those given will have served their purpose if they lead the reader to go to the poems themselves. In them he will find a music to silence earth's discords, and a loving trust to throw a rainbow of hope over the sorrows of life.

THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH.—I.

THE CAUSES OF ITS WONDERFUL SUCCESS.

By Rev. JAMES GALL.

WHY was it that the Apostolic Church, without money, without learning, without political patronage, and in the face of a fiery persecution, spread itself over the whole Roman Empire, and in less than three centuries undermined and overthrew the religion of the Cæsars?

Compare with this our modern evangelism. In our own country, for example, Christianity has been dominant for centuries, and everything that money, learning, and political power could do for it has been done, and yet three-fourths of our population is living without God and without hope in the world, and Christianity is able to do little more than hold its own. How can this be accounted for?

There are two causes. The first is that the whole Apostolic Church was an active propagator of the Christian faith; whereas we have delegated the work to a comparatively small class of professional men. The second is, that the Apostolic Church received and retained the baptism of the Holy Ghost, whereas we have lost even the tradition of its purpose. Let us look at the first.

THE WHOLE CHURCH MUST BE ENGAGED.

The command to preach the Gospel to every creature was addressed not to the Apostles only, but to the whole Church. When a man is converted he is no longer his own: he belongs to Christ, and Christ claims his entire service. Before his conversion, the only question of his life was, what should he eat, what should he drink, and wherewith should he be clothed? but after his conversion, all that he has to do is to seek the advancement of God's kingdom, and if he does so, all these things shall be added to him.

The Israelites in the wilderness were a type of Christ's Church here. The only things they had to do was to receive the law, and build the tabernacle; and it was the people, not the priests, that built it. While they were doing so, God gave their meat, their drink, and their clothing by miracle.

But it may be said that Christians now do not get their food by miracle, and, therefore, they must attend to business. And so they must; but their business is only their sustentation while they are working for God. The Christian and the man of the world do not differ in their attention to business, but in their way of spending their leisure time. They both attend to business, but in both cases there business is only a means to an end. The man of the world lives for his own enjoyment—the Christian's luxury is to work for Christ.

The unconverted man, who spends his life in making a fortune, is wise in his generation; but the child of God, who would spend the little moment of his existence here in anything else than seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness, makes a tremendous mistake, greater than that of a man who would deliberately light his candle with a thousand pound note.

"Ye are the salt of the earth;" "Ye are the light of the world;" said our Lord to his disciples; but if the salt should lose its savour, or if the candle be put under a bushel, how shall the earth be salted, or the world get into light? It was for this that the pastorate was instituted, and now the responsibility lies also upon them. It is only in so far as their people "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life," that they will rejoice in the day of Christ, that they have not run in vain, nor laboured in vain (Phil. ii. 15, 16).

There can be no doubt then that it is the duty of every Christian to be a labourer in the cause of Christ, and that it is impossible that the world can ever be converted until the whole Church has been organised under their pastors and brought into the field. The ten thousand living must be brought into loving personal contact with the ten thousand dead. The Church at present is like the prophet Elisha when he sent Gehazi with his staff to lay on the face of the dead child. No staff could be a substitute for the living prophet, and no professional agency can be a substitute for the living body of Christ. The life that is given to every Christian is given to be communicated to others, and no amount of money can compensate for the loss of personal service. We have entirely underestimated the greatness and the difficulty of the work to be done. If it required a whole Christ, in person, to give life to the Church, it requires a whole Church to give life to the world.

It is evident that the Apostolic Church understood and acted upon this principle. On the day of Pentecost, not the eleven only but all the hundred and twenty began to tell to all around them the wonderful works of God, and those who were scattered after the death of Stephen showed what had been their habits at home by the zeal with which they preached the Gospel wherever they went. It also appears from what is mentioned in the Acts and the Epistles that wherever a church was planted it became a centre from which "sounded out" the Gospel. In no other way can we account for the marvellous rapidity with which Christianity spread over the world in Apostolic times. Not that there were not idlers at that time, or that there are no workers now; but, as the fortunes of the Church are determined not by the exceptions but by the rule, every opposition went down before them, while we have to fight every inch of our ground.

Mansion House Mission Chapel.—A report of work done in this place shows that the past year was one of great blessing; sixty-seven new members joined the mission, fourteen being from the Sabbath-school. Most of these have been gathered in as converts. Last year a monthly free tea was given to about 350 poor persons. A meeting is held by converted children, who gather to pray for the salvation of their parents. Extracts from several letters from those who have received good in the various meetings are full of encouragement, both to the pastor and to those who aid in supporting the work. The address of Mr. Linnecar, the evangelist, is 89, Bellenden-road, Peckham, S.E.

A Children's Home in Edinburgh.—We have received the eighth annual report of the Summerbank Home, 8, Bellevue-street, Edinburgh, and are glad to learn that the sixteen boys and girls in it are repaying the kind friends who contribute to their support by "a steady improvement in truthfulness, conscientiousness, and desire to please." These little children are gathered in from the most vicious and depraved surroundings, but as they have been taken very young, they have long since forgotten the oaths with which their infant lips were familiar, and are at present a bright and merry little band, fonder of romping than of working, but at the same time being carefully trained in household work. We are glad to observe that a debt of £70, which a few years ago was a heavy drag upon the Home, has been reduced (partly by the kindness of our readers) to the comparatively small sum of £20. The Treasurers are the Misses Logan, 26, East Claremont-street.

A MEDICAL MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

By Dr. A. W. DOUTHWAITE,
China Inland Mission.

NOW that the Christian churches of England and America are beginning to awake from their lethargy, and to realise their responsibility to Christ for the carrying out of his last commission, and so many earnest men and women of all classes are devoting their lives to the glorious work of preaching the Gospel to the heathen, the subject of medical training for those going to the remote parts of heathen lands is naturally brought to the front. The command to "preach the Gospel" is coupled with the equally imperative command to "heal the sick;" and, although we no longer possess the miraculous power of healing bestowed on the Apostles, experience has shown that even our limited power of healing disease and relieving suffering is, with God's blessing, the most potent agency we possess for breaking down the barriers of superstition and distrust, which stand like a granite wall between the missionary and the hearts of those whom he longs to win for Christ.

During a recent visit to England and the United States, I was frequently asked by young men who purposed going to the foreign mission field, "Would a little medical training be of any use to me?" And when I assured them that it would be a great advantage to know something of the healing art, they invariably asked me to name some institution where such training could be obtained. But in this I was unable to advise them; I knew of no medical school where, in the space of one or two years, a young man could get the kind of training required for the mission field. There are a few medical schools for ladies preparing for work in the Indian Zenanas, in which the teaching is so arranged that the pupils are considered qualified at the end of two years; but the course of study in an ordinary school is "graded," and the subjects taught are distributed over four years. A very wise arrangement where the object is to turn out qualified physicians, but of no use to the missionary, who only wishes to learn enough to enable him to treat simple medical and surgical cases, and to recognise—and so let alone—those which are beyond his skill.

What I wish to urge is the great desirability of having a training institute, where missionaries could, in a year or two, prepare themselves for such medical work as they are almost certain to be called upon to undertake, either for their own families or those among whom they labour.

I know it will be objected by some that "a little knowledge is dangerous," but the pupil would be dull, or the teaching arrangements defective if the "dangerous" stage could not be passed in less than twelve months. If the various Missionary Societies would combine to make it worth while for the faculty of some medical school to have a "missionary department," the difficulty would soon be solved, and the missionaries would go out to their work more thoroughly prepared, and with more power to do good than they can possibly have who have no medical knowledge, or at most, only that "dangerous" amount which they derive from reading books.

Not a few valued missionaries have lost their lives through ignorance of sanitary laws, and the value of simple remedies when administered in time, and, on the other hand, I have known men pass through long periods of anxiety, or make long journeys with their wives and children in search of medical advice, when a very slight knowledge of the symptoms of disease would have shown them there was no cause for alarm.

Medical missions, as at present carried on, are too costly to be opened in every mission centre, but such training as I advocate would be little more expensive than the usual theological course, from which the necessary time might with advantage be deducted.

THE MILDMAY ADVENT CONFERENCE.

THE meetings last week in connection with this Conference have been replete with features of interest and of importance in relation to the truths they were held to advocate. In point of numbers the meetings were not, of course, equal to the assemblies annually convened in June. Doubtless they were smaller than they would have been if March had been less lionlike in the character of its début. The exceptionally severe weather with which the week opened must have prevented many from being present on the first day, who would otherwise have filled the vacant spaces. It was unfortunate that the London Diocesan Conference was in session at the same time; many faces familiar at Mildmay gatherings were not seen in consequence. But the numbers increased, nevertheless, so that on the third day the large hall, though not crowded, was comfortably full both morning and evening. Throughout, a degree of interest and thoughtful attention to the momentous themes discussed was evinced, which amply proved the wisdom of encouraging such an opportunity for students of prophecy to prayerfully review their conclusions, and seek further light from God.

Two features of the addresses delivered were specially marked: the desire to give a thoroughly practical tone to all aspects of truth presented, and the spirit of brotherly love and mutual forbearance, where schools of thought disagreeing on points of detail were brought into contact. This latter feature was sometimes very strikingly exhibited, a general rejoicing being manifest in the idea so happily expressed by Mr. Guinness when he remarked, "It is pleasant to remember that we are all of one heart to make David king." One result of the Conference cannot fail to be, that many will be led to make more of points of agreement, and less of minor points of difference. As Dr. R. Anderson said at one of the meetings, too much is made of prevailing diversities of thought on prophetical subjects, and too little of the unities which exist. Such diversities are fewer in number, and of less real importance, than those which affect other regions of sacred truth. Many who, while holding the fundamental truth of Christ's death as a sacrifice for sin, yet differ much on the precise nature and extent of the atonement, meet in happy union at the table of the Lord. Why, then, should not those who adopt the Preterist argument meet in true fellowship with those whose convictions are in harmony with Futurist lines of interpretation, and in brotherly confidence endeavour so to balance their beliefs as that each may seek to help the other's faith; all the more so, because no one view can claim to have a monopoly of truth. There can be no doubt that the Conference just held will conduce to such a desirable end.

The objection often urged against millennarian views—that they tend to injure missionary enterprise by lessening sympathy with efforts for the evangelisation of the world—was amply met. The addresses given at the afternoon meeting on Wednesday deserve special attention on this ground; that by Rev. J. G. Gregson was of peculiar force.

Warnings against dogmatism as opposed to candour and openness to further light upon the Word of Truth, were on several occasions wisely given; the fact that in relation to the revelation of God we are all learners—disciples of the great Teacher, rather than rabbis—was again and again insisted upon. This is a truth too much lost sight of. The fact that, even at the best, "we know in part," if duly borne in mind, would serve to prevent the bigotry which too often separates those who should be one, and to increase the brotherhood in Christ, which is so greatly to the glory of our common Lord and Master.

An interest, which can only be described as intense, was manifested in connection with Mr. Newberry's beautiful model of Solomon's Temple, and his lucid exposition of many Biblical references to its typical, as well as its literal, significance. Those who look upon the Old Testament types as effete and outworn would have found, when face to face with the realistic view given by this unique work of art, as well as labour of love, that such spheres of thoughtful inquiry are full of Divine light and truth. We hope in future issues to give notes of several of Mr. Newberry's deeply interesting and instructive explanations.

The gathering at the Lord's Supper service was a fitting crown to a series of meetings, which many felt to be generally characterised by spiritual energy, and gracious manifestations of the Master's approval. The deep meaning of the memorable words, "Till I come," was apprehended by many with a freshness and power very gladdening to the heart; and a quiet joy in the Lord filled many a soul.

The absence of Mr. Stevenson Blackwood from his familiar place as leader of the meetings was universally regretted. His helpful words and skilful guidance of the arrangements always greatly conduce, under God's blessing, to the enjoyment of Mildmay meetings; but the genial and devout spirit of Lord Cavan, who on several occasions occupied the chair, and the weighty words of other presidents, served to supply the lack.

No devout mind could fail to feel that the Lord was present in a very manifest sense throughout the whole of the Conference, and, in answer to prayer, it is beyond question that the issue shall be the awakening of many who have been sleeping instead of watching, and the giving emphasis in these last days to the solemn midnight cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh."

RELIGIOUS SERVICES for the PEOPLE.

FROM London as it was, within living memory, to London as it is, with all its imperfections and uncleanness, we turn with a sigh of relief. In the report of the Special Religious Services for the People, there is an extract from an article in The Quarterly Review of December, 1846, from the pen of the late Lord Shaftesbury, in which is vividly portrayed, in dark colours indeed, the condition of many of the streets and alleys, and of the common lodging-houses at the time. In those days "open ditches" and open sewers were common, alike in Kensington and Southwark, and there were whole streets in which not a single house had water laid on on the premises. At one of the common lodging-houses visited, it is stated that fifty-eight persons were found one night in a parlour eighteen feet by ten.

As we recently stated, it is proposed to erect in the poorer quarters of London Shaftesbury Memorial City Mission Halls, and two such are already in preparation. A donation of £50, it is thought, will often be sufficient to enable the Committee to secure the erection, by local friends, of a plain, yet commodious building for this purpose. To plant such a centre of evangelistic effort in every poor district would be one of the surest means of helping the people and of implanting in them principles which would work in them a wonderful change for the better. The Committee report in reference to the work of the past year that 636 services were held, attended by about 351,000 persons, making in all from the commencement of this effort 7181 services, attended by 6,303,000 persons, all of whom were supplied with copies of the hymns sung on the occasion of their attendance. The secretary is Mr. C. M. Sawell, City Mission House, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

ROMANISTS AND EDUCATION.

FOR some time back the leading Roman Catholic magazine has from month to month been protesting in the strongest possible terms against Roman Catholic youths being sent to the large public schools, or to Oxford and Cambridge. The position taken by the writer is a somewhat illogical one; for whilst, on the one hand, he speaks of the "shallow sophisms of Protestantism," and of "the familiar acquaintance (mere surface knowledge, covering a depth of concealed ignorance, as it often is in reality) that educated Protestants possess of the various systems of philosophy and modes of thought generally prevalent in the world," he lays full stress upon the condemnation of Oxford and Cambridge education by the Congregation of Propaganda, and insists upon it that the risk of daily contact with Protestant students must not be run under any circumstances. Says this writer, in a recent paper:—

> It is absolutely necessary that we must stand apart from non-Catholics. The appeal that is sometimes made to us not to desert the old universities with their thousands of young intellects craving after truth, and young hearts longing after the beauty of the Immaculate Spouse of Christ, is an appeal ad misericordiam quite beside the point. No one proposes to desert the old universities. On the contrary, we ought to have active and experienced Catholic priests stationed both at Oxford and Cambridge to give every facility to the inquirer, and to bring the Church of God as far as possible under the notice of the increasing numbers of students there. But to throw into the mass of Oxford liberalism, and paganism, and indifference, and schism a score or two of unformed boys is a strange way of setting to work to reform the University, whether they are gathered in a Catholic college, or scattered here and there. The training of Catholic youth must, if it is to be conducted on Catholic principles, be carried on under Catholic superiors and on a strictly Catholic system of teaching, and in an atmosphere entirely Catholic, and in a society composed of Catholic students only. We must have no mixed education. In Oxford the exclusiveness required by Catholic education is impossible.

The "exclusiveness required by Catholic education" seems in this instance to be a secondary consideration compared with the proselytising intention to plant Roman Catholic priests in the University towns to "give every facility to the inquirers, and to bring the Church of God under the notice of the increasing numbers of students there." Here, as everywhere else, under cover of a grievance Romanists commit a trespass. If Protestant parents were to act upon similar lines, the whole Roman Catholic press would be full of tirades against such bigotry; yet there is far more reason for such action. Incredible as it may seem, some convent schools contain many Protestant girls, whose parents with criminal carelessness have placed them in the care of nuns, who lose no opportunity of insidiously undermining the children's faith. At a time when the heart rather than the intellect governs, these children are taught to find a false peace in the enervating doctines and practices of Rome, and are carefully trained to mistake Art for Religion, and to substitute for simple devotion the feelings created by sensuous scents and sounds.

If Roman Catholics are afraid to let their young men come into contact even with the somewhat limp Protestantism of Oxford, ought not Protestants to fear the result of permitting their daughters to be exposed to the insidious temptations of convent schools, with their Reverend Mothers and their Jesuitical directors. Surely, for the sake of the undue prominence given there to French and Music, it is not worth while to run the risk of subjecting a girl with an unformed mind to the wily and persistent attempts of skilful proselytisers to instil the unscriptural and destructive doctrines against which our forefathers protested with their very lives.

THE THEOSOPHISTS.

ELEVEN years ago a Madame Blavatsky, of whom very little was known, originated, with Colonel Olcott, a well-known resident of New York, a new religious sect under the high-sounding name of "The Theosophical Society." Having spent some years as a medium during the spirit-rapping craze, Madame Blavatsky professed to have had daily communication with the spirit world, and the Theosophical Society was founded with the object of investigating these marvellous visitations and revelations, and for "the practice of the rites," stated to be necessary before "initiation into Theosophic mysteries." With varying fortunes the Society has progressed during the eleven years, gathering hundreds of proselytes and members, publishing volumes upon volumes of unreadable matter, rising to the dignity of a magazine of its own, and at length becoming so bold in its statements with regard to spirit manifestations and phenomena, as to be considered worthy of notice by the Society for Psychical Research.

It has been the habit of these Theosophists to look from their pinnacles pityingly upon our old-fashioned Christianity, insisting upon it that what we termed belief was ignorance, and that our faith was fog; they asked us to leave our mists and twilight, and come out into the clear air and light of their Nirvanas, Pralayas, and Devachans, whatever these may be.

It is not likely, however, that their Society, with its shifting basis of "Wisdom-Religion," will survive the publication of the report of the Psychical Research people, whose investigation of the phenomena of Theosophy leaves no room for doubt that Colonel Olcott and the other prominent founders of the new "faith" have been dupes in the hands of Madame Blavatsky and her wily colleagues. The report reads more like an account of the breaking-up of a spirit-rapping seance than that of a solemn inquiry into the "religion," manufactured by the writer of "Isis Unveiled," and the "philosophy" with which the godless religion was afterwards clothed by the still more misty author of "Esoteric Buddhism."

In an age in which there is much irreligion, and many people are running about crying "Lo here and lo there," it is perhaps unnecessary to remind our readers how large a following these new-fangled theories have succeeded in obtaining—men and women professedly in search of truth, and who could not find it where millions of their fellows had found it, hurrying after the prophets of the new sect. But, as men who lay claim to intellect and common sense hastened to proclaim their allegiance to the Theosophists and their verbiage, we should like to know what they think of all this exposure of miserable conjuring with cupboards ("shrines," the leaders called them), and necromancy, not only by means of telepathic impulses, but with such everyday common things as broken dishes. As a somewhat surprised writer has just said, "never before, perhaps, have men been called upon in the passage of a single decade to assist at the birth of a new religion and to celebrate its obsequies;" but certainly the history of this Theosophical Society affords an interesting illustration of such an experience.

The downfall of our Christianity has been foretold any time during the past eighteen centuries. It still lives, however, and, what is more, it is growing and spreading in all directions, simply because it is based upon the Divine promise, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." If the fact of that wonderful duration and expansion of Christ's religion were only thought over and prayed over by somewhat thoughtless and impatient seekers after truth, we should have more restful and happy people in the world, and less frequent discoveries of new philosophies.

BIBLE STUDIES.—8.

THE LAND OF PROMISE.

(1) Assured by covenant. "The land which the Lord sware unto your fathers . . . to give unto them, and to their seed after them" (Deut. i. 8). "All the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen" (2 Cor. i. 20).

  The blessing that setteth me free,
But when I had ceased from my struggles,
  His peace Jesus gave unto me.

(4) Unbelief the great hindrance. "Yet in this thing ye did not believe the Lord your God" (Deut. i. 32). "They could not enter in because of unbelief. We which have believed, do enter into rest" (Heb. iii. 19, iv. 3).

(5) Possession depends on obedience. "Hearken unto the statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land" (Deut. iv. 1, v. 33). "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isa. i. 19). "The Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts v. 32).

(6) In the land no quarter to enemies and no compromise. "Thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them" (Deut vii. 1—6). "Casting down imaginations, and every high thing . . . and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 5). "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them" (Eph. v. 11). "He that believeth on Me . . . out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters. (But this spake He of the Spirit)" (John vii. 38, 39). "God . . . who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. i. 3).

(8) God, the Guardian and Provider. "A land which the Lord thy God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year" (Deut. xi. 12). "Lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 20). "The Lord knoweth them that are his" (2 Tim. ii. 19). "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you" (1 Pet. v. 7).

(9) Appropriation. "Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours" (Deut. xi. 24). "As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee" (Matt. viii. 13). "According to your faith be it unto you" (Matt. ix. 29). "Who through faith subdued kingdoms . . . obtained promises" (Heb. xi. 33).

Streatham. JANET CLARK.

"THE PRESENCE OF THE LORD."

I KNEW a sister in Christ many years ago, an episode in whose life has been vividly recalled to me by the article headed "The Presence of the Lord," by Mrs. Clark, in THE CHRISTIAN of January 28.

This sister was a wife, happy, trustful, joyful. A union of heart, of tastes, of work for the Lord whom both wife and husband loved, made it, as far as earthly things can be so called, a perfect union. But a Sabbath of peace when she fed on the bread of life ministered by him was followed by an hour of anguish unspeakable. One night's storm felled the goodly cedar which had stood many a previous blast. The call to "rest from thy loved employ" came, and was responded to.

He heard and felt no fear,
But rose and caught his Captain's eye,
  Then full of faith and prayer,
  His spirit with a joyous bound,
Left its encumbering clay;
  His tent at sunrise on the ground
A darkened ruin lay.

Now for the power wrapped up in our motto. "The Lord Jesus is equal to all my emergency," said the desolate, weeping widow in the first moment of her deep grief. "He is now my Husband, and the Lord of Hosts is his name." She was living in a far-off home, separated from parents, brothers, sisters, children, and she was on a journey, when this sore sorrow fell upon her, but the presence of the Lord was all in all to her, and it was enough.

What do we need more, if we have the company of the most loving and welcome of friends, the kindest of all brothers, the God of hope, filling us with joy and peace in believing, and causing us to abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost? And what was the experience of this sister as she referred to it, months later on? "This," said she, "has been the very happiest year of my whole life. Alone as I have been, and pitied by man, Jesus has come so near that I could scarcely tear myself from his presence to go to bed at night; and when I woke up in the morning a flood of texts, hymns, and soothing thoughts so filled me with delight that the tears which nature will shed seemed visibly wiped away by the tender hand of Him who weeps with us. He also gave a special blessing to my work for Him, for He shared it with me."

It was a year of deep outward trial of various kinds, but in a modified and reverent way would I add, of joy unspeakable, and full of glory, and this, not for one month or for two, but for a long succession of months. A WORKER.

Notes and Comments.

ON Tuesday next, the 16th inst., Mr. Stansfeld will move a resolution in the House of Commons calling for the immediate repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts. It is to be hoped that he will carry the matter to a division. The country has spoken out unambiguously, and it is now time to test the members of the House of Commons. The motion will be strenuously resisted by some representatives of the army, but our law-makers must be taught that the righteous men and women of the nation are resolved that these horrible and hypocritical Acts shall be expunged from the statute books, on which they were placed without the people's knowledge or consent.

Since the foregoing sentences were penned, we have, with pleasure, seen it announced that the Government propose to accept Mr. Stansfeld's resolution.

One of our weekly newspapers has in a scathing article called attention to the painful fact that two ugly and apparently incompatible social developments are now going on side by side, and seemingly increasing day by day—the "starving public" and the "sporting public." It is admitted that in London alone about sixty thousand people are out of work—a fact due, if the political economists are to be believed, "to the action of inevitable law." In the provincial large towns myriads are starving almost without hope of succour. Painful as these facts are just as they stand, they are made much more intensely so by the counter fact that there are thousands upon thousands of people who apparently have nothing to do but to gamble and bet. They gamble at cards, at horse races, at disgusting prize fights, and the still more disreputable sport of ratting. In pursuit of this last-mentioned amusement, the journal we have referred to states that a large crowd gathered in one of our parks on several days recently, judges and other people of high position being of the number.

Is it to be wondered at, therefore, that starving people are beginning to ask themselves and others questions somewhat difficult to answer with regard to the distribution of wealth and the rewards of labour? Surely in these days it behoves every Christian to be, we had almost said, doubly a Christian, striving to live so as to counteract and nullify some of the evil influence of the thoughtless and selfish, who are, consciously or unconsciously, doing so much to retard the coming of the kingdom of peace. "Ye are the salt of the earth."

The Freeman gave some good advice in one of its recent issues. A correspondent had written:—

> May I venture to ask (1) who has a right to erase minutes from the minute-book, the president or secretary? (2) Should not all minutes be read from the minute-book? (3) Should a treasurer's report be read before the church without passing through the hands of the secretary? These are a few of the questions that are at present agitating the minds of not a few of the members of a certain church.

Our contemporary answers these questions, and adds:—

> If this be true, we are sorry and humiliated. It is a disgrace to a fellowship professing to be guided by the Spirit of God, to be agitated over matters like these, whilst a world lies around in sin and carelessness. Let the Church become agitated at its low condition, and by earnest united prayer seek to have its heart enlisted in nobler considerations.

This advice is wholesome for individuals as well as for churches. Deficient vitality is the great cause of contention among Christian people. If we were more truly alive in Him and more awake in his service, we should be too happy, too busy, and too wise to contend for matters of personal honour or preference. We may be sure that, if we are easily moved by things of such secondary importance, the spirit of the world is largely dominant. High-mindedness is of the very essence of the Gospel. Little thoughts argue little grace.

It has been well said that Christian people should give themselves to know two things—God's Word and Human Nature. He that knows much of the Bible and little of Human Nature is unpractical; he that knows Human Nature but not his Bible is unfurnished. No reflecting reader need travel far to find examples of either statement, and the lesson is obvious.

There are no troubles so perplexing to a good man, none that try his faith and his patience so much, as those which are caused by the neglect, selfishness, or wrong-doing of others. "If it had only come direct from God, one might have borne it!" is the frequent cry of men thus tried. To believe that God is in this distress, when it can be traced so plainly to human wickedness, is one of the hardest tasks faith has to perform. The Bible has strong comfort for all such sufferers. For instance, it shows us the Holy One a prey to the very fury of hell. Had we witnessed the crucifixion, we might well have asked how God could possibly be working in and through injustice and malice so truly hellish. "Why hast Thou forsaken Him?" might have been our complaint. Yet we are distinctly told that God was directly at work through it all:—

> For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever Thy hand or Thy counsel determined before to be done.
>
> Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain.

Here we see, in the extremest example possible, that though the devil and his angels may bring the trouble, God sends it.

A correspondent, who has herself done a great deal of work among the poor, writes to us somewhat in the line of Mr. George Holland's suggestion, asking if the needy poor could not be better distributed among their kindly and well-to-do sympathisers. As things are at present, a few prominent workers are the almoners of the great Christian public who support them. They represent the philanthropic, but absent, wealthy, and distribute their gifts. This system is necessarily faulty—the distance between the givers and the receivers greatly hinders both sympathy and gratitude. Then, too, the real workers are overburdened, and the poor suffer loss when dealt with in such great masses.

Could we not turn things about a little? Let the leading workers who live amongst the needy distribute men rather than means. The well-to-do might be appealed to, and lists of those who would be willing to undertake the care of one poor family, or one poor child, for a longer or shorter period, be drawn up. The leader of a mission among the poor would then act as agent, distributing the worthy poor of his acquaintance among those whose names stand on this list. This would bring enormous relief to him; while even greater good would come by the awakening of sympathy on the one hand, and of gratitude on the other, through the establishing of personal interest between the rich and the poor.

The following extract from an experienced lady rescue worker in a large English city, conveys a message which we commend to the serious attention of our readers:—

> I must frankly confess that the experience gained of the universal low tone of morals amongst my own sex is sadly depressing, and makes our committees often ask if it is worth while to take so much trouble. But at the same time, it is our duty to face facts, and pray for guidance to make a right use of the experience obtained in our work. How to create a higher moral tone amongst women is a problem we often ponder over.
>
> Would that all leaders of mothers' meetings and elder Bible-classes would teach physical, bodily sanctity, as well as spiritual sanctity. So few seem to realise that the end of religion is to glorify God in this life, not to scrape into heaven by the merits of our Lord's death. I do wish more of us realised the truth of the words, "Who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works."

The same writer asks us to urge upon ladies in London, interested in Social Purity movements, to try and plant lodging-houses near our great railway stations, so as to get hold of young women coming from the country before they fall a prey to the emissaries of the devil.

A correspondent, who, as a governess in various families, has seen a good deal of life, urges us to appeal to parents to be more careful in guarding their children from the danger of corrupting influences, and themselves to give them thorough and positive teaching in morals and religion. Our own thought and observation urge us in the same direction. The newspapers are constantly recording cases that show how girls are lost through want of knowledge. Each parent takes for granted that his child is safe. No instruction is given. The latent moral faculty, the womanly nature hidden in the girl, is never aroused. Only the worst and the most frivolous part of the character is active. The tempter finds virtue asleep and folly awake. No wonder if his work is easy.

Then, what mischief comes from neglec of home instruction to young people of bot sexes on questions relating to marriage Should we see so many "forward girls" i the family conversation on this topic were higher and wiser? Or would our young men think so lightly of the sin of immorality if they were definitely trained at home t honour the other sex. Speaking from th standpoint of instrumentality, we submi that it is mainly a question of education, o wise and kindly speech. Girls who, throug lack of training, have lost something of th dignity of womanhood, may be roused t covet the beauty of that sweet feminin reserve which goes so far to make the charm of a gracious woman's presence. The laten chivalry of young men may be so appeale to that they shall regard purity as the ver essence of manhood, and shall hold womanhood in reverence. But such fruit must b cultivated. It may come without cultivation, as a hereditary gift. But this is th exception. Our duty is to cultivate carefully

A PARABLE FOR TO-DAY.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ONCE upon a time there was a city in much need. Many of the people were perishing in hunger and poverty. There were strife and ill-will. Little children went forth to steal and lie, to suffer and die. Drunkenness turned homes into hovels, and men and women into fiends; and life itself into a curse. Yet elsewhere in the city dwelt the rich, who spent their wealth in self-indulgence and costly entertainments: the brilliant glare and splendour making a hideous contrast with the squalor and misery of the poor. The rich were haughty and scornful; the poor were envious; and ever grew the gulf between them deeper and wider, until the state of things was one of deadly peril.

Now, in this town there dwelt one Pity. His soul was filled with exceeding sorrow, alike for the weariness of the rich, who failed to find in their wealth that which they sought, and yet more for the poor who, amidst extravagance, perished with hunger.

It chanced one day that, as Pity brooded over these things, there came unto him the King of that land, and said: "Thinkest thou, Pity, that the ills and sorrows of this people can be cured?"

Then Pity sighed, and looked up with a troubled face: "My Lord, I would that I could do something to relieve them."

"Thou canst do much," said the King.

"Alas! I know not that I can do anything," said Pity, very sadly.

"Seest thou my Palace on the hill-top yonder?" the King asked, pointing to it.

"Yes, my Lord," answered Pity, wondering.

"Well, there is all that this people need. There are silver and gold; there are stores of brotherly love; there is power for the healing of the nation, to cast out all devils; there are gifts of peace, and hope, and purity—all for which thine heart longs. There is joy for the sad, and health for the sick, and life for the dead. All that is therein do I freely give to thee for the welfare of this city. It is thine—all thine; go up and possess it."

Now Pity was so overwhelmed at the grace and favour of the King that he set his eyes on the Palace and could think of nothing else. All that was his! gold and precious treasures, crown jewels and robes! Ah, there should be no needy ones now. And before him danced visions of delight. Poverty was chased away; the thousand evil things were remedied, and blessings streamed forth everywhere.

So it came about that Pity did not notice that the King laid in his hand a piece of rusty iron. When he turned himself about the King was gone.

"What is the meaning of this?" Pity asked himself, looking at it curiously. And seeing some letters graven on it he read the words: "ALL GOETH RIGHT WHEN I AM BRIGHT."

"I don't know where this came from," said Pity, "nor can I tell of what use it is. One thing is certain—to a man who hath great stores of wealth like mine, a palace and all that is therein, a bit of rusty iron can be of no worth." And, flinging it lightly from him, Pity hurried away up the hill-side to the splendid gift which was his own. At first he walked about its gates, looking up with wonder, and thinking of a thousand ways in which he should bless the citizens. Then he passed beneath the walls and looked at its massive buttresses and springing towers. "And it is mine," he whispered to himself, "all mine, with which to bless the people." So on he went, and right around its vast extent, until by and by he stood again at the great front gate.

"Now let me see its treasures, and think how I can best deal with them," he cried, boldly putting his hand upon the massive handle of the gate.

But the gate was locked, and he could not enter. It was strange that the gift should be so freely given, and yet the principal entrance should be closed. However, it would be no great matter to pass to another gate. And standing before it with all confidence Pity turned the heavy handle. But it was of no use; that, too, was fastened.

"I cannot understand this," said Pity, beginning to feel annoyed. "It is no use my claiming the palace for my own if I cannot get through the gate. I will try the next."

Away he hurried along by the walls of the castle and by the moat, and then across a drawbridge. He seized a great iron ring that hung from a lion's mouth, and turned it. He heard the heavy latch lifted, and the echoes of it went ringing through the hollow places. But there, too, it was all in vain. That door was fastened. Angrily now he seized the handle and shook the door to and fro, but again only to be mocked by the echoes.

There was a fourth gate away on the other side. It was some distance off, and the entrance to the back part of the palace. It was not like the King's grace to grant him admission by that way, when the whole castle was his own. But thinking that entrance better than none, he set out for it. His way led through woods, and across ditches; and after a weary walk he reached it—a double gate of iron. He lifted the latch there too, and pushed hard, but only to find once more that the gate was fastened as firmly as the others.

Then did his heart sink within him. All the brilliant visions of blessing men had ended in cruel deception and wrong. With a heavy heart he traced his way back to the main entrance, and leaned wearily against it.

There below him lay the city with its needs. Beneath those very roofs were the sorrows that he had hoped to heal, the wants that he longed to relieve; there the men and the women and the children perishing for the lack of that which lay within here, and which, indeed, was his, and yet neither he nor they were the better for it all.

The sun was setting, but he lingered on, bewildered that the King had mocked him thus. The stars came out in the deep blue overhead, though the golden glory still lingered in the western sky. "Mine, and yet not mine," he muttered to himself; "so rich and yet only all the poorer because I cannot get at my riches."

So at last Pity went down to his lowly home, still longing that he could bless the people, and mourning that his hopes were thus deceived. After awhile he fell asleep.

Now as he slept he dreamed that he was sitting outside the main entrance of the castle, when again the King came on his way. And Pity could scarcely greet his Lord, for the sense of the wrong that burned within him.

Then did the King look sternly upon him as he asked, "Whose is this castle, with its wealth and plenty?"

"I suppose, my Lord, it is mine," said Pity, sorrowfully.

"Thine!" said the King; "then dost thou count it no sin that thou canst have all this as thine own, and yet be thyself in such sorry plight, and suffer the people to perish thus?"

"My Lord," sighed Pity, "it is mine, and yet not mine; for I cannot enter it."

"Why?" cried the King. "Did I not put into thine hand that which should have opened every door, and have put thee in possession of all its treasure? 'ALL WERE RIGHT IF THAT WERE BRIGHT.'"

Then saying these words to himself Pity woke. And as he thought of his dream he sprang up. "What! that rusty bit of iron that I threw lightly aside; could it indeed have been the master-key? I do remember that those same words were graven upon it. 'ALL GOETH RIGHT WHEN I AM BRIGHT.'"

At the dawning of the day Pity went forth and stood upon the spot where the King had met him, and sought diligently amidst the bushes. And after awhile he found the bit of iron, rusty and soiled. "Good use shall keep it bright," he cried.

Then he hurried up the hill, and at once the gate was opened by the key. Door after door was flung back, and he stood within the palace. Here was more than he had ever dreamed of—more than he could ask or think.

Straightway he chose his servants from amongst the people, and he bade the old men help him with their counsel. And wisely distributing his gifts, the needy were relieved and many miseries were driven forth from the midst of the people. And his authority and store of graces and of gifts put down the ills and brought in all prosperity and gladness.

And Pity set up over the great gate his crest—it was a key—and thereon was graven this legend:

"ALL GOETH RIGHT WHEN I AM BRIGHT."

Brother, God has given to thee this key; with it thou mayest enrich the world. Where is it, and what art thou doing with it? All God's great love and wisdom and power are the palace we may call our own, enriched with ten thousand precious promises. Ours, and yet not ours, except as we use this master-key of Prayer.—Methodist Times.

LADY HOBART'S SEWING CLASS FUND.

OUR readers will be glad to know that through this simple agency effectual help is given to the very poorest. Mr. Geo. Holland, of whose work in Whitechapel we gave an account in a recent number, spoke of the Sewing Class as a great boon, the sixpence earned having often to provide bread, coals, tea, and sugar for the starving family at home. It is impossible not to feel a pang of pity as we read that "the great difficulty is to keep the women from pressing into the schoolroom, it is so hard to shut the door upon hungry women," and the pleading of a mother, "Don't send me away; the children have not tasted bread to-day," and then of the little ones waiting for their mothers outside the gate, and skipping along with her to the baker's shop for the bit of bread that is to be food for all the evening as they gather around the bit of fire that the sixpence has also purchased.

At the sewing classes superintended by Lady Hobart, attendances numbered 4500 last year; the relief thus afforded in return for three hours' work, to say nothing of the rest, and peace, and warmth enjoyed, and the blessed influence of the Gospel message that then would flow into their hearts as at no other time, must be incalculable. We earnestly hope that ample help will be sent in to Lady Hobart (15, Eccleston-square, S.W.), so that this most effectual means of relief may be continued as long as possible, and that in this time of great distress poor women may be thus "helped along."

Liverpool Evangelisation Society.—Nearly seven hundred meetings for Gospel preaching were held last year in places regularly supplied by the Society's men. Several special missions were held; a new tent has been purchased, which has been the scene of much blessing. Many conversions are recorded from the various stations, and proofs of the steadfastness of the converts are given. The daily prayer-meeting is not so well attended as formerly, but a fresh quickening is desired. Applications for preachers should be addressed to Mr. T. Lydiatt, 3, Hackin's Hey, Liverpool.

St. Malo and St. Servan Sailors' Rest (16, Rue des Cordiers, St. Malo, France).—During the last half year more than two thousand sailors were sheltered. The Rest seems to be extending its sphere of usefulness in drawing men away from temptation and in providing shelter to the shipwrecked, sick, and destitute. The Sunday services are much appreciated and well attended. Several gentlemen testify to the value and good management of the Institution, which is supported by voluntary contributions, and under the management of a local committee. Books, periodicals, and newspapers will be most gratefully accepted.

Wimbledon.—A drawing-room meeting for ladies was held on Thursday, March 4, at Mrs. Warren's, Meverley, Spencer-road, to consider the responsibilities of women concerning the Purity movement. Mrs. Bradley gave an impressive address, which deeply stirred the womanly hearts of the audience; all united in earnest prayer for guidance and Divine wisdom, to act aright in this crisis of our country's history. Those present greatly desired to form a branch of this Union for local effort in Wimbledon. A Mothers' Prayer Union is already established, and meets in the same place monthly.

"Christian Progress" Scripture Union.—A meeting in connection with this Union was lately held at All Saints' Institute, South Lambeth, when an address was given by Rev. C. A. Fox. The existing local association has been extended to embrace the districts of Clapham, South Lambeth, Stockwell and Brixton, and it is hoped that periodical meetings may be arranged at which some invited speaker may address the Association. All members or associates, or any who wish to join the Mission, and who reside in the neighbourhood, are invited to send their names and addresses to the local Hon. Sec., Miss F. H. Culverwell, 31, Union-grove, Clapham, S.W.

RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

AT the "Bridge of Hope" (writes Miss Mary H. Steer, 26, Princes-square, St. George's-street, E.) the stress of work has been greater than in any previous winter. Hard times are distinctly felt in two ways; supplies come in more slowly, while on the other hand it is a harvest time for gathering in the poor girls. We have not the luxurious vice of richer neighbourhoods to contend with, but positive hunger often leads to sin, that somehow the starvation wages may be eked out. Then, with self-respect gone, the love of drink gets an almost uncontrollable hold over the poor creature, and the descent is easy indeed.

"I don't care what you do with me, or where you put me, but don't let me go outside this door again," said a young girl the other night; but often, even after such an entreaty to remain, the terrible drink crave comes on, which requires every help, both spiritual and physical, before the demon is subdued. Truly "this kind goeth not forth, but by prayer and fasting." I have many times witnessed such struggles, until the conquest was obtained, and on our knees together we have thanked God, who giveth the victory.

The applications for admittance during this winter have often been piteous in the extreme. "Oh, don't send me away; you've got the door of heaven in your hand, and if you don't let me in, you'll shut it in my face," said one girl late at night, when, being already over-crowded, we offered her money for a lodging, telling her to come to us in the morning; and, deliberately folding her hands behind her, she resolutely refused any such offer of help.

The latest addition to our work—the night shelter, providing a lodging on a hammock bed, and a breakfast of brown bread and coffee in the morning—has been one of the greatest comforts to us, during the severe cold of the last few months. Many coming out after an illness, from the workhouse infirmary, or the lowest grades of domestic servants, between their places, as well as other women and girls with histories far too diversified to describe, have found it a haven of safety. It was opened in September, and since then between 800 and 900 night's lodgings have been given; and many in the morning have been helped either to work or to a more permanent home.

The mission hall is filled with different sets of people, almost every day of the week, and the glad tidings of the love of God, have carried ligh and peace into many a weary heart. A sewing class has been carried on for women with husbands out of work, and many, many times the hungry have been fed.

But of all branches in the work, our hearts go out to the little children; they must be saved from growing up like the men and women around them. But how difficult it is to loosen the hold of old associations, few realise. One night, about half-past twelve o'clock, a week or two ago, a man and woman passed our house, the man carrying a little girl about four years old. The baby was lisping out, in her broken way, the vilest obscenities, which evidently afforded the wretched couple intense amusement. The baby talk and the innate tendency to deception in some of these rescued mites have often been to us the source of keenest sorrow; and yet we still hear the voice of Christ, saying, "Suffer the little ones to come unto Me!" and we know it is not the will of our Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.

I should like, at the present time, to ask special prayer for the increasing preventive work.

[Surely prayer for our devoted sister, in her painful and arduous labour, will not be withheld. But if there be among those who read her saddening and yet gladdening story, any who are in a position by God's providential goodness to answer their own prayers, we can but envy them the privilege. If some of the wealthy Christians who listened so attentively to the Addresses at Mildmay last week, on Christ's Second Coming, were to send to Miss Steer a thousand pounds, they might do more to hasten his return than by attendance at a thousand Conferences. Anyhow, many a body and soul would be saved, and many a star would be added to their crown of rejoicing in that day of the Lord for which they look and long.—ED.]

VISITING IN ST. GILES'S.

IT may interest your readers to hear of a few cases that came under my personal notice recently, when accompanied by one of the nurses from the London Medical Mission, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles's:—Our first visit was up five flights of stairs, so narrow, so dark, and so dirty, that I thought: Can this lead to a human abode? Yet there, in a small room, we found an old man with silvery locks, very little fire in the grate, everything, even his poor hand, so cold, and the dark room but a picture of the spiritual darkness within. While the kind nurse spoke of better things I noticed a tear drop, a token, I trust, that his heart was touched.

We passed into a room on the second floor where were a sick mother and four children, the husband looking for work. The eldest girl, eleven years old, was doing the family washing; too small to reach the tub, she was standing on a box. I noticed in this room a cat and half starved puppy, and while talking to the sick woman, the boy ran in with a skewer of cat's meat, "it was the last halfpenny," she said, "and the creatures had not had anything for three days." This poor woman was resting for salvation on her own merits, but the words spoken opened her eyes to her true state. She asked us, with tears, as we left, to pray for her.

After mounting again to the top of a five-storied house, we found ourselves in the presence of one of the truly great ones of the earth: an old woman quite blind and deaf, dependent entirely on others for support. Her Bible was on her lap, and the joy and peace in her heart was reflected on her countenance.

After visits such as these, one can only in deep humility enjoy the many mercies by which we are surrounded; if we cannot personally visit and relieve such cases, we can do much by strengthening the hands of others. The work of house-to-house visiting is but a small feature in the work carried on at Endell-street Medical Mission. Anyone from the country wishing to know something of the misery, sickness, and sorrow, in the heart of London, should see the work carried on by this little band of workers; let them visit the Mission any Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, at 1 o'clock, when from one hundred and fifty to two hundred of the poorest are gathered together for medical advice, and where they hear the glorious Gospel of the Grace of God, the only remedy for the sin-sick soul.

Burmah Bible and Tract Society.—Any information with regard to missionary work and the circulation of the Scriptures in Burmah is of especial interest just now. We are glad to find from the twenty-fourth report of the Burmah Bible and Tract Society, that not only has this work been going on for these several years, but that amongst a people who for many reasons are not easily influenced, the Gospel truths are, by means of tracts and portions, slowly but surely permeating the minds of both learned and ignorant. In one case a Buddhist monk to whom a Gospel was given, afterwards spoke of it as a "Jesus Christ book, a friendly kind of book," and though he would not have any more of the tracts, which, he said, made sport of his idols, &c., he yet begged for more like "the friendly book." The report speaks of several prominent men, priests, and others being convinced of the errors of Buddhism and the truth of Christianity.

The Mildmay Mission to the Jews is one of the most remarkable movements of the time, whether considered in reference to the way in which it has steadily progressed, or the simple faith in which it has been conducted, and the wonderful way in which that faith has been continually honoured. Hitherto its work has been confined pretty much to London, "about the best mission station in the world for Jews," as Mr. Wilkinson says in his new report. From time to time it has stretched out a hand to Jewish brethren in various parts; we may especially mention Mr. Joseph Rabinowitch, whose work in Kischenoff has been greatly helped by Christian sympathy and succour lately extended to him. Now, as we have more than once informed our readers, it is proposed to distribute 100,000 Hebrew New Testaments amongst the Jews in parts of France, Germany, Austria, North Africa, Roumania, and Russia, specially in towns and cities where no missionary is located, and for this purpose special help is needed. Much that is encouraging is reported with reference to the work as carried on in London, and we cannot do better than commend the summary just published to the attention of all friends of Israel. Rev. J. Wilkinson's address is 79, Mildmay-road, N.

EAST LONDON TRAINING INSTITUTE.

IN a recently-issued circular letter by Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow-road, E., we read:—

A company has at last been formed for making the Railway from the Coast to the Upper Congo, through the cataract region, and have received liberal concessions of land and all needful privileges from the Government of the Congo Free State. We understand they are sure to obtain the requisite capital, and that they are likely to commence the construction forthwith. The opening of this short line will be an event of supreme importance to the evangelisation of Central Africa, removing at a stroke the worst difficulties and the most fatal dangers attending missionary work in this new world.

We have just had good tidings from our brethren, Foucar and Smith, who wrote from their lonely and far-away station of Tali-fu, in the Province of Yunnan, in the extreme south-west of China. Mr. Baron sailed for the West Indies a few weeks ago, and is about now landing in Jamaica, where he is to take charge of three or four mountain churches of coloured people that have been for months without a pastor or preacher. Our former student, Mr. Kirkham, was obliged, for the sake of his health, to change his sphere among them for a less exhausting one. Mr. Baron will have to ride seventy or eighty miles a week on horseback, from point to point, in order to cover his little diocese. Mr. Cameron, who started about the same time, has, we trust, reached his destination, near Pietermaritzburg, in Natal, in safety, and our brother, Mr. McCloy, is on his way to China to itinerate as an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, distributing the Scriptures, and preaching the Word of Life.

Four of the young sisters from the deaconness branch of our Institute have been accepted by the Kabyle Mission of North Africa for service in Oran and Algiers. Two of them, Miss Read and Miss Day, are to dwell in the great Mohammedan City of Tlemcen. The former has been with us for over two years, and her name has become a household word in numbers of the poor streets surrounding our Mission Hall in Bromley. Our young sisters are likely to have the escort of Mr. E. Glenny, the Secretary of the Mission, who is himself going out to North Africa in March.

Our much esteemed brother, Mr. James Fanstone, from Pernambuco, Brazil, where he has laboured nobly as a self sustaining missionary for over seven years, will take with him as his wife Miss Jessie Baird, a young Scotch sister, of whom we feel confident that she will be to him a fellow worker in the Gospel. The voyage to South America is an expensive one, and in this case the outfit should include a certain measure of household goods. Any wedding gifts sent to Harley House will be welcome.

A group of three earnest and devoted young brethren are starting for different spheres in America; Mr. Kirkpatrick to labour among the coloured people in Western Virginia; Mr. College and Mr. Bagnall in different parts in Illinois. Mr. Stephen is going out immediately to New South Wales to labour for two or three years in a needy sphere there, while qualifying for work in India, under the Wesleyan Methodist Conference.

Kindly remember the College funds, and the severe distress which prevails in East London at this time from want of work, and that we are daily in contact with hundreds of families whose lack of food and firing, clothes, comforts, and help, is pitiful! Our hearts are pained for them. We would fain be your almoners in ther midst. Many of the sufferers are of the household of faith.

Crystal Palace Bible Stand.—Notwithstanding its apparently limited scope, this work covers a very large area, stretching out into almost all lands, and over many seas also. In the report lately issued there are most encouraging accounts of progress in the work of distributing the Scriptures in France, where portions of the Word of Life are received with extraordinary avidity by all classes of the people; in Italy, where the military authorities allow them to be freely distributed amongst the troops; in Austria, where 15,000 portions were sent during the past year; in Egypt, and North Africa, whence they find their way into the interior and amongst the Arabs; in the Holy Land, and other parts. Altogether, through the instrumentality of the Bible-stand, 433,119 portions of the Word of God were thus sent into various parts of the world during last year. There have been many evidences of fruit-bearing as the result of this sowing in faith. The Superintendent of the work is Mr. Hawke, Bible Stand, Crystal Palace, S.E.

REATRE'S BROTHER NED.

REATRE BRONSON sat in the large arm-chair in her brother Ned's room. She was arranging birthday cards, Easter cards, and Christmas greetings on a screen which she wished to finish before her brother Ned came home at night. Reatre was very fond and proud of Ned, and Ned had always seemed to be fond of her; but lately she had fancied that he didn't love her as well as he used to. He was not at home as much as he had formerly been. Although the loving sister disliked to harbour a thought against Ned, yet somehow she could not but admit to herself, as she sat alone that morning, that Ned was going wrong. Ned wasn't confidential with her any more, and he spoke slightingly so often of religion and good people. Indeed he had not been to church with her for over a month. And Ned seemed to have chosen a set of companions who were known in Reatre's little world as fast young men. She felt a great responsibility about Ned, as the dear mother before she went home to her Father's house had said to her: "Reatre, my child, do all you can to influence Ned to be good! there are a great many temptations in the outside world, and boys need to be hedged about with good home influences." She knew that her mother's last prayer was for Ned.

Reatre's father was a thorough business man; a money-making man. He was necessarily away from home a great portion of the time. He provided liberally for his two children, of whom he was very fond; but his mind was so preoccupied with his business that he seldom looked into matters pertaining to their daily lives. . . . .

Reatre watched at the parlour window to see Ned coming up the street, but she waited a long, long time. It was an hour later than he usually came, and still another hour passed, and another. The evening meal was standing on the table untasted, for Reatre always waited for Ned. She began to grow very anxious; sad forbodings of some accident or evil to Ned filled her heart. She could not eat, and when it came bed time, and Ned had not come, she could not go to sleep. But just after midnight she heard Ned's night-key in the latch, and she ran into the hall to give him her usual cheery welcome. But Ned pushed her away, and said quite harshly, "What are you up at this time of the night for, Reatre?"

"I sat up for you, Ned. I was afraid something had happened to you, and you know father is away, and I'd no one to send to look after you."

"You may just as well understand now, Reatre Bronson, that I am old enough to look after myself, and don't want any girl interfering with my comings and goings.

Ned had never spoken so before, and the tears filled Reatre's eyes as he passed by her and went up stairs to his room. A dreadful suspicion filled the sister's heart that Ned had been drinking; she was sure of it as she followed him up the stairs. "Oh, dear," she thought to herself, "if mamma could only have been spared to look after Ned. He would never speak so to her, she was always so kind, so tender toward him."

Reatre was a Christian; she believed in the living presence of the Lord, and when she went to her room she poured out her overburdened heart, and amid sobs and tears prayed that Ned might be turned from the wrong way into the right. . . . .

Ned Bronson was on very dangerous ground. He had taken the first steps on a downward path, and the first steps are those that tell. He was in bad company. His companions were those who influenced him in the wrong direction. They had false ideas of manhood, and sooner or later they would find that vices draw blanks, as surely as virtues draw prizes. The loss of purity, the loss of simplicity, the loss of honesty, are real losses. No one can gain by a vicious act; the loss is lasting. It is parting with a part of our soul.

Weeks passed by, and Ned was going more and more wrong. Reatre felt almost powerless to save him. She thought sometimes she would go and talk the matter over with the good pastor, who had baptized Ned when he was lying in his mother's arms. But that would be exposing Ned's faults; she felt that she could not speak a word of Ned's bad ways except to the Father in heaven. While Ned was going his own way, his sister was praying for him at home.

One evening, when Reatre had almost lost her faith that the Lord would save Ned, she heard the latch-key in the door. It was quite early for him to come home. She went into the hall to meet him, and as soon as he had taken off his overcoat, he put his arm around her, and without a word drew her into the sitting-room. "My dear, sweet sister!" he said, as he placed her in the chair in front of the open fire.

"Why Ned, dear, what has happened?" she exclaimed, for Ned looked so differently from what he had of late.

"I'll tell you," he said, taking her hand in his. "I've had a strange experience, Reatre. I haven't been doing right for some time, as you know. And to-night I went with some young men to a saloon to play billiards. I knew when I went I ought not to go, but I seemed to be bound to ruin myself. Somehow I couldn't say no. I knew when I got there I should be tempted to drink. I knew, too, that the influences around me would pull me down, instead of elevate me toward what was pure and good. As I stepped toward the door I heard a woman's voice singing—

My faith looks up to Thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary.
Saviour divine,
Now hear me while I pray,
Take all my guilt away,
O let me from this day,
Be wholly Thine.

It was mamma's hymn—you know she used to sing it so often. I'd forgotten it, but it sounded like her voice, and I can't tell you how I felt It seemed as if mamma's hand was on my shoulder. It was so real to me, that I stopped and said, 'I can't go with you, to-night, boys,' and I rushed away and came home. O how mamma would have felt if she had known her boy would go so far wrong."

The remembrance of a mother's love and prayers and kindly admonitions filled the hearts of the two motherless children, and they mingled their tears together.

"With God's help, dear Reatre, I am going to live a better life. If I could only go back and retrace my steps now."

"We can never go back, dear Ned; but your experience will enable you to help others who are beginning to yield to temptation." "I wonder if my prayers did help dear Ned," thought Reatre, after she went to her room. "I know God heard dear mamma's prayers for us, and that He is watching over her motherless children. It was so pleasant to have Ned in the pew with her on Sunday, and to have him speak a word for Jesus, and what he could do for poor sinners, when he went to the young people's meeting, Monday evenings. "As long as I live," thought Reatre, "I will carry all my cares, and troubles, and wants right to Jesus, for He always hears and answers prayers. Dear mamma used to say that very often our prayers are answered in such different ways from what we plan or expect."—New York Evangelist.

EXPECTANS EXPECTAVI.

At Bangor as I, weary, lay awake,
Waiting impatiently for day to break,
Up through the valley came Cathedral chimes,
Mellow and sweet upon the wandering wind;
And then, half in a dream, across my mind
A long procession swept, from olden times—
The patriarchs, the little child, the bride,
Laid yon to rest in hallowed graveyard ground,
Since first the bells did toll at Easter-tide.
"I, too," I said, "shall also pass away,
Like a spent breeze at close of autumn day,
And those sweet morning chimes cease not to sound."
Then, as I quietly mused, a hushed voice sighed,
"Who does God's will for ever shall abide."

London Medical Mission.—During the past year 5000 new cases were entered in the books; there have been over 18,000 attendances at the Mission, and 6500 visits have been made by the physicians in the homes of the sick. In addition to this, several thousand more cases have been visited by ladies and by the nurses. The various meetings have been carried on successfully, and many cases of conversion are recorded. The Convalescent Home, at Folkestone, has had a hundred admissions, averaging a stay of a fortnight each. The Mission has acquired an immense hold of the people around, and its influence is said to be steadily increasing. A new building is in contemplation, in view of the expiring lease of the present one, and a Building Fund has been started. Communications to be made to Mr. F. A. Pring, Medical Mission, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles, W.C.

A GRACIOUS WINTER.

NEARLY thirty years ago we used to hear much about the "Year of Grace" in lands beyond the sea; and in our own land, the "Noon-day Prayer Meeting" commenced its eventful history at the same time. With some set-backs and pauses the wave of spiritual influence has been steadily rising; during the winter season now closing evangelistic meetings have been multiplied, and hundreds and thousands have been registered as commencing a new life.

A greatly increased interest is shown in the general subject of City Evangelisation, and inquiries are being constantly made at this office as to the best means of overcoming the poverty and wretchedness of large cities. Many of the old-established conservative churches in prominent positions have adopted an informal service, to which all are freely invited, pains being taken to make the seats entirely free and open to all without exception. The singing of what is known as the Moody and Sankey hymns is made an especial feature at such services. The "Missions" of our Episcopal friends have been noticed frequently in your columns, and have no doubt contributed much to the awakened interest in religious things. The various Protestant Churches have multiplied their services, and earnest and continued efforts are making by Gospel services and various aggressive Christian devices to arouse the careless and unthinking multitudes.

The New York City Mission and Tract Society is sending out its fifty city missionaries on their errands of love and mercy. The churches for the people, built by the same Society, and established in the lowest quarters of the city, are steadily gathering the working men and women, and are organising large and effective churches, which will in turn become evangelising agencies for the outlying multitudes. The Year-book of the City Mission, now going through the Press, gives pleasing testimony to the value and power of the simple Gospel as the one infallible remedy for the sin and wretchedness of the city.

HOUSE OF REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS,

KILBURN AND EASTBOURNE.

"WHAT should I have done if I had not such a dear home as the House of Rest to come to in my time of sickness and loneliness? . . . . Praise God I am now in full work again; I took my Bible-class on Sunday, also the mothers' meeting on Tuesday, and the Lord gave me power to speak with boldness to the women. . . . ." So writes a good woman who has just had a brief rest at Kilburn, and whom the Lord has used for many a long year as a messenger of hope and consolation to the poor and sick of our land. And such testimonies could be multiplied by the hundred, of help afforded to workers in the Lord's harvest. It is the will of the Master that his labourers alternate their work with needful rest, and most of the readers of The Christian know that for twenty years this Institution has presented open doors to Christian workers of all evangelical denominations when health and strength fail, or when from any legitimate cause they are compelled to take a season of rest.

Now that much sympathy is being called forth for various objects, the Lord's almoners will not forget the devoted labourers whose lives are being spent in the midst of the suffering and the helpless, witnessing daily scenes which try heart and nerve almost beyond endurance; besides making a heavy demand upon physical strength. The knowledge that they have "a quiet resting-place" provided for them affords them good cheer in their arduous labours.

The current expenses of the houses need the continuous inflow of the freewill offerings of the Lord's people. And, besides this, there is the purchase of the sea-side house at Eastbourne. Already the sum of £2500 has been paid; and if the last instalment of £500 could be raised by March 25, Miss Mason, on whom the whole financial burden of the work rests, would feel her responsibilities considerably lightened. Communications should be addressed to her, at 7 and 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

WAITING FOR THE BRIDEGROOM.

Surely, I come quickly. Amen! Even so, come, Lord Jesus.—Rev. xxii. 20.

"I AM coming, coming quickly:"
'Twas the Master's farewell word;
Keep your lamps well trimmed and burning,
Nor in sloth your loins ungird.

As the thief, with stealthy footstep,
In the darkness draweth nigh,
I shall come when men are sleeping;
Terrible the midnight cry!

As from farthest East the lightning
Shineth to the distant West,
Lighting up the hidden valleys,
And the mountain's snowy crest:

So shall be my swift appearing,
Sudden joy to waiting hearts;
While in dread dismay the sleeper
From his dream of folly starts.

I am coming; not in weakness,
As to Bethlehem long ago;
But with angel-hosts attending,
Victor over every foe.

Saints from ancient graves shall meet Me,
Living saints caught up shall be;
And the kingdom of my glory
Cover earth from sea to sea.

I am coming, but none knoweth,
Neither saint nor angel fair,
When shall be that solemn Advent,
And the day of God appear;

But the faithful shall be crownèd,
And with Me shall walk in white,
Through the everlasting ages,
In the world of perfect light:

. . . . .

Darkly o'er us storm-clouds gather,
And the air is full of dread;
Sin's dark hosts around us massing,
Faith on earth seems almost dead.

But the bridal souls are waiting,—
Chosen, precious, sealed, secure;
Waiting for the Bridegroom's coming,
Strong in hope that maketh pure.

SPITALFIELD'S GOSPEL MISSION.

MOST heartily do I thank those friends who have sent help of late through The Christian. It would encourage them to know how things are going on in the Mission. About three months ago a Hebrew Christian brother came to try what could be done among the Jews around our mission hall. He holds meetings every week for two hours. The attendance has increased from 20 to 90, and it is a matter for thankfulness to see the spirit of inquiry among them. A like work is carried on every Saturday night among the poor lodging-house men. Some from these gatherings have professed to find the Friend of sinners.

A good work is going on among the lads and girls attending the Sunday-school and children's Gospel services. The open-air work goes on as usual all the year round. Large numbers of street wanderers hear the Gospel who otherwise would never go into any place to hear of Christ.

I need scarcely add how truly painful is the state of poverty and want in Spitalfields. Being for many years a visitor in the homes of the poor during Mr. Lewis's ministry, I pretty well know the real deserving cases from the sham ones. If any readers should be disposed to send help I will see that it is given to genuine cases only.

I lately received a note from Mr. Lewis, at Ryde, assuring me of his continued interest in the work at Spitalfields; he regretted that physical weakness prevented his being in the thick of the battle as in days gone by. Will those who know him and his past labours for the Master bear him on their hearts, before the Lord, for he greatly needs it just now.

I would also say, Brethren, pray for us in this trying part of the Lord's vineyard.

Yours in the Master's service,
James Sharpless.

DISTRESSED LONDON.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

POVERTY, distress, and sickness in St. Giles's are very great. We have not had to deal with so much sickness and want for many years. Nearly 2000 sick poor have attended at the Mission Dispensary during the past four weeks. Any help in enabling us to meet the immediate wants of the sick and suffering poor in this district will be gratefully welcomed.

F. A. Pring.

ROTHERHITHE.

Thousands are roaming about, out of work, the docks, which generally find employment for them, being nearly empty. We have been giving meat teas, and it is pitiable to see these broad-chested men, many of them faint and weary through want and exposure. While we were inside, a crowd of men thronged the outside, begging for a morsel of food, which we could not of course give them.

S. Trevor Francis.

ST. LUKE'S AND CLERKENWELL.

During twenty-five years of incessant toil amongst the very poor, I was never in such straits as now to help cases of painful privation and poverty. As a member of the Local Committee of the Mansion House Fund, I find that there are cases more distressing outside the limits prescribed by that Fund than within the boundary. The widow, the fatherless, the sick and afflicted, are objects of our special care. Will not some of your readers share in this privilege of serving the Saviour?

Philip Gast,
Minister of Spencer-place Chapel.

BOW, E.

Letters for any of the London hospitals would be gladly welcomed at the East London Institute, Harley House, Bow, E. Many distressing cases come before the notice of the workers there, and it is often difficult to obtain a letter of introduction when needed. Many hundreds of families are visited in their own homes, among whom sore distress is reigning at this time; many of them belong to the household of faith. Donations of rice, peas, flour, oatmeal, or other food stuffs, of cast-off clothing, and of old linen for medical mission work, would be most acceptable. Parcels should be addressed, Harley House, Bow, E.

KILBURN.

In order to assist the poor in the present time of widespread distress at Kilburn, in addition to the usual relief, a soup kitchen has been opened at Kilburn Hall for the free distribution of soup, every Tuesday and Friday morning, to women who have families, and whose husbands are unemployed. Large numbers gratefully avail themselves of this opportunity to carry a little wholesome food to their almost starving families. The Director of the Evangelistic Mission will be glad to send to any houses of business, or other institutions, to collect spare or broken victuals in connection with this distribution, at Kilburn and elsewhere, on receipt of a postcard addressed to 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

"THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH."

"Poor Saints" are with us now as much as they were with the Apostolic Church. Alas! there are very many in this part of London. Though in the West our poverty is hardly as visible to the mere onlooker, as in the East and other districts, it is none the less real. Every visiting pastor could fill pages with examples of "suffering patience" among the people of God. One will serve as a type of many:—

A husband and wife; the former active and industrious, and capable, but with no handicraft; five little ones, the eldest about eight, were all laid down in the autumn with scarlet fever. After their recovery, the father lay in the hospital with rheumatic fever for six weeks, coming out just after Christmas. Since then, unable to get any employment, save now and then a "job," everything has been put away for food. I looked among the pawn tickets, and found such articles as the following, ALL GONE FOR FOOD: rug, girl's boots, fire-irons, girl's jacket, sheet, frock, petticoats, coat, shawl, wedding ring, &c.

If we but saw Christ in these suffering saints, should we not hasten to their relief? How precious an opportunity is the present of ministering to the Lord Himself, in the persons of his poor disciples!

MR GEORGE HOLLAND'S ADDRESSES.

Mr. Holland has given two addresses at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., on London Destitution, in addition to that which was reported fully in our columns. As an index of the deep interest awakened, we may state that among those who have attended are H.R.H. Duchess of Teck (who has been present on each occasion), Princess Victoria of Teck, Lady Harrowby, Lady Rosslyn, Lady Tankerville, Lady Sefton, Marquis of Ailsa, Sir D. Baird, Lord Charles Bruce, Earl of Rosslyn, Lord Dorchester, Viscountess Coke, Lady Ashburton, Lady Muncaster, Dowager Duchess of Manchester, Lord Radstock, &c.

Mr. Holland will give a fourth address at the same place on Wednesday next, 17th instant, at 3.30 p.m.

MACREADY HOUSE AND ITS WORK.

WRITING with respect to the work carried on here among theatrical employés, Mr. Courthope Todd (of the Theatrical Mission, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden) states that the Bible-classes are a source of much interest and blessing. The efforts made to attract and benefit very young performers are also meeting with good success. Mr. Todd continues:—

Let us turn to those who have seen something more of theatrical life. Assembled in a large room upstairs are some, who by bright vivacity seem determined, come what may, to drown care; while the sad look of others shows they are compelled by force of circumstances to toil on in a life so thoroughly distasteful. Let our thousand letter-writers take heart from the following fact, which occurred only a few days ago. Two actresses, who through prolonged illness had been brought into great distress, which they had not cared to acknowledge, came to the mission, and, to use their own words, said: "This letter saved us both from suicide." As it came from one of our helpers in Leicester, we inquired how that could be, and the elder of the two replied: "I saw nothing before us but starvation, all our efforts to help ourselves proving fruitless. So in despair my sister went out for poison, and while away the postman came." In the letter were these words: "I have a presentiment something is going to happen to you! For God's sake do not put an end to your lives, for what would become of your souls?" God's message through that letter sent them to us. We have started them afresh, and both promised to decide for Christ; they have written asking prayer in their behalf.

The Ham-yard Soup Kitchen and Hospice (Great Windmill-street, St. James's, W.) reports favourably on its last year's work. There is reason to hope that many have been permanently rescued from pauperism. The penny dinners to children are continued, nearly 8000 being sold last year. More than a thousand poor families were provided with a Christmas dinner, and no less than 22,000 meals were gratuitously provided. Twenty-one tons of coal were also distributed. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. H. S. Trower, 51, Montagu-square, W.

The Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland now employs about 200 colporteurs. The last report shows that the sales during the past year have amounted to £40,166, being an increase of nearly £2000 on the previous year. The visits of the colporteurs in the various districts of Scotland are received with pleasure; extracts from their reports show that thus a large amount of earnest work is done, and many a good seed is sown, either in the sale of the printed or spoken word, often to spring up where least expected. One colporteur states that in fourteen years he has disposed of books, periodicals, small books, and tracts, the total value being £8000.

Ealing Y.W.C.A.—During the year new premises were secured in Oxford-road, where much success has been enjoyed; seventy-eight new members have been enrolled, making the entire number 160. At the mission services the meetings were crowded, and many found peace through faith in Christ. The Monthly Prayer Union Meeting is a source of refreshment, and the social evening held weekly has been well kept up. The Bible-class for young ladies is attended by forty members, and blessing is testified to. Applications are invited to the Servants' Registry from those requiring servants. A missionary working party and social evening is held each Wednesday. Miss Tulloch is the Hon. Secretary.

The Spezia Mission, Italy.—In addition to its special Italian work, this mission was able to render some very acceptable help to a body of between forty and fifty English stokers, who were brought to Italy by Messrs. Penn, the marine engine builders, to work the great Italian war ship Italia during her trials. Friendless in a foreign land, the men gladly accepted the invitation to a religious service on a recent Sunday, when Mr. Anderson preached, and Rev. W. L. Lang assisted; the latter preached the following Sunday. Miss Clarke, in the absence of her brother in England, invited the men to a tea, and during the week measures were taken to interest them in various ways. The mission is prospering in a special manner just now.

Conference on the Second Advent.

MILDMAY PARK, March 2, 3 and 4, 1886.

TUESDAY MORNING, MARCH 2.

The Word of Prophecy: Its Place and Value.

"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand" (Rev. i. 3) "For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. xix. 10). "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts" (2 Peter i. 19).

THE Earl Cavan presided. On taking the chair he said: I am deeply grieved to announce the absence of our dear friend, Mr. Blackwood, through indisposition. I trust that our thoughts and hearts will be directed to the Precious One whose coming we are so anxiously looking for at the present time.

After a period of silent prayer the Chairman led the meeting in supplicating the Divine blessing. The hymn was then sung—

"Bride of the Lamb, awake, awake!
Why sleep for sorrow now?"

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson announced the receipt of a telegram from Mr. Blackwood, stating that he had temporarily lost his voice. He said: "The Master of Assemblies will be with you, and supply through fitter lips my lack of service." They deeply regretted his absence, and trusted that though he was not with them he would share in the benefit and the blessing. They had to lament the absence of a great number of friends who were accustomed to join them. After it was too late to alter the dates of their meetings, they discovered that that week was the appointed time for the gathering of the London Diocesan Conference, which met that morning in another part of London, and several of their brethren were obliged to be there from a sense of duty. Some were engaged in mission work and in various other duties. He had received the following letter from Dr. H. Bonar, which he would read:—

My Dear Mr. Mathieson,—I find that there is no hope of my being able to be with you in March at your Prophetical Conference. The hand of God still lies upon me, and though I am very considerably restored to health, I am still under medical restrictions, which prohibit exertion either in travelling or in speaking.

Such being the case, I am exceedingly desirous to express my sympathy with you in the object of your projected gathering at Mildmay; and my fellowship with you in the great and glorious truths on which you propose to confer together, as brethren in a common Lord, who are looking back to Him who came the first time as the Bearer of our sins upon the cross, and looking forward to Him who is coming the second time to receive the crown which the Father has promised Him as the heir of all things, and Prince of the kings of the earth.

I know not but this may be my last opportunity of bearing witness to the much-forgotten doctrine which was so specially given to the Church as her blessed hope; and I wish to say how increasingly important that doctrine seems to me to become as the ages are running to their close, and the power of the great adversary is unfolding itself both in the Church and in the world. For this is not merely "man's day," but "Satan's day;" and he has come down, having great wrath, because he knoweth he hath but a short time. The poison of the last days has penetrated everywhere: unbelief, error, strong delusion, self-will, ambition, pride, hatred of God and of his Christ—these are the deadly forces that are operating all over earth and disintegrating society, making all human rule impossible, and demonstrating the necessity for the arrival of Him who is to end all these overturnings, and to introduce the reign of peace, the kingdom of everlasting order—the time when the vile person shall no more be called liberal, when darkness shall no more be called light, nor science substituted for Scripture, nor the glitter of human culture for regeneration by the Holy Ghost.

Antichrist is rising rapidly and gathering strength. Multitudes are enlisting unconsciously under his banner, and adopting his watchword—LIBERALITY, reckoning it illiberal to believe in judgment to come, or in hell, or in the wrath of God, or in the sinner's eternal doom. To meet all this we look for the arrival of the Christ of God; and as the confusion increases, and the rebellion waxes stronger and stronger, we raise more and more loudly the Church's ancient cry, "How long, O Lord, how long?"

The human heart, "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," is speaking out and acting out more than ever the deadly evils which, from age to age, have been developing themselves in a thousand forms. The lawlessness of the human will, the pride of the human intellect, the ambition of the human heart, the determination of man to make humanity a god to itself, and to make natural law a substitute for supernatural law, and a pretext for expelling God from his own creation: these are the combined human and Satanic agencies against which the Church of God must specially contend. For, "if the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

The beguiling of unstable souls, the schemes of hell for deceiving the elect, the rapid development of diverse and strange doctrines, the entanglement of multitudes in the snare of the fowler—these are the symptoms of evil that alarm the Christian man as precursors of the last consummation of evil, the firstfruits of the last sad harvest of hell.

All this may be called illiberality and pessimism, the morbid forebodings of diseased spirituality; but what if it should be all true? "Let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." The awful winding up may be nearer than we think. The "harvest of the earth" is ripe; and, as for "the clusters of the vine of the earth," are they not long since "fully ripe"? and is it not the great long-suffering of God suspending the execution of wrath, long since overdue that has stayed the vials of vengeance?

Forgive me for writing thus strongly; but, as one of the oldest students of the prophetic Word, I feel constrained to speak out, and to give to my brethren in Christ what may be my last testimony.

The Patmos message of our great King and Lord is still sounding in the ear of the Church: "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly." Shall she not speak loudly out her responsive, "Amen: even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Yours faithfully in Him,
Edinburgh. Horatius Bonar.

Prayer was then offered by Rev. Canon Fausset, and another hymn was sung. The Chairman read 2 Peter i. 19, directing special attention to the words, "take heed." I do trust, he said, as referred to in the prayer just offered, that there may be a spirit of forbearance and love with any who may be of a contrary opinion as to the truth of prophecy. We want to realise more our oneness with the Blessed Lord, to realise our oneness with one another as members of the same mystical body. May God give us the spirit of love, the spirit of patience, the spirit of hearing, the spirit of joy in Himself, that we may go from this gathering reflecting the light that we have received from Him, and so make the cause of our adorable Redeemer more and more attractive to those around us.

"TAKE HEED."

Rev. CANON STEWART.

My Christian friends, in humble dependence on the wisdom and power of the Holy Ghost, whose inspiration has already been prayed for, I desire to fix your attention upon three points with reference to the subject before us. The first is the subject of study; the second is the manner of study; and the third is the purpose of study. The subject of study is one St. Peter, in the Scripture which our Chairman has already read, speaks of as "the sure word." It is a single word, and although there have been divers details underneath it, and a variety of speakers in various ages, the one utterance they have been continually repeating is the promise of recovery—the recovery of man and man's home from all the evils under which they now groan, unto everlasting happiness. The days of restitution, the restitution of all things, the times of refreshing—they will all combine at last into this magnificent finish, to the undoing of the curse which came by Adam's disobedience—the complete undoing of that curse, by virtue of the second Adam's magnificent obedience. If we go back to the first prophecy, what was it? "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." From that time onward, in the whole history of prophecy, that has been the single subject—the undoing of that which was once infamously done. To Abraham it was said, "In thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed." In Hannah's song it was said, "He shall give strength unto his King, and exalt the horn of his anointed." From Samuel and all that follow after, there has been simply the one great statement that after the long, wretched night there would at last come the bright day of blessing.

As another Scripture, put at the head of our thesis, says, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." What Jesus did do in his wonderful condescension, what He is still doing on his throne, what He will eternally do when He comes to bring in the great salvation—that is the one statement of all who have ever been witnesses for Him. Under this great statement we may notice four distinct occasions. In the first place the resurrection; and the rising again in due time of those who have been believers in the Redeemer in various ages, and the union with them of believers then existing on the earth, transformed, conformed into one glorious body, so as to form one grand Church. Secondly, there is the visible presence in the midst of that glorified Church of the human yet Divine Saviour. The prophet says, "Thine eye shall see the King in his beauty." Thirdly, there is the exaltation with Christ, the King of all his people, into a royal priesthood. "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests;" the kingdom, unto the whole of it even, shall be given to the saints of the Most High. Then, fourth, the renovation of their human home so as to be thoroughly adapted to their human nature. As if that grand magnificent change upon the globe had already occurred, the prophets were singing for centuries, "The Lord reigneth: let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad thereof." "The new heavens and the new earth which I will make, shall remain before Me, saith Jehovah."

All those four particulars we find again and again stated in one or other of Peter's epistles, or sermons. They are, of course, in very striking contrast to the present state of things; so that when he refers to the sure word of prophecy in one of the Scriptures now before us, he says that that promise of restoration is like "a light shining in a dark place." But he sums them all up again and again in one grand conclusion. Just as in the Scripture now before us, he speaks of one utterance—"the sure word"—so he sums all up in another passage by the grand word "salvation"—receiving the end of their faith—salvation. In yet another place he calls it the free gift, the one grand eternal gift that is to be brought unto us at the appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. You will observe that in the context there is a grand confirmation of all that was then present in the Apostle's mind, in his recollection of the scene upon the Mount of Transfiguration. He recalls how on that memorable occasion he had woke out of sleep to see his Master's countenance shining like the sun, his Master's raiment glistening with a brightness more intense than that of the sun upon Mount Hermon. There was Elijah, who had never died, and who was the representative of the millions who shall be transformed and be with Christ in the day of his power; there was Moses, as the representative of the saints who shall be called out of their graves by the voice of the Son of Man. As he thought of it all, and thought of the word from heaven that confirmed the grand truth, and said, "This is my beloved Son"—the long-expected, only begotten Son of the Father sent to be the promised Redeemer, the Apostle said, so to speak: Every sermon that I ever preached to you about the second coming of the Lord is true. We have not put before you cunningly-devised fables when we speak of it, for we ourselves were witnesses of his glorious majesty. He adds (for this is the true translation): "We have thus made more sure the grand, simple word of prophecy, which the seers from the very beginning had been uttering for the comfort of those who believed."

As we have thus noticed the grand subject of Christian study, the second point is to notice the manner of it. Peter says it should be with earnest diligence—"riveted interest" is the meaning. To this he says we do well to take heed. It is the same word that is used of Lydia, when she was under the power and spirit of Christ. It is there said that the Lord opened the heart of Lydia, that she "attended" to Paul—exactly the same word that Peter is using. You do well to give riveted attention to the Word that is continually set before you—the coming of the glorious salvation. This is in precise contrast to the conduct of many professing Christians. Many are giving heed to money, family, home, or to some other phase of the fashion of this world that is passing away. Many, also, who see the error of direct worldliness are yet not so thoroughly awake as to perceive the importance of riveted attention upon what God has said as to the Second Coming of Christ. On the contrary, they are inclined to speak of it as if it were a waste of time to allow their thoughts, as the weeks and months and years of their lives go by, to be set upon what God has said about the future; but Peter, ere he closes his discourse, and in order to stir up the pure minds, by way of remembrance, of those who had the like precious faith, bids them give a riveted attention to all that the various prophets had said upon this grand subject.

You may remember how in other portions of Peter's writings he gives encouragement to his contemporaries in that diligence to which he exhorts them. He speaks of the ancient prophets, and how those prophets searched diligently what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified of the sufferings of Christ, and the that glory should follow. How wondrous it is to think of Isaiah, or of Ezekiel, or of other prophets endeavouring to search into the meaning of the words that were coming from their own lips! Isaiah would be thinking of what could be meant by this, "They should not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain." Ezekiel would ponder when he had given a description of a wonderful temple and city, "And the name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there."

Think of a whole chorus of prophetic psalmists digesting their own sentences when they said, "Let the fields be glad, let the trees rejoice." "Thou hast put all things under his feet, all sheep and oxen, yea and the beasts of the field, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas. O Lord our God, how excellent is thy name in all the earth!" Angels longingly stooped down, desiring to look into this very subject of the ancient prophecies. Oh! if those of like passions with ourselves, in bygone days, centuries ago, when the purpose of God was only partially wrought out, were so sacredly inquisitive; and if the angels who needed no Redeemer delighted to pause and meditate and search diligently into these matters, how much more eager should be our riveted attention now that the night is far spent, and the day is at hand. There can be but a very short time now before the Redeemer shall be here to bring in all the blessing, and all the eternal peace of the promised salvation.

I may be permitted to give a few hints as to some of the methods of diligence to be employed, in order that our meditation upon the prophetic pages of Scripture may be in accordance with the expressed language of this inspired Epistle, "Take heed." It seems of great importance that attention should be paid to what Bishop Wordsworth called "the catch words"—the key phrases in the various prophets, in which the Holy Spirit is pleased again and again to repeat Himself. He puts the same remarkable word or phrase into the midst of a new context, so that the second context can help one who studies and compares Scripture with Scripture, to understand both. Then, again, as it pleases the Holy Spirit to give the key-word sometimes to a humble worker, and sometimes to one in a higher place, the student of prophecy should be ready to be taught by every devout neighbour. Anyone who is dogmatic, as if he and he alone had wisdom given to him, may be certain by that very dogmatism that he is on the wrong tack. There will always be a loving readiness to be taught by our brethren, where there is a real fellowship with the Holy Spirit and a fellowship with the Father and the Son, through whom the word is given for the profit of the Christian Church.

There is a third thing that may appear in contrast to the second: that no man should be called "Rabbi," or Master, upon the earth, inasmuch as all are liable to err, and inasmuch as those who might be exalted by reason of the greatness of the revelation made to them, like Paul, are troubled by some thorn in the flesh, some infirmity of their mind or spirit, so that a certain measure of error creeps in even in the midst of their understanding of what has been written. The fourth and main consideration is: let there be direct prayer to the Giver of prophecy to cause his presence to be felt in every mind when that prophecy has diligent heed given to it. I suppose no one has ever acted according to Paul's pattern in the First Epistle to the Ephesians without finding profit. He put up the direct prayer that he might know the meaning of prophecy—that God might give unto him the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Himself. Let us be diligent in prayer that we may not merely be ready to accept what this system or that system may suggest to us amongst our human neighbours, but may understand and constantly recollect and love the hope to which God Himself is calling us by his written Word. A fifth thought is this: watching the times as they pass in order that the earliest sign of the redemption which is drawing nigh may be discovered.

In conclusion, let me pass to the third point. We have been considering what is to be studied—the Word; how it is to be studied—with diligence and prayerful interest; now let us notice why. It is for a much higher purpose than that all students of prophecy should agree. That may be a consummation devoutly to be wished, and will be more or less perfectly attained as the end draws nigh. It is not improbable that different schools of interpretation will coincide more or less as events rapidly hasten towards the great end. There is an encouraging verse in Daniel xii., "The wise shall understand." But let us observe that when Peter fixed the attention of his fellow-Christians on the Word he had a far grander purpose than that; it was that each student might have an intense affection for the Father revealed, and an increasing love towards Him who is to be the bright centre of that future when He returns. I take the true reading of the passage to be: "You have a more sure hope, unto which you do well that you take heed, until the day dawns in your hearts, and until the Lord in all his glory is loved now because of the magnificent salvation which He will give you then."

Let me observe, before I finish, that the real hope of the Christian is a far more attractive thing than the indefinite future that many who profess Christianity set before them. There are many whose ideas of the world to come is a simple hope of freedom from evil; others have the idea of a constant joining in a magnificent chorus of praise to God. But something more attractive to a human being than that is revealed to us. It is a condition of things precisely suited to exercise all the healthy faculties of body, mind, and spirit. Only let this be realised, and from the inmost depths of your heart you may plead with God, "May thy kingdom come, may thy will—love to Thee, and love to all our fellow-creatures—be done here upon this earth as it is done in heaven." But let us recollect that if our study of the future thus produces such an intensity of longing worthy of the name, it will be a longing that will improve our daily character now. All truth sanctifies, but there is no portion of truth that is more thoroughly suited to sanctify than that which suggests to men what the home of the perfect may be, and what their perfection will be in the midst of that home. It will be a perfect population, ruled by a perfect King. Just in proportion as the sanctifying power of the Spirit is felt now, there is, indeed, a true and genuine affection towards Him, who will then be the glorious King adorned and praised by all, so that the crowns that He has won for them shall be cast at his feet, with the everlasting song, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive honour, power, majesty, and dominion for ever." How do we know we are ready for the Lord's appearing but by having experience of present affection towards Him. "If a man love Me, He will keep my word." Just in proportion as we find that, out of love to Christ, and drawing out of the power of his grace from day to day, we have our lamps trimmed and burning, and, our loins girt, like men waiting for their Master, and are striving to be found diligent in doing his work when He comes; just in that proportion we have the proof that we are amongst those who really love his appearing.

THE TESTIMONY OF SCRIPTURE.

Mr. DENHAM SMITH.

To one who has been living in the prospect of this hope, as in my case, for nearly half a century, it seems as if the Bible is full of this subject from beginning to end. We catch the first footfall of the Coming One right away in the Garden of Eden, where there was given the wonderful promise that the seed of the woman should put his foot down straight upon the serpent's head. Certainly that is not the condition of the world yet. Sometimes I look at my Bible, as if all these prophets with their utterances were like what you have seen when there has been a fair breeze upon the Atlantic or Pacific. You have seen the waves, with their beauteous white crests looking as if they were all following one another to the same goal. So, from Enoch all the way down through the prophets, you can scarcely find one silent upon this theme, whether it be Isaiah, the evangelical bard of the Jewish people, or Jeremiah, the weeping prophet, or those minor prophets (so-called), or the bright evangelical prophets such as the prophet Zechariah. They all look forward to the Coming One, a grand, a magnificent Deliverer. My hope is that in these Conferences the whole subject will be so opened up that there shall not be one amongst us who will doubt the reality of his coming; or that it will be a personal coming; or that it will be a coming before we may expect the world to see a millennium. If you are looking for a millennium now, you are not looking for Him; but if it can be seen that He may come at any time, and that his coming shall be the beginning of a new era, when He will put down all authority opposed to Him, rooting up every plant that He never planted, and then giving the rule of a thousand years of blessedness, what a wonderful change that will be to one who has been looking at nothing but the growth of evil before and around him, and has been taught from infancy to expect that the Bible Society, and Tract Society, and Missionary Society—the evangelistic efforts and pulpit ministrations, would be so many mighty moral movements whereby the earth would be filled with God's knowledge, all evil put down, brotherhood of nations commenced, and the earth filled with his glory.

As I have said, in the garden we hear the very first sound of the footfall of the beloved One who is coming. Then look at Enoch! Men think of this subject as if it were almost a discovery that the Lord Jesus is coming personally; but if you went back those thousands of years, and were a neighbour of that blessed man Enoch, you would find that he not only walked with God, but he walked in the enjoyment of this grand subject. He said, "The Lord cometh with myriads of his saints." What a discovery to a man like that, isolated in the world. Then think of the magnificent utterances made by others later on in the history of the race. Job says, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Then as to Abraham, why, he had the heavens opened unto him. Not only was there a God-man coming, but there was a place. There was a city whose builder and artificer is God.

There are two wonderful texts in the New Testament spoken by our Lord Himself: "The Father loveth his Son, and hath given all things into his hand" (John iii. 35); "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them" (xvii. 22). There is no such thing as a poor Christian; he is a millionaire, as to his wonderful inheritance, which is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away. So we might go on right through the Bible. It would take I know not how long to bring out all that is here on this wonderful subject. Just one thing more. We have spoken of the prophets, but when the Lord Himself was here, you remember that He too became a prophet. John xiv. is his prophecy. He was about to leave them, and they were disappointed because they had not got the kingdom for which they were looking. I have often thought that the Jew saw nothing but the glory; he was like one in a deep valley from whence you would see magnificent mountains overhead. Whereas the Christian Church nowadays, the large majority of Christendom, are actually looking more upon the humiliation, and do not catch the sight of the hill-tops. The Gentile does not see the glory, and the Jew does not see the humiliation. These disciples were disappointed, and the Lord said unto them: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions." You shall have a presentation as children, and then when presented you will come with Me, and you will be joint heirs in the kingdom. Do not let your heart be troubled: "I go to prepare abiding places for you" (as the Revised Version has it). You will be no more strangers or guests; no vicissitudes; no losing of dear ones. "And if I go I will come again." He is coming down personally, as He went personally up. Though we have been reminded that we differ on some points, surely we might well agree when on the eve of such a magnificent consummation. What matters about the crumbs when we are going to have the mighty loaf. Here we have a unique, a special word—something different from what we have in the prophets. We never read in the prophets of a Father's house, or a word so touching and tender as "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go away I will come again, and receive you unto Myself."

A friend of mine came down from a sick-room, and just as he was about to leave he said to the sick one, who was in fact dying, "I am going to leave the most precious word in the Bible with you." "What is that?" she said. He quoted this word: "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again." "No," she said to him with her dying lips, "that is not the most precious word; the most precious word is, 'I will receive you unto Myself.'" It is like the child returning home from school: the mother brings all her little friends to see her, so that they may enjoy her joy; but by and by one after another leaves. When they have all gone she springs to her mother's heart, and says, "Mamma, I have got you all to myself now; this is what I want in coming home." So the Lord will have you to Himself, and you will have the Lord to yourself. There will be no more thought of ever relapsing into a distant promise, or having a door between you, with Him on the other side, and saying, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. Why don't you let me in? Why don't you live in the joy of my indwelling love?"

The subject is inexhaustible; it is endless. As I said, the whole Bible is full of it, and I would advise you to get your hearts as full of it as the Bible can fill them. You will then go about as walking testimonies in these last days, and you may live looking up, for your redemption draweth nigh. The Apostle in the same way had a unique word. He says: "I received it from the Lord." Paul says when God comes He will bring his saints with Him—that is what all the prophets said—but he added that not one of the prophets foretold how they were to come. That was a singular thing. Now, he says, the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a shout, and we who are alive and remain will be caught up to Him, and our sleeping ones will be raised from the grave, and we shall meet Him in the air. Many think He will then present us to the Father in heaven. The white horses came out of heaven, but they must have got there first. Certainly the 10,000 came out of heaven, and they must have got there first. So in 1 Thess. and John xiv., which I hold to be a little nota bene, a little addenda, a wonderful sparkle is put upon the whole of this theme. There might be a long interlude or a short one between the taking up and the positive coming down to this world in the Second Advent.

May God give us all in the enjoyment of these days to learn and inwardly to digest these truths. May God bless that precious Word we have heard this morning; our souls will have the benefit, and He will have the glory.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The Second Advent: The Hope of the Church.

"I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself" (John xiv. 2, 3). "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. iii. 20). "Looking for that blessed hope" (Tit. ii. 13). "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory" (Col. iii. 4).

DESPITE the severe weather, the large hall was nearly full at the evening hour. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided. After prayer and song, he read 1 Thess. iv., and said: Our subject to-night is "The Second Advent, the Hope of the Church." It is with a feeling of the deepest solemnity, and a heart hushed before the Lord, that we approach the consideration of so great and so glorious a subject. Truly, throughout all ages the Church has looked for the coming of its Lord. We speak not now of churches, for some have forgotten it, and some have kept it alive but for a brief period of the year; but we would speak of that which composes the Church—the individual members of the body of Christ. We claim to be members of that Church. Is this blessed hope our hope? It is a testing question for every one of us. There are some happy saints of God who, if they awoke at midnight, or at cockcrow, or in the morning, the first thought which would flash into their minds with returning consciousness would be this: The Lord not yet come! Have we attained unto such a watching and waiting for Him as that—unto such a realisation of this hope of the Church as that? Many doubtless have.

Not only the hope of the Christian Church, but, as we have already reminded you, the hope of the Church of God throughout all ages. David, in one of his magnificently jewelled utterances, if I may so term it—one of his sevenfold phrases—refers to it, though this may not be the primary meaning of the words. Turn to Psalm ci., and read in the second verse a longing expression which I thoroughly believe each one of us can take upon our lips now: "O when wilt Thou come unto me?" Note the sevenfold phrase, and the centre of it—THOU. I have referred to that text in order that we may pass our eyes across the sacred page and find another sevenfold expression in Psalm civ. 34: "My meditation of Him shall be sweet." May we realise each one of us this night how sweet is that central figure of the universe, "HIM," the coming One. Many here—I trust all here—have tasted something of the sweetness of this meditation of our Lord and Master, as we have looked back to his Cross, and sat beneath its shadow with great delight, and as we have grasped his presence day by day, working in us and abiding with us. But we would to-night have the deeper and fuller knowledge of the sweetness of that meditation which dwells much on the coming of the Lord.

What should be our attitude? It is told of the North-American Indians, that when they would hear from a great distance the coming of friend or foe, they bow their ears low to the ground. Shall we not now bow low before the Lord, that we may hear his footfall, it may be at the very gate? May He, the wheels of whose chariot sometimes seem to tarry, take away from our heart anything like impatience that we are called to wait. The Lord, as has been said by that dear saint of his, old Rutherford, 250 years ago—the Lord is losing no time. He will come in the fulness of time. It is for us to wait, to work, to watch.

Mr. Varley engaged in prayer, and another hymn was sung.

THE CHURCH'S HOPE.

Rev. CLARMONT SKRINE.

The hope of the Church? These words seem to me often to have a very vague meaning attached to them. We know all the beautiful texts in reference to the subject, and bearing upon it. And yet, sometimes, we do not compare them together, place them side by side, put them in their proper order, comparing spiritual things with spiritual. So we often get a very vague idea of what the hope of the Church is. For instance when you read in Heb. xi. that "Abraham looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God," how seldom do we connect with that passage Revelation xxi. How seldom do we seem to see that Abraham looked for that very same city; how often we forget that in connection with that vision is not only the hope of the redeemed Church of Israel, but also the redeemed Church of the Gentiles. They seem to be one there. Then when we read the prayer of Paul in Ephesians i. 18, where he prays that they "may know what is the hope of his calling," how seldom do we connect that with Philippians iii., where the Apostle speaks of the change of this body of humiliation, that it may be fashioned in the likeness of his glorious body; yet there seems to be that connection.

We shrink sometimes from the subject from many causes. Some dread touching it because there is so much divergence of thought in regard to it. And yet why should we hesitate? Do we not remember that the Apostle himself said, "We know in part, and we prophecy in part." And may we not be content, each one of us, with a partial knowledge; may we not take up the subject prayerfully and earnestly, seek further light upon it, being content with what light we can get? There are others who fly from the subject because they think it impractical; because it takes their thoughts away from the present time, and the growth of holiness, and the present enjoyment of the Lord. What an answer you have to that objection in the First and Second Epistles to the Thessalonians. You have only to remember how the Apostle deals with the subject there. Did it make the Thessalonian Church indifferent to the cause of Christ? Did it make them neglect the subject of personal holiness? Was it not quite the reverse? How the Apostle rejoiced over them, as he heard of their work of faith and labour of love and patience of hope, and how the word of God sounded out from them, when they turned from idols to God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. How he prayed that the Lord would sanctify them wholly, and that their whole spirit, soul, and body should be preserved blameless It seemed such a very practical truth as the Apostle brought it under the notice of the Thessalonian Church. So it comes to pass that, from one cause and another, the subject is neglected and lost sight of, and that great command and blessing, which seem to stand together in Rev. i. 3, is lost: "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy."

Those who, with me, had the privilege of standing upon the platform of the first Conferences at Barnet, something like thirty years ago, can bear witness that we never gathered together on those occasions, but, somehow, on the lips of every speaker the blessed hope of the Church evermore came up. I do thank God, and take courage, that our friends at Mildmay have been prompted and guided to bring us together to confer upon this glorious hope of the Church of the living God.

Glance with me at those First and Second Epistles to the Thessalonians; notice how in each chapter the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus is referred to. Bear in mind that the Apostle had spent at Thessalonica but six short Sabbath days; but during those few weeks, when he visited the place of heathenism, and led souls to Jesus, he was placing before them the glorious Gospel of the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus Christ. When Timothy came back to him at Corinth it was to gladden his heart with the thought that they were waiting for the Lord from heaven. That was the one great thought which filled their souls and made them such zealous converts, such diligent, earnest workers, and such faithful servants of the Lord. And what was that hope? It seemed to me very plain when our Chairman read the fourth chapter of the First Epistle, that what they expected, and what the Apostle taught them to look for, was the coming of our Lord in person for his Church, receiving his people in the air, and taking them to be with Him; and that at any moment. Do you not think the Apostle wrote advisedly and under the teaching of the Holy Ghost when he said: "We which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air"? I have never forgotten what our brother Rainsford said once, when speaking on that subject. He said the definite article should be left out of the verse, and it should read "caught up"—not "in the clouds," but "in clouds." It carried to my mind the blessed thought that if the Lord came this night, a cloud would rise from the Conference Hall at Mildmay, and a cloud from every town and village in our land; with the shout of the archangel and the trump of God, we should pass up to meet the Lord in the air.

Was it not a fact that so strongly was this truth impressed upon the mind of the Thessalonians that they grieved and mourned for the dead; that, as they followed a dear saint to the grave and laid the body there in the hope of a glorious resurrection, they shed tears because they felt that that one had lost the prospect of meeting the Lord in the air—that there was some loss to the one who had been taken away before the personal coming of the Lord? And when the Apostle corrects the mistake, how does he do it? Not by telling them that they had misunderstood him in reference to the immediate, sudden removal of the Church during the lifetime of the saints; but he said, "the dead in Christ shall rise first." Those for whom you mourn will have left the grave before you are taken; they will be carried up from the grave before you are transformed into the likeness and glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. I maintain, and I think you will follow me, that with the Apostle himself and with the Church at Thessalonica there was the hope of removal for the Church during the lifetime of the saints.

I know we may look, and should look, for tribulation; that whatever signs there may be of the Lord's coming, we are called upon to watch them and take account of them. We are not to be led away from the thought that Romanism is a vital principle, and has to be grappled with prayerfully and diligently; that infidelity is on the increase, and there is to be a continual resistance on the part of the Church to the evil that is coming on. We need to take the word of prophecy, as the Apostle Peter tells us in the first chapter of his Second Epistle, as "a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts." We are to look upon the light which shineth in a dark place, and throw this light a little before us; as we follow on in that light all seems more or less obscure and dark. We know there is trouble; we see the oncoming of tribulation; but none of these things, I apprehend, are intended to come in the way of the hope of the Church's translation, or to rise up before us as a series of events for which we are to look before we can expect the Lord to come. I take literally the Divine command in the last prayer He ever taught his Church, occurring as it does at the close of the revealed Word: "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Now the Thessalonians were under persecution, and they looked also for the oncoming evil which yet looms in the distance before us. They were taught about Antichrist; they were taught about the lawless one who was to arise, whom the Lord should consume with the breath of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming. Nay, they were told that the mystery of iniquity was already working; and we know how that mystery of iniquity has wrought—how for some twelve or thirteen centuries our brethren who have looked so much and so carefully into the historical aspect of the prophetic word have seen the rise and progress of Popery. I follow them in it; I think I see it too. I see twelve centuries of papal darkness, and then I seem to see Rome, shorn of her earthly power, yet vital in her heart and lasting in her evil. Then I seem to see something worse, darker and more dreadful still, just that which the Thessalonians saw when they were told to look for one whose working was after the working of Satan in signs and wonders. But what was the Apostle's way of dealing with them? As they looked at that dark and gloomy picture in the distance, what did he tell them? As they feared because the day of the Lord was to be so terrible, what was his consolation? He told them that there was another event which was to antedate that great apostasy, which was to antedate that manifestation of the man of sin; that was their gathering together unto Him.

Now let us glance for a moment at the Book of the Apocalypse—the Revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ. I will not touch on points about which we may differ; I will just ask you to connect together the first and the nineteenth chapters. From chapter four to nineteen we have a series of threefold visions, bringing under our notice the different events which are to usher in the manifestation of the glory of Christ. Passing over all these, and connecting the first and the nineteenth chapters, what do I see? At the outset the Lord tells us that when He comes down to the earth "every eye shall see Him; they also that pierced Him; and all the nations of the earth shall wail because of Him." I pass on to the nineteenth chapter, and there He is fulfilling the very purpose, carrying out the very object that He has in 2 Thess. i., consuming with the breath of his mouth and destroying with the brightness of his coming the lawless one; seizing upon the beast and the false prophet, and casting them into the lake of fire. Where do I see the Church? I turn to 2 Thess. i., and I hear the Apostle comforting the saints with this prospect: "Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." Are not the saints and believers at that moment just with the Lord forming a part of the glory which comes down to the earth when He shall destroy with the brightness of his coming those who are opposed to Him in his kingdom? Yes, surely.

There is a difficulty that some have felt in looking at this prospect of the Church of Christ as being removed before the great and final tribulation comes to its height, and it is found in Matt. xxiv. 31, where we read of the gathering together from the four corners of the earth of the Lord's elect. I see in that passage that this event followed the manifestation of Christ after the great tribulation. It comes in connection with these words, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened," and so on, "and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man." The argument is that because the gathering of the elect from the four corners of the earth is stated as following the manifestation of Christ, therefore we shall be found down in the midst of the tribulation and mingled with the ungodly in the day when Christ shows Himself from heaven. I would simply suggest for your careful and prayerful study this thought: that "the elect" in that passage seems to me to be the elect of Israel, the elect of that people who are to be the earthly people, who are to be brought to the Holy Land. I connect that with Psalm l., which has been alluded to to-day, where my own mind has been changed in reference to the verse, "Gather my saints together unto Me; those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice." That may also be a call to Israel, and not a call to the Church. We will, however, let that matter stand; here I think we can all come together: that the hope of the Church is, whether out of the tribulation or before the tribulation, whether in the midst of the tribulation or otherwise—that which is put before the mind of the Church of God is the immediate, the sudden, the unexpected removal of the saints to meet the Lord, not on the earth, but in the air.

Will you notice how different this hope is from the hope that we have in a happy dying state? for many are contented with the hope that they shall die a happy death; that to be absent from the body will always be to be present with the Lord. But do you not see the distinction between the two? If I die, the Lord comes to me in spirit, as He said in John xiv: "I will come to you, and make my abode with you." He visits your soul in the dying hour, He cheers you with his presence, and then He sends his messenger to release your bright spirit, and carry that spirit into his presence while your body sleeps, in hope of a future resurrection. But if He comes in my lifetime, then I go to Him; then He comes for me Himself, and meets me on the way; then it is not my soul released, but my body transformed, and I meet the Lord in a glorified body like Himself. Do not you see the distinction that is so important to us?

Look at the Church in its present condition, and what is it? How separated, how divided, how mingled with that which is evil; how many there are out of fellowship with one another, and sometimes it may be out of fellowship with the Lord. But when He comes again, and when the Church is gathered around his glorious person, all the members are one, and the Lord is manifested to them all. Then we see Him as He is, and we are like Him. Is not that a much more blessed condition than the condition of the Church now? Do not you pray for his coming because you realise that this is the only remedy for all our divisions, and all that is distracting and disturbing in the communion of the Church of God? While the Lord is absent I am a part of the creation which is groaning and travailing in pain. Even those of us who "have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." But when the manifestation of the Church takes place, then the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption. Is not that a glorious prospect, that all the groaning creation waits for that manifestation, the hope of the Church, and that your manifestation and mine, with the Master in the glory, will be followed with such blessed results for the whole creation of God?

Then do not let us forget this last thought in connection with the hope of the Church—the distribution of rewards. 2 Cor. v. bears upon this. The Bema, or throne of judgment, there spoken of, is that to which you and I are looking as the only judgment-seat with which we have to do. Our sins have been judged, but our works have not been regarded; and it is a wonderful thought that after the Lord has converted your soul He gives you the desire and the power to work for Him. After He has wrought all these works by you, He is then going, in a wondrous way, to reward you for what you have done. Then there is governmental power, on which I cannot now dwell, but that is also the hope of the Church. The Church will reign with Him, and we shall be kings and priests with the Lord. What comfort this gives to us as we look at the condition of the world at this moment. As we see all the powers of the earth shaken to their very foundation, thrones tottering, sedition rife, infidelity on the increase, and moral and social evil abounding to such an extent that it has never before reached the point it has now, except, perhaps, in the days of Sodom—what a comfort it is for us to be able to expect the Master at any moment, that He may reign and gather up all power for Himself.

It is also my comfort as I look upon the mission field. But for this truth, which the Lord I believe has led my mind into for now thirty years or more, I should take a very discouraging view of missionary labour. Thankful as I am for all such labour, I see such masses of heathenism that I dare not contemplate the covering of the earth with glory as the result of mere mission labour. But of this I am quite sure, that when the Lord comes there will be such an outpouring of the gracious Spirit, such a wondrous baptism of the Holy Ghost, that a nation shall be born in a day. Instead of individual missionaries, the nation of Israel shall be a missionary nation, carrying the light of the Gospel to the ends of the earth.

"SAFE, HAPPY, THANKFUL, WAITING."

Rev. CANON FAUSSET.

Man is the creature of hope. It is as natural to man to hope as it is to dream:—

Hope springs eternal in the human breast,
Man never is but always to be blest.

It is a profound remark of Pascal's that, "Man's true discontent shows man's inherent royalty." None but a dethroned king sighs because he is not in possession of a throne. The Holy Scripture and the Lord Jesus Christ meet this want. This deep-seated inherent feeling of man's is a void which God alone can fill. The Holy Scripture tells us of a Saviour now, and one who is about to come again the second time, without sin unto a perfected salvation. Grace is glory in the bud; glory is grace fully developed.

Most of you know that book which has been blessed to many souls—only lately I heard of one whose conversion was due to it—"Grace and Truth," by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. The first time I met him was when, on this platform, he made the remark that when first the truth of the second coming of the Lord Jesus, and the glory that is to be revealed in connection with his pre-millennial advent, dawned on his soul, it was like a second conversion. There is one on this platform whom I heard at York, who said that as faith is the substantiation of things not seen, so we find hope to be the patient waiting of the soul for that which God has promised. Our part is this, to be instant in prayer for God's Holy Spirit to lead us to the promise, that we may lay fast hold of it as the anchor of the soul sure and steadfast, that enters within the veil whither our great High Priest and forerunner has already entered. A lady who was brought to find peace to her soul through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, summed up in four words, which she wrote on a post-card to a friend, her new-born experience. She wrote, "Safe, happy, thankful, waiting." This is an admirable summary of what ought to be the experience of each one of us. Safe in Christ, as sure as the word and the oath of Him who cannot lie can make us sure, if we have ventured on the promise of God. As the necessary result of safety—happiness and thankfulness; and then, as in the case of the Thessalonian Church, we turn from idols to serve the living God, and to wait for his Son Jesus Christ, whom He hath raised from the dead, and who hath delivered us from the wrath to come.

[Canon Fausset at some length expounded the thought that all that is recorded of Christ—i.e., his crucifixion, resurrection, sonship, &c.—is true of the believer. We are crucified with Christ; in Him we are raised to a new life, and are seated in heavenly places; in Him we attain to the dignity and privileges of sons. Even now we are the sons of God, but our full manifestation is yet to come. This is our hope, that, when He comes, grace will develop into glory. The Canon proceeded:] There is a generation, and there is a degeneration. Allusion has been made to the tendency to degenerate. Already there are signs, as has been observed, of the growing apostasy from light that has come into the world, but which men have rejected. That is one gloomy sign of the apostasy, but it is also a token of the coming of Jesus; for when the sky is gloomiest, then will come the burst of the dawn of day; by and by the Sun of Righteousness will shine out in his full glory. In Rev. xvi. we read of three frog-like unclean spirits coming out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. What was the first lie of the dragon Satan? "Ye shall not die." He contradicted the word of God. Already this characteristic of the age is manifesting itself in the dislike to hear anything about hell or eternal punishment, and in a disbelief of the great verities and fundamental truths of God's eternal Word. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but God's Word shall not pass away. Then, what is the evil spirit coming out of the mouth of the beast? All prophecy points to an impatience of authority, of independence of law, of autonomy, self-rule, self-will, independence of God. Surely this is the characteristic of the day—the evil spirit that comes out of the mouth of the lawless one. Lawlessness was in mystery during mediæval times. It is instructive to compare 1 Tim. iv. with 2 Tim. iii. In the former chapter we read, "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." Was not thisthe characteristic of the mediæval Church—Babylon, the apostate woman? But when you go on to the third chapter of the Second Epistle, the phraseology is changed. The word "times" appears as "days," and the word "latter" is changed into "last." "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves." Selfishness is the root of the lawlessness of the day—self-indulgence, luxury that is reckless of the rights of other men, and that seeks its own gratification, cost what it may. Then what have we for the frog-like demon out of the mouth of the false prophet? If any desire to read a work which will unfold this I would refer them to Mr. G. H. Pember's "Earth's Earliest Ages,"* where they will be instructed as to the beginnings of those miracles, those demoniacal miracles which were to be characteristic of the last ages. The Master said that Satan would perform lying wonders that would deceive, if possible, the very elect. Paul said much the same. Just as the world is becoming impatient with the rule of the Church, and is throwing off allegiance to the Church, a new spiritual power is arising that is to supersede the Church. No longer will evil be a mystery; there shall be an apocalypse of it. Blessed be God, it is for a short time, but we have to be very careful, indeed, that we have nothing to do with treading on forbidden ground. I have had correspondence with several people in London, strangers to me, and I could tell you of how this matter has been tampered with by persons who would shrink from anything like going on that forbidden ground which cost Saul his throne. He lost his throne, not merely because of his disobedience, but because he was guilty of necromancy. And what is it but necromancy, or familiarity with evil spirits, that is forbidden by God in the Pentateuch?

Blessed be God, our citizenship is in heaven, whence also we look for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour. I believe that is the true translation. Has He not already come once as the Saviour? Yes, but the salvation is not complete. It has been bought in title: all the debt has been paid, and we have salvation in one sense. In another sense we are waiting for the full manifestation, when He shall transform our vile body—no, I will not say that—but our body of humiliation. Archdeacon Whately was lying upon his deathbed, and somebody quoted this text, "He shall change our vile bodies." "No," he said, "not vile; nothing is vile that God hath made; it is a body of humiliation." It is most humiliating to think how little suffices to lay low those whom we have loved. Surely we must feel that we are now in a body of humiliation, but, blessed be God, we are looking for a body of glory. We are looking for the blessed city the inhabitants whereof shall not say, "I am sick." We have good reason to be looking for the Lord's coming. Death is carrying away our loved ones, but when Jesus comes death will do so no more; death shall be swallowed up in victory. This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immorality. Even now many dying believers have been able to gain a glorious victory over death and its power; the sting has been taken from it. A dear young woman whom I visited last year on her deathbed, was asked, "Are you resting in Jesus?" She replied in a most expressive phrase, "I put my little hand in his mighty hand, to lead me where He will. 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.'" When Jesus comes there will be no valley of the shadow of death; there will be perpetual sunshine. Then, as to knowledge. How vastly our power will be increased. We complain because our brother does not see eye to eye with us in these subjects; but it gives exercise and scope to our patience. After all, as good John Bennett said, "God has washed our hearts in the blood of Jesus, and He will wash our brains in the world to come." "Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known" (1 Cor. xiii. 12).

Then shall we see, and hear, and know
What mortals cannot learn below;
Then shall our powers find sweet employ
In Christ's eternal world of joy.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 3.

The Signs of the Times.

"Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" . . . (Matt. xvi. 3). "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" (1 Tim. iv. 1). "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come" (2 Tim. iii. 1). "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared" (Rev. xvi. 12). Luke xxi. 24, 28—31.

THE EARL CAVAN again presided. After silent prayer, fervent supplication was offered by Rev. D. B. Hankin. The hymn, "Praise God, ye seraphs bright," was sung, and 2 Peter iii. was read.

The CHAIRMAN: There are many shades of thought in reference to the coming of the Lord; what is to precede his coming, and what is not. I hope we shall all exercise mutual forbearance not only in our words, but also in our minds, seeking the teaching of the Holy Spirit. There may be a difference to-day in the views set before us; but let us remember, that though we may differ from each other we are all brethren. In the spirit of brotherly love, as members of the same blessed family, may the Lord stir us all up to be humble and subdued, to be sitting at the feet of each other to learn what the Spirit of God may acquaint us with, so that these gatherings may not only be refreshing, but that they may be stirring-up times. The subject this morning is, "Signs of the Times." We find our blessed Lord in two places uses this expression, "Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" I feel thankful that we have these gatherings, and that these subjects are put down for special discussion. One feels confident that things are working up to the closing of the present dispensation. We want to realise more our union with our risen, our ascended, and our returning Lord, so that we may be fitted for his glorious appearing. I think that one of the signs of his coming may be seen in the indifference manifested to Divine things amongst the people generally. I have spoken to some myself, and they have said: "We know Christ will come, but it won't be just yet: we hope not." They are living for the world, and their thoughts are in the world. We have it in the Scripture we have been reading: "In the last days scoffers will come, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" Then there is the infidelity which is increasing, and Popery with all its ramifications. Let us beware of these seducing spirits, which are drawing the people away from the truth as it is in Jesus.

THE APPROACHING END OF THE AGE.

MR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

It is blessed to remember and realise that we are all of one heart this day to make David King. Whatever the shades of difference between us as regards minor and secondary points, we are one in the grand and central elements, one in the grand hope, and one in the faith of Jesus Christ our Lord. I think we are learning, too, as we are getting on, more of the imperfection of our brightest and best thoughts and comprehensions of these Divine mysteries—learning the meaning of that sentence, "Now we know in part and prophesy in part." But when that which is perfect is found, that which is partial still remains. Holy Scripture itself is only a partial revelation, since an inspired Apostle said, "We prophesy in part," and spoke of that which is perfect as still to come. I think I am right also in believing that we are all desirous to make progress in the knowledge of the truth.

* Hodder & Stoughton.

We are met this morning to consider the subject of the signs of our times. Too often remarks are made on this subject which betray a want of intelligent comprehension of the nature of the signs that are, according to the Scripture, to indicate the end of the age. A careless reading of our Lord's prophetic discourse on the Mount of Olives seems to be the cause of much of this misapprehension. His prediction of wars and rumours of wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes is quoted as if these and similar things were to be signs of the end of the age. A little accurate attention to the order of his statement would show that, so far from this being the case, these are simply mentioned as the common and characteristic events of the interval prior to his coming. Wars, calamities, persecutions, apostasy, martyrdom, treachery, abounding iniquity, gospel preaching, the fall of Jerusalem, the great tribulation of Israel, which has, as we know, extended over 1800 years—all these things are to fill the interval, and not to be signs of the immediate proximity of the Second Advent. How could things of common occurrence be in themselves signs of any uncommon and unique crisis? What commoner thing all through the ages than wars and rumours of wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes? These as marking the course of the age can never indicate its close.

What, then, are the signs we should expect? Many who perceive the folly of looking at every natural calamity as a sign, go to an opposite extreme, and expect wonderful and unprecedented, supernatural and impossible signs; basing their expectations on the literal interpretation of the symbolic hieroglyphs of the Apocalypse. Such signs would be grotesque in character, and it would be insulting to human intelligence to assert that they are to be expected. There is one all-sufficient answer to this childish conception of the signs of the last days: our Lord and the Apostles alike furnish the reply. Our Lord says, "As it was in the days of Noah, so it shall be in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until that Noah entered into the Ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat and drink, bought and sold, planted and builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and it destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." The Apostle confirms this: "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord draweth near as a thief in the night. For when men shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction shall come upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape."

If any such signs as are imagined by some were to precede the Advent, a state of society as predicted here could not exist. If mysteries unheard of, supernatural, preternatural events were to transpire, would they not be telegraphed the same day all over the world, and create such a sense of alarm that buying and selling, planting and building, marrying and giving in marriage would all be arrested together; peace and safety would be far from anyone's lips and thoughts. And if any one of the Apocalyptic prophecies is to be fulfilled, all must be. Conceive a succession of such prophecies, and the world in security, if you can. No, there was nothing specially to alarm the antediluvians before Noah went into the Ark, or to alarm the men of Sodom before the fire fell upon them from heaven. As it was in the days of Noah and of Lot, so it will be in these days. No single sign shall attract the world's attention; none of the wicked shall understand the true state of affairs: only the wise and those enlightened by the word of prophecy.

It will be objected that if the signs of the times which we are expected to recognise are neither ordinary natural events nor extraordinary unnatural ones, what are they? Scripture abundantly answers this inquiry. When theories and widely differing events occur in combination, the inquiry is answered that they are special but perfectly natural events, occurring in a predicted order and at a predicted time. They are not sudden, startling, newly-produced phenomena, but definite stages in long progressive movements, whose history was written twenty-five centuries ago.

I should like to give a list of what I believe to be the chief of these signs, and I desire rather to speak suggestively than exhaustively. We have six separate and distinct sets of signs, each sufficient of itself to indicate that we are on the verge of the establishment on earth of the eternal kingdom of the Son of God, that blessed reign of righteousness and peace of which the millennial Sabbath is only the portal and the introduction. We have, first, political signs; second, ecclesiastical signs; thirdly, Jewish signs; fourthly, Mahomedan signs; fifthly, general social signs; and sixthly, chronological signs.

As to political signs, let me make a few suggestions. I met, when coming here this morning, a gentleman who has long been a Christian and student of God's Word, and a worker in the service, but who said that he had bestowed but little attention on the study of prophecy. He was here as a learner more than anything else; and there may be many such here. For such let me indicate the time we have reached in the world's history. We have now reached that period when a study of Dan. ii., especially in comparison with Dan. vii., and also with the history of the last twenty-five centuries, will be peculiarly profitable. Let me suggest that the Book of Daniel is an introduction to the Apocalypse. They are two parts of one book; they treat one subject, using the same symbols, the same hieroglyphs, dealing with the same great course of events. These two books contain a series of visions, and in them the same ground is traversed again and again.

Of all the visions contained in Daniel and John, the first is the simplest and the most comprehensive. It starts from the time of Daniel, reaches right on to eternity, and embraces the whole course of the times of the Gentiles. It is a well-known image—a fourfold image representing the course of the four great empires, those of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome. There we have the great inspired chart of Gentile history; and the use of the word "chart" reminds me of a simple illustration. It is a question of the signs of our times—the position now reached in the history of the Christian Church, and in the history of the world. Suppose you were to traverse the ocean: you have been travelling for six weeks; you have passed a certain point on your journey, but you are still right away from land. One day you hear a rumour that the ship is approaching her destination. You go to the captain, and he says, "We shall sight land at three o'clock this afternoon." You say, "Well, how do you know?" He only knows his chart. He takes it out and says, "There is the port, and there is our position." Still you ask, "How you know?" and he says, "Do you see this line traced across the ocean? That is the line of our course, that is the line we follow; here is the position that we have reached; we should sight land at three o'clock this afternoon." You want some evidence; you want to reassure yourself; you want to strengthen your expectations, and you ask him for further light. He says, "Well, the voyage runs over such and such a course, so many miles. The ship follows such a track; there it is, marked down on the chart. On the way we passed certain points, certain headlands. You remember we touched at Aden, and at Ceylon, and since leaving Ceylon we have run in such a direction. Now the distance from Ceylon, where we last touched, is so-and-so, and the distance between that and the port for which we are making is so-and-so; we have just gone that distance within twenty miles. At three o'clock this afternoon we shall make land;" and as he predicts so it comes to pass.

Now, God has been pleased in this Book to give us a chart of history: not merely past history but future history—anticipating history in prophecy. He has unfolded to us the future, and given us no uncertain or dim light upon this subject, but broad and clear light. A most important part of that light is prophecy with reference to the political world, and the history of the great Gentile powers. What a marvellous thing it is, when one really considers it, that twenty-five centuries ago, when the time of the Gentiles began, when the Jewish subjection to the Gentile power commenced, when God put down Israel on account of her sins, and set up the Gentile power, that the course of Gentile power was clearly foreseen and distinctly foretold, and laid down, and marked out, and written in God's Holy Word. It was written and rewritten—visions and clearer descriptions and multiplied predictions—and the whole thing lay bare and unfolded.

I can only add on this point of political signs that there they are—there is the predicted course. The Babylonish Empire was to rise, to reach a certain height, run a certain course, and be overthrown by the Persian Empire. The Persian Empire was to be overthrown, and to be succeeded by the Grecian; and again by the Roman Empire, which was to be first united and then divided. Comparing these Old Testament predictions with those of the New, and with history, what do we perceive? That history has run on these lines, that these events have been fulfilled, and therefore do not remain to be fulfilled. Babylon rose and perished, so did Persia, so did Greece, so did Rome Pagan and Rome Papal. All this has been accomplished, and here we are at the close of the predicted course of these four empires. We are, therefore, close to the manifestation, the unveiling, the shining forth, the glorious establishment of the Kingdom of God which shall never pass away.

A word as regards the ecclesiastical signs. The course of Gentile history is one thing; the history of the Christian Church is another. A great deal was foretold with regard to it. That Church was to grow according to prophecy. Beginning with very small things, it was to reach a wonderful extension. The Gospel was to spread. The Church was to become a great tree; the birds of the air were to come and build in the branches. Then a wonderful change was, according to the prophecy and the predictions of our Lord, and the still clearer predictions of St. Paul, to take place. Our Lord foretold the apostasy in the Church. Paul more clearly, again and again, in epistle after epistle, spoke also of the apostasy; and John foretells it with still greater detail.

Observe the bearing of this on the question of the signs of our times. Is the Church in her infancy, or has she long ago reached maturity and passed it? Have the birds of the air come and built in the branches? Especially, has the Church been in a condition of apostasy, and has there occurred in her history a great falling away from the faith, an apostasy that was foretold? I want any of those who may differ from me to bear with me if I should say anything here that does not exactly square with their ideas. It is just possible that we have not learned everything, and that there is more for us to understand upon this question. I suggest now to all of you, in holy boldness, as a brother to brethren, not keeping back anything that I believe to be profitable—I suggest that these words of Paul, in Thessalonians, "That day shall not come except there come a falling away first, an apostasy," is a most important sentence in connection with the ecclesiastical signs of our times.

You see, the subject there is ecclesiastical. It is what should take place, not in the Gentile world, but in the Christian Church. Paul was writing about the coming of the Lord, and with reference to our gathering together to meet Him. If that is not the coming of Christ for his people I do not know what is. At any rate, simple as some would make it, there must be some manifestation of the Church after it has been gathered to Christ, and after our gathering together to Him, and that sentence will remain. You may evade its force, or you may ignore its presence, but there it is; it is far better to deal honestly with the Word of God, and we are all disposed to deal honestly with it. It would be an aspersion to believe the contrary. But it is far better for us to deal critically and judicially with such sentences than to slur them over or to ignore them.

It is a question, then, of our gathering together to Him; and Paul, in speaking of this, says that it shall not come except there be a falling away first. I accept that as much as I accept any other statement made by inspiration. I am therefore forced into this position: If that predicted falling away in the Christian Church has taken place, then it does not interpose itself between us and the realisation of our blessed hope. It lies not in the future, but in the past. When you compare this remarkable prediction of the falling away that was to take place in the Christian Church, and the apostasy of the latter days—it is the same expression in Timothy as in Thessalonians—surely there is no evading the conclusion that they relate to the same thing. Now the apostasy in Timothy is described as the giving heed to seducing spirits, doctrines of devils, forbidding to marry, and abstaining from meats. Do you not recognise the thing as accomplished?

Want of time prevents even a general sketch of the signs of our times, signs really indicative of the nearness of the end; but I cannot help adding just this one thought by way of suggestion, that there is added to this declaration of the apostasy that the day shall not come except there be a falling away. There is added that very solemn declaration which the Reformers (to go back no further) recognised as fulfilled—the manifestation of the Man of Sin. I do rejoice this day that I can solemnly and sincerely, before Him who searches my heart, thankfully take this position. I have now studied history for thirty years, and I rejoice that, as I study history in the light of prophecy, and prophecy in the light of history, I can look back upon the fulfilment of this prediction, upon the occurrence of this apostasy, upon the manifestation of the expected and predicted Man of Sin, recognised by the Reformers as the ground of separation from the Church of Rome. The Church of Rome calls it "schism," but you call it Protestantism. You recognise the right to protest against these errors, and to separate from that system as not primitive Christianity, but apostate Christianity. Let us search and see. Do not let us imagine that we have reached the termination of progress in the comprehension of these great themes; but let us seek to advance, by a diligent study of God's Word and contemporaneous events and past history, in the understanding of these things.

I can only briefly refer to the remaining points. There are the Mahomedan signs. Mahomedanism is a tremendous fact and factor in the world's history, and especially in the history of Palestine, the Jewish race, and the Christian Church. In one word, it has proved to be a woe, a tremendous woe, upon the apostate Eastern Church. Of course it has been a woe upon Palestine and the Jewish people. It is remarkable how the Jews have been oppressed by the Papacy in the West and Mahomedanism in the East. Thousands of them were burned by the Popes; and in the East, Mahomedanism, which fearfully oppressed the Christian Church, oppressed also the Jewish people. It has trodden down Jerusalem, and erected the Mosque of Omar, which still occupies the site of the Temple. But, though there now, it will not, perhaps, be there very much longer. How long has that wonderful power been in existence which dominates 150,000,000 of mankind?—twelve or thirteen centuries. Our Lord foretold the fate of Jerusalem: "till the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled." And that is the power that has trodden down Jerusalem during the longest part of the interval since He spoke those words. When you contrast the present position of that power with its past; when you think of what it was in the palmy days of its pomp and its pride; when you think of what it was when it was dreaded, when men trembled at it; and when you compare it with its present position, how tremendous the contrast! Read the history of the 800 years of Turkish power, which has shed such a deluge of blood, and proved such a resistless, remorseless destroyer. Look at its present decrepitude, its ruined condition, its armies overthrown, and its treasury exhausted. It lies in helplessness, sick and perishing. Draw the inference as regards the end of the age, especially as we know that no great power of a similar character is to succeed it in the possession of Palestine, and in the treading down of the sacred city of Jerusalem.

The Jewish signs. There is a calendar—you can see it in the British Museum—"Lindow's Jewish Calendar." Glance over the statements as to the sufferings that the Jews have passed through for twenty-five centuries, but especially for the past eighteen centuries. Read their own statements, that when Zedekiah fell, in the year 587 B.C., the throne of Judah was cast down, and they themselves were carried into captivity, and they have ever since been subject to the Gentile. What has followed? The oppressions under the Babylonish captivity, their sufferings under the Greeks, their multiplied and terrific sufferings under the Romans—Titus, Vespasian and Hadrian, who finished and completed this dreadful work of destruction. Read about their deeper sufferings, their darker woes under so-called Christian hands; for, much as they have suffered from the Pagans, they have suffered infinitely more from the Christians; they have suffered longer, more multiplied, and more varied persecutions, confiscations, torments. The Romans crucified them, the Christians burned them, and they have been relentlessly pursued from land to land.

Compare their present state with their past: every yoke broken, every fetter snapped—liberty, freedom, equality, respectability, wealth, power, position, influence, members of governments, leaders in various high positions, teachers in universities, and amassing enormous wealth. What is the conclusion we are compelled to come to, but that we have reached a great period in Jewish history. Palestine is being lifted up, on the one hand; on the other hand, it seems as though Zion, long disconsolate, had shaken herself from the dust of ages, and was shaking the yoke from her, for the time of her deliverance and emancipation has come.

I cannot touch the general signs; but look at the present condition of the world, look at the progress of knowledge, the universality of science, the spread of civilisation, rapid locomotion everywhere, the fulfilment of the prediction that "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Look at the increase and spread of infidelity in the Christian Church; look at the judgments that have been executed in recent years upon the Papal power; the French Revolution, and what followed it. All these things concur to demonstrate the position we have now reached.

As regards the chronological signs, that is an immense subject in itself. Scripture contains an immense mass of chronological prophecy. Take a period of 5000 years, including the millennial age, from the days of Abraham to the days in which we live, and on to the end of the coming millennial age, whose dawn we can so clearly see and whose verge we have reached. You will find on comparing it with Scripture that there is chronological prophecy with reference not only to the larger part of that period, but nearly the whole. There is not much of it that is not covered with chronological prediction, a vast mass of chronological prophecy.

What is our position to-day as regards all these prophecies? They are nearly all fulfilled. The millennial age lies in the near future. All the rest has long gone by. If you take the trouble to examine, you will see that after the great period of twenty-five centuries there is "the Kingdom." I believe we are standing this day anti-typically where Moses stood, when his feet were planted upon Nebo's height, when the wilderness was behind him, and the land of promise was before him. The forty years of the Church's wanderings are well nigh over. We can trace, as it were, all the stages of our own wilderness experience in the past; we can look back and say, "She has come through all this." As it was foretold, so it has been fulfilled. Now, with the wilderness behind us and with Canaan before us, we can bless God, and we do bless Him, for the faithfulness with which He has preserved his people, and brought them thus far, and which is to lead them into the land of which He has spoken. Yet a little while, and the sun that is just below the horizon, brightening the east with its increasing light, its tender light; yet a little while, and that sunshine shall rise, and the Sun of Righteousness with healing in its beams will irradiate the world. Jesus shall come, and fill all hearts with his presence.

It is for us, under these circumstances, and in these days of study, amidst all the fluctuations of opinion, and the changes and transformations, and uncertainties and denials, and infidelities and apostasies, to stand firm, to be rooted, to be unmoveable, and then to be always abounding in the work of the Lord. There is an enormous amount to do, and all the more need for busyness, diligence, and laboriousness, because of the shortness of the time. Think of the souls that need to be snatched from ruin. Think of the work that wants to be done, and strive to do it. Then think of the trimming of the lamp. Pull up the wick. Add fresh oil. Gird your loins more tightly. Be ready with staff in hand, so that you may say right soon, "Lord, I have finished the work that Thou gavest me to do;" so that you may, from the depth of your heart, echo that final sentence of Scripture with profoundest meaning, "Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly."

PRESENT DAY SIGNS.

Dr. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON.

I stand on this platform to-day with a singular feeling of diffidence. I am a learner—not a teacher in prophetic truth. When my friend, Mr. Denham Smith, spoke yesterday of fifty years' study of the subject, and I remembered then, as I remember now, that only five years ago I was utterly ignorant of the subject, I felt in sympathy with Paul's words as I never felt before—"As one born out of due time." Nevertheless, the lateness in life which brought me to the study of Scripture left me free from prejudice. I knew, as every theologian does, that there have been different interpretations of prophetic truth. I knew the views of the Preterists, the Futurists, and the Historians, and I was not prejudiced in favour of any of them. I need hardly say I soon discovered that the Preterists had nothing to say, and quickly that the Historians had a great deal to say, for themselves. I do sympathise very strongly with the great men of the seventeenth century who said that the Pope was the Man of Sin. I have subscribed with my own hand to a creed in which he is called Antichrist, and he was the only Antichrist up to that date. There were many, but he was the chief one, the one in whom all previous ones had been realised, the one who had persecuted the Church of God, and who had led a very great apostasy from the faith. I cannot forget the testimony raised at that time against the system of error which had overspread the whole of Christendom, so that, to the end of my days, I must have sympathy with the historical interpretations.

But they do not go far enough. I listened to Mr. Guinness, and if I comprehended his argument, and it was a telling one, in regard to that passage from Thessalonians, it amounted to this: These people who were waiting for the coming of the Lord could never have expected it until the apostasy had been fulfilled; that is, until 600 years or later; but now you can expect it at any moment, since the apostasy has come. Why, the early Christians were expecting it every day, long before the apostasy. They were expecting it in the Apostle Paul's time, and right on all these 600 years—expecting that it might come at any time, not being able to tell the day or the hour. There was a greater apostasy than even the popish apostasy when the whole of Christendom became apostate, and Athanasius stood alone against it. We cannot write it off in that way by talking about errors and heresies in the Church, and recognising them as apostasies. The apostasy is to be an apostasy from the faith, a denial of the existence of God, a setting up a man as God upon the earth, and claiming worship for the human that is due only to the Divine. I shall recognise this when the Antichrist assumes to be God, and sets himself up for worship, which the Pope never did. He claims Divine honour as Christ's vicar and representative, but he has never claimed to be God. That claim has yet to be made.

I was interested in listening to the founding of all this prophetic truth on the second and seventh chapters of Daniel. I found it on the second and seventh of Daniel no less, but I stand here and read about the gold, the silver, the brass, the iron, and the clay, and I missed that from Mr. Guinness's statement. I think as wonderful as the foretelling of the coming of the different empires in succession, is the manifestation of the human sovereignty on earth in these different forms: in the gold form, when Nebuchadnezzar was autocrat; whom he willed he put to death, and whom he would he kept alive. Then next you have the silver, in the case of the Persian Empire, where there was aristocracy of birth. In brass you have the aristocracy of talent, and particularly of the military talent. In the iron you have the Roman Empire with all its tremendous power. Now we have come to the mixture of the iron and the clay—the infidel democracy. I have not a word to say against Republicanism or Liberalism, but we have coming in the near future a democracy of an infidel kind, and the people claiming to set their will up, not against the nobles or the king, but against the Lord. Vox populi vox Dei—that is the motto of the present day; when people say they have a right to take other people's property if the majority should say they can claim it, and no one hinders. You will find the saviour of society to be the Antichrist, coming forward to deliver men from this trouble, and holding the reins of government with a firm hand.

There are other signs of the times. I was greatly interested in the letter written by our esteemed and venerable friend, Dr. Bonar, read yesterday. As I heard it, I said, "That is my text: I cannot ask a better." There are one or two sentences in it which I wish to emphasise. (The speaker here read the greater part of the letter as given on a preceding page.) Mark those last words (said Dr. Paterson), "making all human rule impossible." Government is of God. It is a Divine ordinance. When it ceased to be Theocratic, God gave it over to the Gentiles, and it has passed through all the forms which experiement has made in ruling men; and every method from the gold down to the iron has failed. It is more egregiously to fail when it becomes mixed—when the iron and the clay are together. When the image formed of the iron and the clay is seen on the earth, the stone is to be cut out of the mountain without hands and to dash the whole image to pieces. Power in all its forms is to be destroyed, that Christ may be all in all. Then the righteous King will come, and the long-wished-for peace resulting from righteous government will be enjoyed on the earth.

Would to God I could think we were as near the millennium as my dear friend does. It would be a comfort to me and to thousands, if we could think that we were just on its dawn. On its dawn! Why the apostasy is just beginning, and it is taking very marked forms. I hold in my hand a letter that appeared in The Times a few years ago, and I will read you a sentence from it:—"Whoever adopts and practises the principle of self-sacrifice for the good of others is in my view a living Christian, whatever he may think on any point in so-called dogmatic theology." Further the writer says, "The Trinitarian and the Unitarian are both Christians." And the distinguished preacher who wrote that letter was Chairman of the Congregational Union two or three years after writing it! What do you think of that? I will not go further back than quite recently. A bishop was appointed to Japan, and I read in last week's English Churchman that he said, "Perhaps this may be the means of furthering the reunion of Christendom, the English Church stretching out as it did a hand to both Protestantism and the Roman Church." What do you think of that?

There are many other signs of the times of like import. In the seventeenth century we had the great creed-making age, when men examined the Scriptures and sought to formulate what God taught both for faith and duty. Towards the close of last century we had another creed-making time, but of a different character. In the first creed God was the centre; everything was referred to God, and God's sovereignty was set out distinctly. But in this latter creed they have made Christ the centre to the exclusion of God. Afterwards they laid stress on his humanity rather than on his divinity, until men, beginning from that, believed that Christ had only the knowledge other men had who were living in Judea in his own day. One writer within the last two years has dared to publish it in this city that the Lord Jesus was withholding his mercy from the Gentiles until he was taught by a heathen woman that He ought to shew mercy to them as well as to the Jews. In this present day we have another theology, in which man is made the centre, and everything takes its measure from him. I was taught when a boy to say that "Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy Him for ever." But the teaching of the present day is, "God's chief end is to glorify man, and to enjoy him for ever." That is why people say there is no everlasting punishment, and that we are able to work out our own salvation without atonement; why they are speaking against the "blood theology," and setting aside the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ; man is his own saviour, and God is bound to do everything for man, and man is under no obligation to God. You will probably find that doctrine more and more developed as time goes on.

I find that the Word of God is being set aside. There has been a dispute between two great men in the monthly magazine, The Nineteenth Century. Mr. Gladstone maintains that the first chapter of Genesis gives a true scientific account of the creation, and Professor Huxley denies it. Well, I do not think that the first chapter of Genesis gives a scientific account of the creation, but it gives a true account, and that is the main point. We do not contend for science, but we contend for facts. Is Gen. i. true to the facts, or is it not? I would venture to discuss it with Prof. Huxley, and maintain to his face that there is nothing known to science to contradict Gen. i. There is plenty known to speculation, but nothing known to science. It would seem as if neither the great statesman nor the great scientist dreamt for a moment of the possibility of the first chapter of Genesis being true. They are sure that man's thoughts are true, but they are not sure that God's acts are true. They are sure man's science (which, after all, is man blundering in reading out what God has done) is more correct than God's statement of his own working. The question ought to be in regard to the inspiration of the Book. Let them settle that. It is not a question with regard to man's finding; for if man found out anything just now that contradicted Genesis, it would be contradicted by man's findings-out in the twentieth century, if ever that century comes. Man's science is progressive. Prof. Huxley himself, in unveiling the Darwin statue, said; "If science writes a creed, it commits suicide." Yet he brings science into the witness-box against God's Word.

But that tendency to set aside this Book, and to prefer any thinkings of man in any direction, and to admit that this Book proves it when they think it should be received as true, is one noteworthy sign of these times—one that we cannot afford to ignore. There are a hundred signs of the times, and I would close by indicating that wherever we look there are signs of this great falling away. I do not think any more definite sign is given than in that prophecy in the letter to Timothy about giving heed to the seducing doctrines of spirits, and doctrines of demons speaking lies in hypocrisy, commanding to abstain from meats and forbidding to marry. I do not know that there is a larger sect in the world than the Buddhists; they are making additions to their number from England and America, and they will soon join hands with the spiritualists, who are in a very marked degree in harmony with the Buddhists. They command to abstain from meats and forbid to marry, and give heed to the doctrines of demons and listen to the seducing doctrines of spirits. When spiritualism first appeared, almost all the spirits evoked expressed their honour and respect for Jesus Christ. They do not do it to-day. It was their policy then. At one time I did not believe spirits came to answer questions. I found nothing but trickery in it so far as I am concerned. I went to its headquarters in London, and sat patiently in the dark for two hours, and heard and saw nothing during that time that could not be done by any clever trickster who had ordinary skill in magic. But there are things that we read of that are beyond the trickster's art. There are evidences that the spirits of evil can come into communication with men; they have been doing that since the Fall, and even before it. They are coming in another fashion, because we are told that the spirits of devils working miracles are to go forth into the kingdoms of the earth, and the devil himself is to come down having great wrath because he knoweth that his time is short. This great delusion which, I believe, is the delusion of Satan, will spread more and more. There are millions already, both in America and in this country. I have in my hand a dozen or more different periodicals, all devoted to the spread of spiritualism, and they would not be printed if they were not sold, read, and studied. So we have all the elements in the present time pressing upon us now, foretold in Scripture of the last time, the perilous times, the times when we need to be most on our guard.

My objection to prophecy and the study of it was mainly that it was not practical, and I had not time for anything that was not practical. I discovered, not by looking into God's Word (more shame to me), but by looking at the signs of the times, the peril in which we are, and when I spoke of it to a brother, he said, "All that is in Scripture." I could not believe it, until he showed it to me; then I discovered that prophecy is practical ethics, that it is intended to make us wise to abstain from evil and do good, and intended to guide us in perilous and dark times, that we may serve the Lord with both hands earnestly.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The Coming of the Lord—Personal, not Spiritual.

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven" (Acts i. 11). "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God" (1 Thess. iv. 16). "His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives" (Zech. xiv. 4). "And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom He raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come" (1 Thess. i. 10).

The hall was crowded, and the audience seemed to be deeply interested by the addresses. After the singing of a hymn, prayer was offered by Dr. McKilliam. Mr. G. H. Pember (Chairman) read from John xvi., beginning at the twelfth verse.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

Our subject this evening is "The Coming of the Lord—Personal, not Spiritual." The evidence of this great truth will doubtless be set before you by those who are to speak upon it; I wish, therefore, to assume it for the nonce, and to confine myself to a few remarks upon the effects of that personal coming, both upon believers and upon the world, as indicated by our Lord Himself. We are not going to deal this evening with his spiritual presence, whereby we are kept alive in the faith, and are knit together in one body in Him. We do not disparage that wondrous gift; we recognise its preciousness; we hang upon his promise: "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." Our hearts are ravished when we remember it is said of Him, "Jesus, having loved his own, which were in the world, He loved them to the end." But that presence whereby we are upheld; that love which, spite of our many failures and shortcomings, will not leave us, nor forsake us, and which even in our backslidings will still continue to gaze tenderly upon us until the tears of penitence dim our eyes, and will then restore our souls and lead us in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake—that presence is not so much a hope; it is a present possession. If we are only careful to walk in the light as He is in the light, it ought to be a matter of daily enjoyment and experience. Without the assurance of that presence no believer should dare to put one foot before another. Many times in the day from every servant of the Lord should the petition ascend, "If thy presence go not with me, carry me not up hence."

It is not to that blessed influence that attention is to be directed, but to the personal, bodily, and visible appearing of the Lord—Him whom our soul loves; of his return again to his people in like manner as he was taken up from among them. Already his disciples have had some experience of what it is to dwell with his bodily presence in the midst of them. It is true it was in the time of his humiliation, in the day of his weakness; but yet, even then, whatever He might have to endure Himself, He would suffer neither harm nor evil to come upon his friends. You know that, during the whole time of his life, whenever anything was approaching them, his protecting shield was interposed; no missile of sin or death could injure them, and, if an arrow did pass into the flesh, his skilful hand quickly removed it, and the wound closed at his touch. Very significant is his last word in regard to his disciples, just as He was resigning Himself into the hands of his murderers; it was, "Let these go their way," and so He saved the eleven from the fate that was impending over Himself. But with the ascension of the Lord's body to heaven their immunity from tribulation ceased. The bridegroom had been taken away, and no longer would the children of the bridechamber of necessity rejoice. And yet it was expedient that He should go away, expedient both for them and for us; He himself said so. He had finished the work the Father gave Him to do; He had fulfilled the law in our stead; He had paid the price of redemption with his own blood; justification was an accomplished fact to all those who were willing to believe on Him. But the justified must also be sanctified, and to effect that object a very different process was required. Suffering, which, so long as atonement was being worked out, affected only the Saviour, must now fall upon the saved, and the Holy Spirit, who could not be given until Jesus had been glorified, must come and must perform his own peculiar work.

Accordingly Christ left the world, and immediately the children of the bridechamber began to fast. Nor will the days of their mourning be ended until they see Him again, and by the light of his countenance He changes the shadow of death into the morning. While He was yet with them in mortal flesh, He spoke often of this little time during which He must be absent from them, during which they must suffer tribulation in the world, until they should see Him again. How tenderly He warned them, "The day will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye shall not see it." His disciples who heard these words probably understood them much better than we can. Experience had taught them. When the Lord's people can look upon Him face to face, it is not only grace and strength to endure that He gives. He utters the word of power, and the restless fever departs; He commands, and the slave of tormenting demons is free; He lifts up his omnipotent hand, and the furious billow, which is beating the ship to pieces and pitilessly sweeping the deck, falls back abashed. He speaks as He stands with tear-stained face, the central figure of a weeping crowd; without a moment's delay, wrenched from the grasp of the king of terrors, brought up from the depths of Hades, the beloved lost one appears in the light.

Some time ago we used to hear exaggerated stories about the upas tree. We were told of valleys in which it grew, and where it was surrounded by the skeletons of those who had come within the circle of its fatal power. But the Lord Jesus in his bodily presence is like a tree of life; yea, He is like that water which shall hereafter flow from Jerusalem, and of which the prophet Ezekiel gives the glorious description: "Everything shall live whither the river cometh." And not only is our Lord life to us, but He is the light of life to us too. Now that He is with us in spiritual presence only He is the light of our spirits, and thereby strengthens us to overcome temptation and to endure the trials of life; but when He approaches to us in bodily presence He will remove all those trials away, and from that time neither sorrow nor gloom shall assail us—no, not even through the medium of our bodies or of any materialistic surroundings.

We may thus form some conception of what the Lord meant when He told them that they should desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man. In this large assembly surely there must be many who have known such an experience! When we have been gazing on the pale face of a dear sufferer, have we never, when the lights are being kindled, and when we are looking forward to dark and restless hours of pain which we can do little to relieve; or at the earliest dawn, when the solemn stillness begins to be broken by an occasional weird sound, and when the dying eyes slowly turn to the casement and behold only a glimmering square—have we not at such times longed that there were One on earth to whom we could send the trustful message, "He whom Thou lovest is sick."

Perhaps some of us have passed through still more painful experiences. Have we ever had to look on helplessly while the mind of a beloved one was becoming more and more distraught—a malady far worse than the decay of body; while rest was giving place to unrest, order to disorder, and love to suspicion, and hatred, and a malignancy which we are sure did not come from the spirit of the poor sufferer? If we have passed through such times, have not our souls yearned for an opportunity of casting ourselves at Jesus' feet? Have we not thought that we would follow Him, regardless of what his disciples or the crowd might say, until at last He turned, as we knew He would, and flooded our hearts with joy with his sweet words: "Be it unto thee even as thou wilt." Perhaps it has been within the experience of some of us to be ourselves worn down by years of disease; to lie a weak cripple or sightless for many days upon a bed of weariness, counting the monotonous hours as they roll by, and tempted sometimes, perhaps, to forget the greater sufferings of our Saviour God; tempted, perhaps, to murmur, to ask ourselves what is the end of life, to reject the noble thought of the blind poet—

> They also serve who only stand and wait.

If we have had such an experience, how would our hearts have leapt within us could we have heard glad voices in the street without, crying, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." Ah, yes, there are times of perplexity, of heaviness, and of the shadow of death; seasons of bereavement, of loss, and of broken hopes, when everyone who believes what is revealed of the Son of Man must desire to see one of his days.

And if there should be no special pressure upon ourselves or upon others; if we should even be beginning to feel content, too content, with the present life; in such a case will not one glance at the poor, sin-stricken, impure, demon-driven, famishing, and anguished world around us scatter every selfish thought, and make us to cry without ceasing, "Lord Jesus, come quickly." For until He come in bodily form the tide of human misery must still flow on, in spite of every effort to check it. The corruption of all flesh must go on—ay, and even innocence be cast alive into the seething pit, a sacrifice to unnatural desire and greed of gain. Acts of Parliament cannot stop this plague in its maddening career; governments cannot put it down. We have recently had some cause to remember the words of the Latin satirist, "Who is to watch the watchers themselves?" Philanthropists, Christian or otherwise, cannot make head against it. I do not disparage their energies if they are put forth in a right spirit; they may do blessed work. But it will only be by plucking brands out of the burning; the great conflagration they can never overpower. No, the doom of this world has been pronounced, and we seem to see the sentence beginning to be carried out before our very eyes. Its inhabitants will not retain God in their hearts; therefore it must be again as it was in the days of Noah, and in the days of Lot. All flesh must become corrupt before God; the earth must be filled with violence and bloodshed, and there is but one hope, and one only—the coming of the Son of Man. Why does not the Church raise one universal cry for his coming? Our world is being deluged by the armies from the pit, and there is only one possible Deliverer—He who will presently take to Himself his great power to reign, and destroy those who corrupt the earth.

I will speak of but one other of the many evils on earth. How is this mystery of lawlessness?—we used to be satisfied with calling it "the mystery of iniquity," but that was when it was not understood; we are beginning to know what it means, and what is the result, and we are driven upon a more literal translation: the mystery of lawlessness—how it is developing, and beginning to break forth into view on the right hand and on the left; to be no longer a mystery! Long has authority been vacillating, and it seems to be gradually yielding its place to anarchy. Those awful words, "I will overturn," seem to be finding what will probably be their last fulfilment. Will any of the schemes that are put before us be able to restore social order, and to bring back to us the blessings of firm and stable government? There is little hope of such a result. The sceptre is trembling in the hands of the ruler all over the world. On every side we see men self-willed, determined to have their own way. Order seems to be now impracticable.

Consider for one moment the popular creed of the day. Does it not teach that a man may do whatsoever he will—that he may change times, and laws, and the arrangements of the Lord God Almighty? Does it not teach us that the majority among fallen men must have their way, even though their hearts be set upon unrighteousness? Does it not teach that towards the great God who made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters, man may pose as he pleases, and is not to be deprived of a single privilege, even though he dares to defy and insult the Lord God Almighty his Maker?

We heard a deal about lawlessness this morning; I shall trouble you with but two remarks. The first part of it makes us understand what our God meant when, 2500 years ago, He told us by the pen of Daniel that the last great rebel should worship the god of forces. And as to the latter part of it, such a creed is already, as you heard this morning, pure humanitarianism. Of course the logical result must follow. It has already followed in the abstract worship of humanity. Soon the corollary will appear. Under the influence of these modern teachings, society, which a little before was comparatively calm and still, is now heaving and tossing, and threatening every moment to break up into wild waves out of which there shall presently emerge, at the bidding of the dragon, that awful being, that world deceiver, that man who shall receive the worship of a doomed world—the Christ of Satan.

In such a case what consolation can we have; whither must we turn for help? Who is able to confront this Leviathan of the world's lawlessness, and to give him that double bridle? One, and One only—He whose right it is to reign. "The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves. The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea." He who has gone into a far country to receive for Himself the sovereignty must return to take it; then at last peace and righteousness will follow in his train—He whose approach to our benighted earth will be as the morning, when the sun is risen, as a morning without clouds; He whose presence will clothe the sad earth with joy, even as the verdure that springs out of her bosom from the clear shining after rain; He at the light of whose countenance not only his saints and all they that fear God, both great and small, shall rejoice, but even the sick and groaning creation shall be loosed from her bonds; her restless fever shall be rebuked, and shall flee away; the whole earth shall be quiet and at rest, and break forth into singing. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

CHRIST'S PERSONAL RETURN.

Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON.

We have a certain number of texts given to us in connection with our subject, which seem to me to be most admirably chosen. Said the angels, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven" (Acts i. 11). I never could understand how any honest reader could interpret that verse in any other sense than as a distinct promise of a personal coming of our Lord. "This same Jesus," who had shortly before eaten with his disciples, and with whom they had just before conversed, would come again.

Again, in that marvellous programme which is given in 1 Thess. iv. of the Lord's Second Coming—what can that mean if He is not to come personally? Just as the archangel, and voice of the archangel, is to be heard, and is to be an actual voice which will be actually heard by the people of God as they are called by it to arise from their graves, so also, clearly, is to be the personal coming of the Lord. "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives" (Zech. xiv. 4). God grant that the day there mentioned may be our day—the glorious day when every eye shall see Him. What joy for the children of God! The locality itself is fixed upon our attention, when the Lord shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, that mount which so often witnessed his prayers, his meditations, and his sorrows; the scene of his glorious triumph.

To these passages I venture to add two more: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day" (2 Tim. iv. 8). What day is that? "That day," throughout the whole of the New Testament, is that day towards which the whole world has been hastening from the first hour of its creation—that day when Christ shall come and claim his own. But what else? "And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." That is because they are Christ's, and the whole of their hope is fixed upon his appearing. I turn to my Greek Concordance, and I find the word is Epiphania. It is used six times in the New Testament, and every time it refers to the Second Coming of our Lord. Each of the passages is so clear, that there is no doubt about it. Now we speak of the Epiphany of Christ; that is, when He came in person the first time. And the same word which we have taken for it is used in the New Testament, not to refer to that, but to the time when He shall appear again in triumph.

"And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. ix. 27, 28). "Appear the second time." The first time it was a personal appearing, and it will be a personal appearing the second time. The first time it was with sin, for the purpose of taking it away; but the second time it is to be without sin, unto the fulfilment of the complete salvation of his people and his Church. Who dare have written this much but an inspired writer? "Them that look for Him." "Wait" is the word in the Revised Version. I never wait for anybody in my house if he is there; but when friends are coming, I sometimes have to wait for them, and look out of the window to see if they are coming. Christ is now with us. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He is here in our very midst to-night by the power of his Spirit. What, then, should I wait for, if his coming is to be only a spiritual presence? He is here spiritually now, teaching us to look for and wait for that glorious moment when He shall come again, and we shall see Him as He is.

And so I see that this personal coming is very dear to the children of God, because all their affections are centred around the person of Christ. I believe that as we go on in the Christian life; as the Holy Spirit of God teaches us, more and more of our religious ideas fall off, until we come to cling closer to the person of Jesus. As it is the person of Jesus on whom all our hopes are fixed, who is our Lord and friend on earth, so our longing is ever for his personal coming. Not long ago I received a lesson about this. Just two days before her death I was seeing an aged saint of God. I spoke of those whom we had known at other times and in another place, and I said, "You will soon see so-and-so and so-and-so." The dying woman replied, "I think not of them now; I only think of seeing Jesus." I felt rebuked; I believe we think too little of the coming of Jesus—of that coming when He shall take to Himself his kingdom, and shall rule and reign amongst us.

He is coming to triumph over his enemies. How long has Christ been insulted! There is no one who is so insulted on this earth as Jesus. He is insulted amongst the heathen, who care not for Him; amongst the Mohamedans, although theirs is a creed that should have some respect, at least, for his name. He is insulted amongst nominal Christians, many of whom know nothing about Him, and whilst they claim the name of Christ turn their backs upon Him. He is insulted, in tones that are growing louder and louder, by infidels in our day. The clamour against my Master will probably be louder and deeper still, and when will be the end? The end is when He will come and take to Himself His kingdom, and triumph over them; then there shall be a reversal of all this insult in the mighty triumph, when every eye shall see Him, and those who would not have Him to rule over them shall be brought to Him and cast out.

He is coming also for his own people. Remember, the Lord Jesus Christ is with us in his spiritual presence, and knows all our sorrows, and we love to think of it. When all things seem to go against us—some struggling for a living, and finding it hard to get it; some struggling against temptations, and finding them very bitter; some sorrowing in the sorrows of others, trying to help them; some struggling hard in work for Christ, and feeling very weary, as the sun beats down upon them, and they are tired; but they struggle on—then the Master will come into the harvest field and say: "The day's work is over; come, my child, the struggle is at an end; come to the marriage feast, the joyous feast, and you shall struggle no more."

He is coming to give us work. Thank God, we shall work then for Christ, and serve Him fully. How? With disembodied spirits? I think not. I believe that the body shall rise again, and that Christ in his body shall appear. These bodies have not done much for Christ, perhaps, now. They are often hindrances; but God has made our bodies, and I do not believe in disparaging anything that He has made, or looking upon it as an enemy. That is not Bible teaching. The Bible says the body is to be glorified, sanctified, and to be the means, at some time or other, of serving Him perfectly. And He is coming that it shall be so. These bodies, that sometimes now torment us, shall then be used for the Master's service. Look at your members, and remember that they shall all be sanctified when He comes, and use them for his sake.

He is coming to rule the world. It is Christ's world. I know that He speaks of Satan upon three occasions as the prince of this world. He is the prince of this world, but Christ is coming to overturn him. Christ does not rule fully in this world now. I know that Satan cannot go further than Christ lets him; thank God for that. But the time is coming when Christ shall rule in every part of the world, over everyone in it. This world is made for Him and for his glory, and if it is only a spiritual coming, what will be thought of the sign about which Isaiah seems to revel in singing and speaking, when Christ shall reign, and all shall know Him, from the least even to the greatest?

What do I gather, then, about this personal coming. First, that it has been the hope of the Church at all times. I believe that you may distinctly mark upon the page of the history of the Church of Christ the times of true revival, by this expectation of the personal coming of Christ. The bright times in the history of the Church, all these 1800 years, have been those times when they have been looking for the Lord's Second Coming. Amidst all the darkness, sadness, and frightful depression now, perhaps more spiritual than commercial, there is one glorious outlook—the children of God are awaking to the fact, and looking for the Lord's personal coming. It sets us to work and keeps us at work. There are two parables that bear on this subject, the parable of the pounds and the parable of the talents. The Master gives the pounds and the talents to be used, and He is coming to see what we have done with them. What are you doing with your pounds or your talents? If you have one pound, take heed you do not bury your Lord's money, whether it be time, or whatever He has given you, for He is coming to take account. No drop of cold water given in the name of Christ shall be without its reward, for He is coming, and all these things shall be brought to remembrance.

What do I find as to the principles that should guide us when we approach this subject? First, the Bible is a book written not to deceive us but to teach us. No book ever written is so deceptive as this if the Lord's coming is not personal. I dare not preach another sermon from the Bible if I did not think it meant what it said. "And if I go away I will come again, that I may receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Then I find that the Bible rings out a clear note upon this subject. There is much, I acknowledge, that is purposely obscure and difficult, until it will be gradually revealed as it is fulfilled; but this comes out as clear as that He came once to bear the sins of many, that He is coming again to gather them all to Himself and to bring his reward with Him. The Church of Christ must keep her eye fixed upon this as her great hope; not that we should expect gradually to convert the world. I do not believe that can be accomplished till He come.

The waiting seems sometimes very long. People pass by, some to their pleasure, some to their sin, and some to their business; they care not for Him for whom we are waiting. But we still keep our longing eyes watching for his return. Let us keep that hope bright: it will keep us warm when the world seems cold; it will sustain us when very weary; it will brighten us when we are cast down. The trumpet shall sound, and He shall come with a shout and with the voice of the archangel; and so shall we be ever with the Lord.

MILK FOR BABES.

Rev. JOHN WILKINSON.

My heart is drawn out to-night specially to speak on the Personal Advent of our Blessed Lord, in the interests of those who have never yet seen that doctrine of Scripture. We are always ready to move on, and look out for truth in advance of all that we have already reached, and to give food to the most advanced Christians in the study of the Word of God. While that is exceedingly valuable, we are in danger of leaving a number of uninstructed brethren behind. In the advanced aspects of this truth I know personally many dear Christians in this neighbourhood to whom we talk almost in an unknown tongue; and yet several of them are here to-night.

We have the beautiful words that are on our programme, and that have been referred to by Mr. Lillingston, the passage in John xiv.—"Again I come:" not simply "I will come," but "I am coming." The true idea is that Christ is speaking to a suffering, fighting, working Church. "I am coming." Just as a mother, hearing her child in trouble and crying, says, "I am coming," so our Master wishes us ever to be within the sound of his voice; He wants to cheer us all along the way, until He comes actually for our deliverance and full salvation. The passage in Zech. xiv. is a Jewish aspect of the Lord's coming: "The Lord shall come with ten thousands of His saints." The saints have been already caught up to meet Him in the air.

We want to know the manner of the Lord's coming, and the time. As to the manner of his coming: it is not to destroy Jerusalem. Turn to Luke xxi. 20: "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled." There you have the destruction of Jerusalem, but no coming of Christ; yet we hear it stated that Christ came to destroy Jerusalem. We have run on in thought to the close of the times of the Gentiles, and whatever date we start from we are certainly drawing near (without hinting the year) the close of these times. The signs of the times in reference to the state of the Jews throughout the world, and their expectation of near restoration, confirm this thought, that we are near the close of the times of the Gentiles. What occurs then? "There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars: upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." I think that is the national redemption of the Jews.

Another point—Christ's coming is not death. I ask those Christians here, who do not yet see the Scripturalness of the Lord's Second Advent before the millennial era: Have you never heard a sermon in which your minister pointed out that you were to be ready for the coming of the Lord—that is, death. It is not death. We have one passage that seems to have been written on purpose that, if Christians knew it and understood it, they need never have fallen into that error. John xxi. 18—19: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. This spake He, signifying by what death he should glorify God." Peter would never have known he would have to die before the Lord returned, if he had not been told. The Apostles were waiting as we are. They were inspired as to the fact, but not as to the time of his coming. They were inspired in the interests of others and not for themselves only, and so it was their hope as ours. Peter was told on the highest authority that he would die, and by his death glorify God. Then Peter says in effect, "Since you have told me of my destiny, what will become of John?" "Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." Evidently, then, when the disciples were under the immediate instruction of the Lord Himself, they had no idea that death and the coming of the Lord were one and the same thing, since there was a possibility that John might be alive at the Lord's return. Here, then, we find a plain passage of Scripture, pointing out that death and the coming of the Lord are not one and the same thing.

Death is a heavenly telegram, so to speak. Have we never known a missionary going abroad to his sphere of work, engaged to be married, but the marriage is postponed to a more convenient time? We have known missionaries' wives going out to the missionaries, and others are fetched by the missionaries. We believe that brides would, in all cases, rather be fetched than that they should go out alone to the missionary. Death is a telegram to call us to Him; but by and by He comes Himself to fetch the Bride. He not only comes bodily and visibly, but He comes to the same place where his foot last touched earth when He left it 1800 years ago, and will first touch earth on his return to the earth, though not to his saints; but when He returns with his saints to the earth He will take take up the thread broken 1800 years ago, and bless the world from that centre of the world.

There is no real difference, then, as to manner, but there is a difference as to time. We wish to approach those who have not yet seen the Scripturalness of the Lord's Advent lovingly. We would a thousand times rather love you into truth, than lecture you out of error. The coming of the Lord as held by you, and by us, is not a distinction in principle; it is only a difference in point of time. Every Christian believes that the Lord Jesus will come back again, literally, bodily, and visibly. Some Christians, and we amongst them, believe that the return will be before the millennium. We all believe in the millennium who believe our Bibles, and all believe in the literal advent of the Lord Jesus Christ.

You who have, perhaps, come out of curiosity—you believe the Lord will come again in person. When? To seat Himself on the great white throne at the Day of Judgment at the close of the millennial era, after, by Gospel effort at home, and missionary effort abroad, the world has been won to Christ; the affairs of the universe are to be wound up by the personal return of the Lord Jesus Christ, seated on the great white throne. So the difference is narrowed between us; you believe in a personal advent, as we do; the question between us is: Is it pre-millennial, or post-millennial? If we can settle that clearly, if we prove that it is pre-millennial, then you will have no difficulty about a personal advent of the Lord any more than you have about a personal advent of the Lord at the close of the millennial era on the great white throne.

Notice three Scriptural landmarks that help to settle the question. First, we are all agreed that war is to cease during the millennial era. In Micah iv. 2, we read of men beating their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation not lifting up sword against nation, neither learning the art of war any more. When will that take place? Before the millennium. But when our Lord returns to this earth, even after He has taken the Church to meet Him in the air, and brings the Church down again with Him, He finds the nations gathered to Jerusalem to battle; there they are in deadly conflict (Zech. xiv.). He said distinctly: "I came not to bring peace on the earth, but a sword." And we have the sword, freely practised by Christian nations, who are, in fact, the best fighters under the sun. They will take heathen or Mohammedan six to one, by reason of their superior skill in the art of killing people. We are sorry for it, but nevertheless it is true. Our Lord comes again as the Prince of Peace, to hush a warring world, and when He arrives He finds all the nations fighting. If there is to be no peace until He returns, His personal return must be before the millennium.

You believe in Antichrist; you believe in some principle or person, or a principle headed up into a person: you believe there is some Antichristian power to rage at the end of the dispensation. Do you believe there will be a millennium with an Antichrist living all through it? I am inclined to believe that as we have God on the one side and Satan on the other, and God is incarnated in the person of Christ, so we shall have a man energised by Satan—an incarnation of Satan, as it were. We all believe that an Antichrist is to appear. When is he to be destroyed? Surely it is before the millennium; and he is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. Then his coming must be pre-millennial, unless Antichrist is to live all through the millennium.

A third landmark. I suppose all the different schools of thought believe that the Jews will be converted at some time. When are they to be converted? Have you not in your hymn-book a hymn:—

Lo! He comes with clouds descending,
Once for favoured sinners slain!
Thousand, thousand saints attending,
Swell the triumph of his train;
Hallelujah!
Jesus comes on earth to reign!

You all sing it; what beside?

Zion's sons! awake; behold Him
Clothed in dreadful majesty;
Ye who set at nought and sold Him,
Pierc'd, and nail'd Him to the tree,
Deeply wailing,
Shall their true Messiah see!

Surely as the Jews are to be an instrument of blessing to the whole world, and God is going to make them a nation of missionaries during the millennium blessedness and glory—surely at the end of the millennium the Jews will not be wailing. It has been said that there is a great deal of wise theology in prepositions. "They shall look on Him whom they have pierced," not to Him; so the conversion of the Jewish nation is to take place—how? By the sight of the Lord Himself. So the coming of Christ for the conversion of the Jewish nation, and the destruction of the Antichrist, and putting an end to war, all show that the coming of our Lord is personal and pre-millennial.

The distinction between the Church and the world has no meaning except in this dispensation. If the appliances we have now at home and abroad were intended to convert the world before the millennium, the world would become the Church and the Church the world. The distinctions between the Church and the world, though we try to obliterate them, are quite clear in the Lord's mind. The Church and the world have meaning only in this dispensation; it closes by taking the Church out of the world. Then we have the world filled in millennial days with the blessings of the Gospel of Christ. We must not speak about this as the Gospel dispensation in contradistinction to the millennial glory. The thousand years will be a Gospel dispensation as much as this is. I suppose we have a good many Calvinists and Arminians here; I do not want that we should quarrel. I believe that the special aspect of Calvinism is in this dispensation, and our Arminian friends will find themselves at home in the millennium. Do not let us quarrel by the way. There is Arminianism in the Bible and Calvinism too, and God will justify both; it will not do for us to knock our heads together on these subjects.

I would, in conclusion, ask you affectionately—for it is a burden on my heart which I am willing to bear, for this may be our last Second Advent Conference until we hold the conference in his presence—I would ask you affectionately: Are you using your time, your influence, your talents for the Lord? Would your balance at the bankers be what it is if you knew He were coming to-morrow morning? Are you employing the gifts He has bestowed upon you as you would employ them if you knew He were coming soon? Oh, that these things may not be a mere theory with us! Our Lord is coming again, and we shall soon gaze upon his beautiful face, and be changed into his glorious image, and be for ever like Him. I want you to bear Israel on your hearts. Will you pray for the blessing of God on missions to his ancient people? God is arousing the Jews now to an extent never known since the days of the Apostles. While Gentiles are turning away in many cases with loathing from everything Christian, the Jews are examining the claims of Jesus to an extent never known since the days of the Apostles. We must have the Jew and Gentile gathered to Christ. Everyone of us must be ambitious in our sphere to gather the last Gentile and the last Jew. Someone will have the honour of gathering the last Gentile, that completes the Gentile portion of the Church of Christ, and someone will have the honour of gathering the last son of Abraham that completes the remnant according to election of grace. I confess I have a high ambition to be the instrument of gathering the last Jew that completes the remnant according to the election of grace; you have the same ambition to gather the last Gentile. Let us all gather as many Jews and Gentiles as we can, by the blessing of God, and we will stand a better chance of gathering the last one, and of hastening the coming of our Lord.

THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 4.

The Millennial Reign.

"The Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients, gloriously" (Isa. xxiv. 23). "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth" (Zech. xiv. 9). "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: . . . they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years" (Rev. xx. 6. Ps. lxxii; Isa. xi. 1—10; Ezek. xxxvi. 24—38; Mic. iv. 1—7).

THE meeting this morning was presided over by Dr. Robert Anderson, who read Psalm lxxiii.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

Objection is constantly taken to these Prophetic Conferences, on the ground of the differences among Christians about prophecy. It seems to me that that is a special reason why we should thus meet together and confer upon these truths; and the more especially because so many of us are coming to realise that one cause of our differences is largely due to the mode in which in the past we have been too much content to enter upon this study, as though it were something to amuse our leisure, and as though it were intended to give a fresh interest to the newspaper, instead of being in the very warp and woof of Scripture —the string upon which all the pearls are strung, a revelation specially intended to confirm the faith of God's people, and not only to kindle, but to direct their hope. People speak as though prophecy were the only truth upon which Christians differed. How paltry are the points of difference between prophetic students compared with the differences between two great schools of theology as regards the truth of the Atonement; and yet, thank God, where there is real love to God and to men, Christians can meet and work and pray together in the Gospel, because the great fact that Christ died throws into the shade all differences of doctrine connected with the fact.

So, if the coming of the Lord be not a mere doctrine in the head, but a hope that fills the heart, we should be prepared to meet together and join together with unfeigned lips in that common prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus." A few hours hence, in this very place, Christians differing from one another as to the doctrine of the death of Christ, as to the coming of Christ, will join in the closest fellowship of the Church of Christ around a table which is given to us, a supper to show forth the Lord's death until He come. So I think that on an occasion like this, the main question that we should consider in prophetic study should not be, What are our views, but what is the spirit in which we hold these views? If we come together not to measure the distance which separates us, but to mark out the ground we hold in common; above all, if we come together in the spirit of Christian love and forbearance and, I will add, humility—for surely there is no sphere in which the admonition is more needed, "If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know"—then we shall reap the profit; our spiritual life will be deepened and God will be glorified.

My own experience, for what it is worth, is this: that in the last few years, instead of differences deepening between prophetic students, just because we have been accustomed to meet over the Scriptures, the common ground is being enlarged, and we are being drawn together in sympathy; and perhaps that will lead us to be drawn together in doctrine. Surely there is a very close parallel between these controversies that I have alluded to; and many of us are coming to realise this, that in the one case, as in the other, neither side has a monopoly of the truth. The advocate of each is right in the positive side of what he holds, but not right in ignoring that which the other is teaching. We have, on the one side, the great truth of the love of God to the world and the revelation of Christ as the propitiation of the world. We have, on the other side, the revelation of the love of Christ to his Church and the electing sovereignty of God. May we not hold both these? Though they may seem to be opposed, may we not regard them as opposite sides of one great truth? So it would not be easy to convince us that the history of Christendom is entirely ignored in the visions of the Apocalypse; but, though we can see the main outlines of the great facts of the Christian dispensation so clearly in these visions, it would not be easy to convince some of us that there will not be a more absolute and complete fulfilment in days that are to come.

I should adopt the words of a great man, who wrote some years ago on this subject, when he said that this prophecy is of the nature of its author, with whom a thousand years are as one day; so that the prophecies are not fulfilled punctually and at once, but are accomplished throughout many generations, though the height and fulness of them may be attained in some particular age. The special subject of our meeting to-day affords an apt illustration of this. All Christians admit that the Lord is reigning, but when the sceptic challenges you with the dismal facts of the world, and asks you what is your explanation of it, you reply that the Lord is reigning, but not in the sense that he means. He is reigning in grace, and therefore man and not God is responsible for the violence and wrong-doing in this world. But is it to be always so? As we turn to this Book we find it clearly taught that Christ is to be manifested as the ideal of every dispensational revelation which God has committed to man, and in which man has failed. Adam, the federal head of the creation: the Lord from heaven, the head of the new creation; Abraham, to whom the promises were given: to Abraham and his seed (which is Christ); Moses, the apostle and high priest of that profession: the Lord the Apostle and High Priest of our profession. There is kingly power committed to David: the full realisation of God's purposes in the manifestation of the Son of David in days to come. In other words, we plead for a reasonable literalness in our study of his Book; we do not mean by that that the blessed Lord Jesus, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, is ever to live in a house of stone or marble in Jerusalem, subject to all the ordinary conditions of human life. But what we do mean is this: that He will take up the responsibility of human government, and that right, and not wrong, shall triumph in this world. Does anyone cavil at this?

I ask you to think for a moment how you would meet the infidel objection, as John Stuart Mill fairly stated it from the human standpoint: anyone looking abroad upon the world and judging of this matter by what he finds there, concludes indeed that there is a God; but however doubtful that may be, this is certain that He is wanting either in goodness or in power. You and I understand this in the murmur that so often goes up from the Christian heart in the spirit of this 73rd Psalm, "How doth God know? and is there knowledge in the Most High?" It is often the ungodly who prosper in the world, and the saints have the waters of a full cup of sorrow poured out to them. Why, then, I ask, should it be deemed incredible that God should do that which every good man would do if he could? The wonder is not that God is going to take back the sceptre which he has committed to the hands of man. The wonder is that He bears and forbears with evil: the wonder is that He delays to do it. And so this great truth to be opened to-day is not a fad of prophecymongers, or of a certain set of Christians, but a great fact and a great truth. That is our only answer to the objection of the infidel and the sceptic. We know the answer, that it is grace that characterises his reign, that He cannot deal directly with men or their sins until He comes to stern and unswerving judgment. So He waits, and so the good is trampled upon in this world, and violence "covereth them as with a garment," as the Psalm gives it; but it is ours to go into the sanctuary of God, and then, according to the words of the closing verse of the Psalm, "It is good for me to draw near to God; I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works."

AN EIGHT-FOLD ANTICIPATION.

Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH.

In attempting to bring before you the millennial reign, my purpose is to address those who are inquirers rather than those who already see their way clear to conclusions which many of us regard as beyond question. I shall briefly dwell upon eight main lines of thought, along which a study of the subject in its general aspects must necessarily lead us. Let me ask your attention:—

I. To its certainty as a revealed fact. Only as a fact of revelation can any certainty attach to it. Mere speculation ought to have no place in such inquiries as these. But once see it to be a truth contained in Holy Writ, and it passes out of the region of hypothesis, and becomes a fundamental fact—fundamental, that is, to the integrity of the Inspired Word. It is a principle of vital importance to the study of Scripture that the literal signification of words should be accepted in all cases except where the obvious nature of the language employed necessitates a figurative or symbolic sense. Only by a continual violation of this principle can the personal reign of Christ during the millennial era be eliminated from revelation. Once admit that prophecies concerning his second advent are to be interpreted on the same principle as history compels us to interpret those relating to his first coming, and then the whole truth we are met to maintain stands out in bold relief as the sure testimony of God.

A glance at the first chapter of Genesis, read in the light of Ps. viii., Rom. viii. 19—22, and Heb. ii. 5—8, shows that there is a sovereignty of man over creation through, in, and under

Christ, yet to be manifested—a sovereignty such as the Gospel dispensation does not confer, nor, indeed, as to its Divine arrangements and conditions, harmonise with. A careful consideration of the covenants made by Jehovah with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob necessitates a belief that they assert a future for Israel and the world, such as is not and cannot be realised under the Gospel, the nation and the land having no place assigned them. The study of the historical books of the Old Testament, with an eye to their typical import, leads to the conviction that the prospect of a reign of Christ under which the Davidic and Solomonic aspects of the kingdom shall be gloriously fulfilled, is no "cunningly devised fable," but a sublime fact, foreseen, foreordained, and foreshadowed by the Holy Ghost, who moved the sacred historians so to construct the records they have handed down.

The Psalms, as all thoughtful readers know, are full of the King and the kingdom. Such strains as the second, twenty-first, twenty-fourth, forty-fifth, seventy-second, eighty-ninth, and others, serve to exemplify how the thought of the millennial reign constantly animated the mind and heart of the inspired Psalmist. The prophecies are so full of the King who is to rule in righteousness, and who "shall reign, and prosper, and execute judgment and justice in the earth," that but for the spiritualising process with which we are so familiar it is impossible to read them without being assured of millennial truth, and filled with joyful hope of another age, in which "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

The New Testament in no way overturns these uniform teachings of the Old. By parable and prophecy, by precept and by promise, our Lord gave emphasis to all that the prophets of old had said concerning Him. The Apostles in plainest terms assert their expectation of the golden age which should follow the present time of waiting for and working unto the kingdom of God. So we find Peter saying to the Jews of his day, "Repent ye therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that He may send the Christ, who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things whereof God spake by the mouth of His holy prophets, which have been since the world began" (Acts iii. 19—21). John, in the Revelation, whatever principle of interpretation you may apply to details, assuredly unfolds the fundamental fact of a kingdom yet to come, and a reign of Christ and his saints in connection with earth and earthly scenes, such as our dispensation cannot develop. As for the testimony of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, the simple fact that in Eph. iii. he speaks of this present "dispensation of the grace of God" as having been unknown and unrevealed to prophets who had gone before, is sufficient to prove how distinct from the Gospel age he regarded the reign of Christ, the Old Testament predicted, to be. So he continually speaks of the coming of the Lord, and the setting up of the kingdom, as the great hope of the Church, and powerful incentive to suffering and toil, and warns against the perilous times and fearful apostasy which must come before those great and glowing prophecies of the kingdom can be fulfilled.

II. Its place in the Divine economy. It is an important truth. St. Paul asserted on Mars Hill, that "God hath determined the times before appointed." Among those times and seasons, which our Lord told his disciples in Acts i. the Father hath set within (or appointed by) his own authority, we learn, from the context, is "the time of the kingdom," or, in other words, of the millennial reign. In Isa. xliv. 7, the Almighty declares, "I appointed the ancient people, and the things that are coming, and that shall come to pass." The prophetic Habakkuk reminds us, concerning the vision of the coming King, that "It is for an appointed time." We review the history of God's past dealings with men, and we find them displaying an order and precision which fully establishes the belief that the seven creation days of Genesis are but types of as many dispensational days in which the great Framer of all things is bringing to perfection his new creation. Eden answers to the first of these; the antediluvian age, commencing with the Fall, is the second; the Noahic, dating from the covenant made with Noah after the Deluge, is the third; the Abrahamic, beginning with the call of Abraham, the fourth; the Sinaitic, with Moses at its head, is the fifth; the Gospel, originating in the incarnation of the Son of God, is the sixth; and where shall we look for the seventh—the grand Sabbatic rest in which the curse uplifted, creation gladdened, man restored, and God rejoicing in all his works—if not to that millennial reign, which is ushered in by the return of Him whose coming shall be "as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds, when the tender grass springeth out of the earth through clear shining after rain?" As each past dispensational era has had its fitting place and special design in the economy of Him who, "through Christ, his Son, hath made or set the ages," so the coming closing age is needed to fill up or complete the plan of predestined grace and truth.

III. Its purpose as a Divine arrangement. What need, say many, of another age? Why should not the Gospel day suffice to bring about all that heart can wish, or God bestow, on earth? The Lord has been pleased to reveal much that furnishes full answers to such a query as this. He has purposes to answer which an age of faith, as distinguished from sight, cannot fulfil, national and material destinies to unfold which an essentially spiritual dispensation, knowing no distinctions of race or privilege, cannot harmonise with.

Among the special purposes of the millennial reign may be cited: (a) The revelation of the glory of Christ as the exalted and glorified Son of Man. Earth, as yet, has never seen his glory; it has but witnessed his career as "a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." But it shall see "the King in his beauty," it shall behold Him in robes of majesty, and in undimmed, unclouded glory as "the King of kings and Lord of lords." (b) The manifestation of the sons of God is a second purpose to be answered. Now they are hidden, not only as to the secret springs of their life, but as to their true character and glorious destiny. "The world knoweth us not," "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." The Bride as yet is in exile, sharing the rejection and the sufferings of her Lord, but the time is coming when she shall be exalted to the Bridegroom's throne. (c) A third purpose is the complete fulfilment of the covenants made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. "God hath not cast away his people whom He foreknew," The seed of Abraham his friend (Isa. lxi. 8) are still near his heart, the land promised to be theirs for ever, as a peaceable habitation, is still before Him, in due time to be remembered and restored, their predicted ascendancy as a race in days when Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord, and all nations be gathered unto it, is simply delayed, not set aside. The word that cannot be broken declares, "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root; Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." (d) Yet one more purpose shall be served. The victory of Jesus over the devil and all his works shall be revealed. Satan himself bound, and cast into the abyss, his legions driven from the abodes of men, and hell restrained from polluting earth or heaven, the field shall be clear for universal blessing. The curse so long resting upon creation as the fruit of sin shall be uplifted. The whole creation shall cease to groan, and universal praise, such as Psa. cxlviii. anticipates, be an accomplished fact.

IV. Its blessing to the heathen world. To many the ways of God with the masses of heathendom have always seemed shrouded in mystery, but many misconceptions have been entertained as to his dealings with them. Never has He regarded them with indifference, or felt toward them a lack of love or of readiness to bless. His very choice of Israel as a nation was designed to be a channel of blessing to all surrounding nations, and had Israel been faithful to its trust, a far wider knowledge of God, even in ages long before the Gospel, would have prevailed. We remember how, of the heathen world, up to the days of Christ, it is said, "The times of this ignorance God winked at," or overlooked. Since those days one of the saddest facts to contemplate is the coldness and neglect with which the Church has treated the Divine command to evangelise the world, and failed to respond to the yearning compassion with which the great heart of God has viewed the perishing millions afar. But in the millennial day it will be seen how, under the reign of Christ, the whole earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, for then shall all the kingdoms of the world have become the kingdom of God and of his Christ.

The nations to thy glorious light,
  O Zion, yet shall throng;
And all the listening islands wait
  To catch the joyful song.
The name of Jesus yet shall ring
  Through earth and heaven above,
And all his ransomed people know
  The Sabbath of his love.

V. Its character as a theocratic reign. The words of the Apostle in Rom. xiv. 17, used to describe the spiritual aspects on elements of the kingdom of God in mystery, are equally descriptive of the most salient features of that kingdom in manifestation. The kingdom of God is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Even in a spiritual sense, under the millennial reign, these things will be wondrously experienced and enjoyed by untold millions of earth's inhabitants; for in that day effusions of the Holy Spirit, such as have never yet been known, shall be poured out upon the world. It is sometimes said that millennarian views dishonour the Holy Ghost, by limiting his work, and making the personal return of Christ essential to the conversion of the world. As if it were possible for the exaltation of Christ in any way to detract from the glory of that Holy One whose office as the third person of the ever-blessed Trinity is and ever will be to glorify the Son of God, in whom both the Father and the Spirit expressly delight.

One great feature of the reign of Christ will be that the Triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, will be magnified in the spiritual results, produced to an extent the world has never yet beheld. Righteousness, in its evangelical, personal, social, and political aspects, shall in that day universally prevail; injustice and oppression of every kind shall cease; society shall be association for the common weal; commerce, science, arts, and literature shall be based on principles of truth and moral force. Then shall be seen "a world in principle as chaste as this is gross and selfish." The will of God shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. Peace shall flow like a river; wars shall cease unto the ends of the earth, and one vast confederation of nations shall unite to swell the song of praise to the Anointed One, who shall be the King of all the earth.

VI. Its duration as a dispensational period. Speculation has often been rife upon this point; I will only quote the familiar words of Rev. xx. 4. There the fact is stated concerning the kingdom of priests who have part in the first resurrection which precedes and ushers in the millennial reign: "They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." The definite use of the term "a thousand years" so many times in this brief summary of millennial truth affords a strong argument in favour of its literal significance. But it is not our object to enter now upon points of detail; suffice it to say that this glorious age of ages shall last long enough to display before a wondering universe the exceeding riches of that grace of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, and the boundlessness of that power which is given into the hands of the Son of Man.

VII. Its end as a predicted catastrophe. It is a fact of solemn and instructive import that each succeeding dispensation of God's regard to man has ended in judgment. Eden ended in the expulsion of the guilty pair; the era of the first promise and of initial faith ended in the Flood; the renewal of Divine covenant with man through Noah ended in the Babel strife of tongues; the Abrahamic age of Israel ended in the sore bondage of Egypt, and the judgment of the Red Sea; the Sinaitic, or Levitical, period closes with the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dispersion or the chosen race; the Gospel day, bright as it has been with the effulgence of the glory of God, beheld in the face of Jesus Christ, is to set amid the darkness of apostasy and the doom of Christendom; and the millennial reign, as to its earthly sphere, will close with the fire of God devouring a revolting host, who, under the lead of Satan, once more allowed to test the heart of man, rebel against the Lord, and seek to overturn the very foundations of his throne. Awful and sublime are the words of the Apostle Peter as he describes the terrors of this scene. Thus shall the final chapter of earth's history prove how truly "Man at his best state is altogether vanity," and pave the way for that eternally perfected state of things in which "God is all in all."

VIII. Its practical value as an anticipated event. We are charged with being unpractical, and with allowing fanciful theories to divert us from sober facts when we thus dwell upon the events of unfulfilled prophecy. We are supposed to be unfitting ourselves for the present, because we anticipate the future; and not a few of those whom we love and honour as brethren in the Lord regard us as imperilling the interests of the Church of God, and represent us as gone astray, because we are impelled to declare, not a part only, but the whole counsel of God. I venture to affirm that whether we look at the essential nature and influence of prophetic truth, or at the lives of those who have most thoughtfully and intelligently studied it, the effects of such study, and the deep convictions to which it leads, are in every way of the highest practical value and importance. It is impossible to realise with anything like spiritual perception the shortness of this present time, and the nearness of the Lord's return, and to be idle, cold, or dead. The voice of prophecy rings in the ears of those who prayerfully study its teaching, and in tones which stir us to the depth of our being, calls upon us to let our loins be girt, our lamps trimmed, and our lives ordered as those of men who wait for their Lord.

A tremendous responsibility rests upon those in these days to whom prophetic light has been given; to see what is coming, and to hold our peace, is to betray a solemn and a sacred trust, and to incur the guilt of helping to lull our fellows into the deep deathlike slumber which prevails. Multitudes are sleeping already in a Delilah lap of a boasted age of progress and of reason versus faith. The mystery of iniquity is rapidly developing for its final stage under the reign of the Man of Sin. Satan sees he has but a short time, and is marshalling his hosts for a fearful fray. Be it ours to sound the clarion notes of warning and of rallying truth, that so we may have a part in the joy of waking some at least of those who sleep, and of rejoicing as we catch the sound of our Master's chariot wheels.

A GLORIOUS POLITICAL PROSPECT.

REV. HENRY E. BROOKE.

We have had a very glorious political prospect spread before us, in what our brother has just spoken. I say advisedly, "political prospect," for I want in the few words I have to speak, to call attention to the millennial kingdom as a distinctly political prospect. We Christians perhaps do well to keep as free as possible from the political sphere around us now, but I believe we have, and ought to have, very distinct and definite political prospects for the future. Moreover, I believe that the more our hearts are filled with the political prospects of the coming kingdom, the more shall we get loose from the present troublesome sea of politics around us. We are reminded in the present time of the troublesome sphere of earthly politics, as it was pointed out yesterday morning; and we might have expected it to be so, for it is well marked in that definite prophetic chart to which our attention was called. We have come to the time when the stone cut out without hands falls upon the feet of the image. Then the iron, and the clay, and the brass, and the silver, and the gold, are all broken in pieces together.

But you may remember one feature brought forward in that statement in the second of Daniel, that the iron and the clay would not amalgamate. There is a general consent amongst prophetic interpreters as to the meaning of that. Iron seems to point to that monarchic form of government which prevailed in the Roman Empire, and the clay to that democratic form of empire which prevails, and is increasingly prevalent around us. We in England have flattered ourselves that we have formed a sort of amalgamation between the iron and clay. We have been accustomed to look into past ages and have thought that in the days of the Plantagenets, the Tudors, and the Stuarts, the iron was a little too strong, but we have flattered ourselves that we have come to a form of constitution that happily unites the iron and the clay; that it is a very happy, and it is likely to be a very lasting form of government. Let us not be too sure of that. The Word of God says the iron and the clay won't mingle; and, therefore, when dwelling upon this point I throw it out as a hint for those who like to study these points. The thing we are to look at is not an amalgamation of iron and clay, but it is the stone cut out without hands that falls upon the feet of the image and breaks up every portion of the image. According to the expressive language of prophecy, "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

I will point out that the passage just quoted from Daniel ii. is, to my mind, one of the strongest passages in proof of what we hear asserted—that the coming of the Lord Jesus is at the commencement of the millennial kingdom. You will observe there is no transition from the iron and the clay to the new state of things such as would be the case if there were to be political progress and religious progress under the millennial age. It is, as the last speaker well said, a violent catastrophe. We look for this catastrophe; we live in the expectation of it, and we live in the hope that it will really bring blessing to this earth and bring in that which alone can give true happiness—the strong reign of the coming King.

Let me make a sort of apology to any who may take exception to the expression, "political prospects," and would say that it is better for us as Christians that we meddle not with politics. I will admit it as to the present sphere, but I deny it as to the future. There is that passage in Phill. iii.: "Our citizenship is in heaven;" the Greek scholars tell us it is not quite citizenship, but state-constitution. If one might say so, our political sphere is in heaven, where the King is, and from whence also we look for Him in the character of a Saviour—for that is the full force of the Greek. Is that all? Nay, that was sufficient for the point in hand, and therefore the Apostle went no further there; but there is much beyond that; as we sometimes sing, "There's more to follow." He who comes from heaven has first of all to change the bodies of his saints on earth, to raise the bodies of them that sleep, to glorify all, and to bring them into union and identity with Himself, so far as the body is concerned. He will then, as we read in other places, take to Himself his kingdom, and they shall reign with Him. Then that passage in Phillipians will lose its force as a prohibition to Christians to indulge in earthly politics, for then the political sphere will have come down to earth: heaven will have come down to earth, to mould and fashion her, and then we shall see the powers of heaven actively engaged upon earth.

Let us not forget this fact—it is an awful, a solemn fact—a truth, and a solemn truth—that the present dispensation is not the reign of Christ. I do not for a moment deny that the Lord reigneth in the sense that, in the heavens, He reigneth over all, and that even as to this earth the powers of evil can go no further than

NATURAL HEALING.

Generally the causes of disease are of the most simple character, and ordinary attention to hygienic measures would speedily rectify the disturbance. Of this, however, very few think. It were far better in many instances to do nothing medicinally, because Nature would work on in her own way, and correct the defect, especially when favourable external conditions were afforded. There are many ways in which we can assist Nature in her work; for instance, if we cut our fingers, the share we take in the work of healing is to join the severed parts, cover the wound with a false skin to keep out foreign elements, and Nature accomplishes the rest. So in more serious affections, it is always best to let Nature effect the healing, and for us to assist by simply affording more favourable conditions under which she can work.

We have incontrovertible proof that Magnetic Apparel adds to the vitality and energy of the invalid. By it we bring to bear upon the deranged system the automatic action of a naturally soothing agent of the highest order. It is, therefore, logical enough to believe that we are in the way of securing more rapid results than by simply relying on Nature alone. When the system has been weakened by false treatment, or the ailment has been neglected too long, it is incumbent upon us to use such natural methods as are calculated thus to co-operate with Nature, and to facilitate restoration. In this relation Magnetism, which is one of Nature's chief and most potent forces, becomes invaluable. It affords, at once, better conditions, under which the recuperative powers can work more effectually, and whereby the cause of the mischief is gradually rectified, and eventually overcome. Nothing foreign to the healthy development of the system is introduced, therefore nothing irritates even the most delicate organism. By the simple act of wearing an Odo-Magnetic garment, the patient lives in a new atmosphere, which he absorbs at every pore, with as certain advantage to the body as when enjoying a change of climate. The various symptoms often originating in a simple functional irregularity, being in due time removed, the normal, harmonious balance which should ever exist in order to health, is quietly restored.

No doubt the diversity in the nature of the cases in which Magnetism has proved beneficial is surprising to those who have not studied its modus operandi. We ourselves have often been astonished at the wonders wrought by Magnetism, yet we can easily establish the grounds of its success; the uniformity of which is attributable to the thorough diagnosis each case receives, and to the unremittent care and attention bestowed during the time it remains under our control.

The sum of our argument therefore is, that all symptoms traceable to some slight defect in the working of the complex human frame are amenable to a remedy which can and does assist Nature in her unceasing efforts to remove the causes of ill-health. The Magnetic method is eminently calculated to effect this change, because it is one of the chief, omni-existent energies of Nature, and that most readily applied.

He lets or directs. "Thus far thou shalt come, and no further," is still, we rejoice to know, the word that He speaks to them. But it is a solemn fact that the present dispensation—and this is one answer to the infidels—the present reign is the reign of Satan. He is called "the god of this world;" a strong expression. You and I should never think of using such an expression of Satan, but it is God's Word. He, moreover, is "the prince of the power of the air." He is "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." If you look at Rev. xii. and xiii., where you have the revelation of that great beast with seven heads and ten horns—it matters not whether you refer to the Roman Empire or some other power to be revealed—in either case, in the 12th chapter it is the dragon himself who has the seven heads and the ten horns. Therefore, if we regard it as fulfilled in the pagan Roman Empire, it tells us sufficiently the real presiding power at that time. In the thirteenth, the beast is in a new form—the horns are crowned. Whether that be, as many believe, the state of things when the Roman Empire broke up and became separate kingdoms, or whether it be a future manifestation, the point in either case is this: the dragon gave him his power, and seat, and great authority; so that to the very end of time Satan is really the god, ay, in a sense, the king, the ruler of this world's destinies. If an infidel asks me: How can you account for God being what He is while the world exhibits such wickedness, my answer is, that it is Satan who is ruling under God's power; that he can go no further than permitted, but still, for purposes we do not understand very much, he is allowed to rule. What we look forward to is the first four verses of Rev. xx. That is catastrophe, if you like. That is a distinct and definite point which we cannot evade in our treatment of this subject, and a point that seems to me to overthrow all the thoughts of any gradual gliding, so to speak, into the millennium, or a development of the present state of things in order that it should bring about what prophecy reveals.

Now look at Psalm lxxii. Our Chairman has already read the seventy-third. I had no arrangement with him that he should take one and I another, so I conclude that it was the Spirit of God who guided him, as I hope He has guided me. I was struck with the remarkable contrast of the two, and it is more interesting to take them in the reverse order, because the seventy-third gives the misery of the present state of things on earth—viz., the prosperity of the wicked. It is a sad picture of prevailing wickedness and oppression, so much so as to wring from the Psalmist almost an exclamation of despair as to how such things should be; nay so to prove a stumbling-block to him, that only when he went into the sanctuary could he understand the problem. But now let us have the added light of Psalm lxxii., and see the contrast.

[The speaker here read the whole of this striking passage of God's Word.]

Now, this, I believe, is the most spirit-stirring psalm in all God's Word, for there is a sort of enthusiasm as to the glorious coming of the King. What I want you to do is to look upon this as a fact, and to allow yourselves to be filled with a genuine enthusiasm for this coming King and kingdom. We find many problems solved here which are perplexing at the present day to statesmen and social reformers. First of all, there is that great difficulty about government, as to what is the right mode, and how you can best adjust the balance of the various forces. It is all settled here. There is no fear of the King expressed from the beginning to the end of this psalm—there is no fear of Him taking too much upon Himself. There is no record belonging to his government of a democratic character. "Give the King thy judgments." He shall so reign as to put down all that is evil: he shall so reign as to promote all that is good.

Then another great problem of the present day is, how to deal with depression, distress, and misery. Our statesmen and social reformers are at their wits' end to know what to do. It is all here. "He shall deliver the needy when he crieth." He shall have sympathy for their suffering. He shall not only feel sympathy for them in heaven, but upon his throne. "He shall judge the poor of the people; He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor." There will be no agricultural distress then. There will be an abundance of everything.

There is another problem that is solved here. We often find the subject raised—and it is a most alarming one—the overcrowding of cities. We know what it is in this great city, and how the increasing numbers begin to make one wonder what it will ultimately come to, especially in these days of distress. One trembles sometimes at the thought of what an overcrowded city, under the guidance of turbulent and evil spirits, might be. But as to the city in that day we read, "They of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth." The city won't be overcrowded, and especially the city—the city of God. The central city will not be like London, overcrowded. "They shall flourish like grass of the earth"—one of the strongest figures to show that there will be absolute righteousness, peace and blessing.

It is a glorious prospect and one might long dwell upon it; but what I want to wind up with is this: let us cherish this prospect. Let us receive it into our hearts, and let us believe it. I give you one point, and it is this: our personal interest in this prospect. Many say this is all very well for the people who shall live then, but what about the heathen who will be on the earth? I would endorse, thoroughly, what Mr. Gooch said just now; that we are not to look upon the Lord's coming as a bad day for the heathen. I believe it will be a bad day for the professing Christian Church that has not accepted Christ. I think we ought to draw that distinction very clearly. "The judgments of the Lord are upon them"—that is the nicety of the Greek which expresses it, "who would not know God and would not obey the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ." Those who are familiar with the Greek know that in this phrase there is that which rather expresses those who had an opportunity of knowing God and would not know Him; who had an opportunity of believing the Gospel, and would not believe. Those are the ones upon whom the coming vengeance is to fall. When I read in Rev. xiv. of judgment to be poured upon "the vine of the earth," which I believe is the professing Christian Church, we see where judgment will fall. The imposture of the priesthood, the assumption of the priesthood that has prevailed throughout Christendom during this dispensation—I believe the heaviest judgment will fall upon those thus guilty. I believe that what we read of the rebellion of Korah, and Abiram, and of Judas, is to be acted over again literally—that these men, whose system has been characterised by the greed of gain, will meet with a like fate. I look at the close of this dispensation for some awful punishment on the priesthood of Christendom—those who have assumed the office of the Lord Jesus Christ; those who have blasphemously asserted that they are offering his sacrifice and that they are standing as priests in his stead.

But now, whilst Christendom will be the scene of suffering, we know that the true Church of Christ will be safe. We may be sure of that; but I believe too it will be a glorious day for the heathen. I believe that the dark Continent of Africa, and the unknown steppes of Asia, and the hardly got-at tracts in South America will rejoice and blossom like the rose. I believe that then will be their time of blessing, for He who shall come will send forth his ministers to them with the message of salvation.

My last point is this: If we are believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, we have a direct personal interest in this. We are to return with Him. We who are believers in Jesus, when He comes, are to be taken away with Him, and caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall ever be with the Lord. That does not mean that we are to go away into heaven, to have no more to say to the earth. If we are ever to be with the Lord we must be where the Lord is. If the Lord shall Himself descend from heaven, and if the Lord is to come during the millennial period to be King over the earth, or reside (as it is sometimes put) in a house under ordinary circumstances of mortal life, there must be some wonderful communication betwixt heaven and earth. We do believe in something which was forshadowed in our Lord's life between the resurrection and the ascension. You remember how He went in and out when the doors were shut. I have long had a thought which I was delighted to hear confirmed by Mr. Newberry in his lecture, which thought he gave as the result of thirty years' reflection—that Christ's people, who shall have the same bodies that He has, will really minister upon earth during the millennium in exactly a similar way. Believers in Jesus shall in that day go in and out of earth just as the Lord Jesus did during those forty days.

Mr. Newberry brought out a beautiful thought about the priests. The priests of Ezekiel's temple, those who ministered in the inner court, were not allowed to go out and minister in the outer court until they changed their garments. They had to put their robes aside, and put on other robes to go and minister in the outer court. The thought he brought out was this: that Christ's saints when they come down to minister upon earth shall have other bodies than those in which they minister above. At all events there will be some wonderful power of transformation by which the glorified body shall no longer scare the inhabitants of the earth, as it would if they appeared in glory. They shall have the power, it may be, of walking as Christ walked and talked with the disciples as they were on the way to Emmaus. What a glorious prospect this is. Remember that all this is for government, and in order that there may be at that time carried out—what is not carried out by Satan and his angels—a sphere of righteous government upon earth; Christ the King and his saints associated with Him in the kingdom; reigning over the earth, conducting all things right, restraining evil, putting down that which is wrong, and bringing about all things which may tend to his glory. It is indeed a glorious prospect.

Let this thought be a practical one. Do not imagine that this is an unpractical subject: it is the most practical of all. Do not imagine that it tends to withdraw a person from their spiritual work—it tends quite the other way. I was greatly struck last night when I got home, on taking up The Christian for this week. I found there a letter by the Editor from abroad, in which he is writing of some remarkable instances met with in the North of Africa (where he then was) of Christian testimony as to the value received from words spoken or written by Christians in connection with his paper. Here is one testimony that struck me very much:—

> It was at the close of Mr. Moody's late mission in London that I first felt the desire to devote my life wholly to work for God. From him I had just learned the glorious truth that the Lord Jesus was coming back again, and might very soon be here, and that all Christians should daily be watching and waiting for Him. This filled me with indescribable joy and gladness, and I continually prayed that He would show me what I could do to hasten his return. I did not think of foreign mission work until early last spring, when I saw a letter in The Christian from Mr. Baldwin, describing the great spiritual darkness of Morocco and the scarcity of workers. I at once felt that Christ must long for more of his children to go out to that dark land as witnesses for Him, and that He might be delaying his coming on account of their unfaithfulness to his last command.

Is not that a remarkable testimony? This Christian saint at once is led by the subject that has occupied us to-day to ask how she could hasten his return, and the Lord showed her the way—to go out to Africa and preach the Gospel. Depend upon it, she has got at the right meaning of the text in 2 Peter iii. 11, where it asked: "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God." It is by his elect being gathered that his coming may be hastened. We pray God that it may please Him to accomplish the number of his elect, and so hasten his coming. We are permitted not only to pray, but to co-operate towards it by letting such a subject as we have had before us lead us to go forth to work for Him, knowing that He will come speedily.

Prayer was offered by Rev. E. Payson Hammond, and the meeting was brought to a close.

[We are obliged to postpone our report of Thursday evening's addresses, and of the afternoon gatherings.]

We are desired to announce the following:—It is feared that the messenger who was sent from the Conference Hall to the publishers of the "Conference Official Reports" with the orders for copies of the report, that were left at the bookstall, has absconded. Would any friends who gave such orders communicate with the publishers, Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Requests for Prayer.

THAT a true servant of Christ may be sent to a little village as the minister, and that a great revival may take place.——For blessing on Gospel services at Cheltenham by Mr. Spencer Walton, March 10 to 24.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings in Campsie Free Church Hall.——For the conversion of a husband.——For a small colony of Jews in Honan, Central China; that they, through the Scriptures that have been circulated there, may accept Christ and bear witness to Him to the surrounding heathen.——For a Cambridge undergraduate; that his way to the mission-field may be opened.——Miss Osborne writes:—I expect to go to Gibraltar in the beginning of April, for a month, to hold meetings among the soldiers. God has greatly blessed such efforts in times past, and I ask the prayers of your readers that there may be a rich ingathering of souls during my stay there.

British and Foreign Bible Society.—A meeting in connection with this society was held on February 25, in Villa Carle, San Remo, when Rev. James Thomas, Metropolitan District Secretary, London, delivered a most interesting and instructive address. He told how during the past year the Bible had been printed in new languages and carried into new lands. Speaking of China, Mr. Thomas stated that the Word of God had now free circulation in that great empire; such were the number of Christian converts and workers that you could travel 2500 miles within its borders, and sleep every night under a Christian roof. Rev. G. L. Fenton, ex-English Chaplain; Rev. Alex. Robertson, Scotch minister; and Rev. Filmer Sulivan, London, took part in the meeting. The collection at the close was a most liberal one.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

MESSRS. MATEER AND PARKER.

AFTER an experience of six months of evangelistic work in the United States, Mr. Parker and myself are only beginning to get some idea of this great country. Its conventions, camp meetings, and its annual revival efforts, are grandly affecting it for good. Our American cousins appear to be ahead of us in social temperance and in evangelism. As regards the former, ministers and Church members, as a rule, must be total abstainers. As regards the latter, every minister nearly is an evangelist as well, especially "out West." Some of the American methods of conducting evangelistic work are models of tact and soul-winning wisdom. We feel as we travel through the country that we are not only doing good, but receiving much good in the way of experience as to conducting such meetings.

What the country wants more even than evangelists is true-hearted, godly, Gospel ministers. If such men were to come over by the hundred, I believe they would all find large spheres of usefulness in fast-growing towns, cities, and villages. In this State alone (Illinois) there are more than 150 churches belonging to one denomination without any pastor.

As regards our own work, I must say that we have been received very cordially. The charm of the name "Spurgeon" is felt over here nearly, if not quite, as much as in England, and anything from the Metropolitan Tabernacle neighbourhood is kindly treated. That, no doubt, accounts largely for the way in which we have been received. The States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Ohio, Minnesota, and Illinois have been the spheres of our visits so far. I am thankful to say that we have enjoyed our share of blessing. Next June we hope to push on to Australia, viâ San Francisco, for a year's stay in the colonies, and hope to return home viâ India. We ask the prayers of your readers that God's blessing may rest upon our extended tour.—Yours in Gospel service,

Sterling, Illinois, U.S.A. John T. Mateer.

MR. G. SOLTAU AT AMBLESIDE.

Ambleside has had a time of exceptional refreshment and blessing through a fortnight's mission services held by Mr. Geo. Soltau. Through the Bible readings many Christians have been instructed and refreshed. At the evening Gospel meetings (which, as well as the afternoon readings, were well attended) the majority always remained to the after-meetings for prayer and testimony. Many men, women, and children have, it is believed, definitely given themselves to the Lord, and have openly confessed Him.

Several outlying places, more or less connected with the work in Ambleside, have come in for their share of blessing. One meeting in Langdale was followed by marked blessing; companies of men and women walked the five miles thence to Ambleside to be present at the services. At the closing meeting numbers gave their humble, but rejoicing testimony to blessing received, and listened gratefully to Mr. Soltau's wise parting words.

MR. H. THORNE IN JERSEY.

Great blessing has attended the mission held in Jersey by Mr. Henry Thorne, from February 6 to 22. It is many years since such a mission was held here; we are seldom visited by evangelists of note. The attendance at the meetings gradually increased till towards the close the largest hall in Jersey was too small. Hearts which at first seemed hard were broken by the power of the Holy Spirit, and the inquiry-room became filled night after night by anxious seekers after the light and peace of the Gospel. At the closing praise meeting a very large number testified to having received the Saviour during the mission, while to many who had been serving the Lord for years in doubt and uncertainty as to their salvation, the Word of God came with liberating power.

A special blessing has fallen on the Y.M.C.A. Some old members who had deserted it have returned with fresh vigour, and many new ones are added to the number. The spiritual life, which had been declining, has been deepened, and we entertain the hope that the work will not cease with Mr. Thorne's departure. Many friends in England who have been praying for the island at this time will see how graciously God has answered prayer. The Y.W.C.A. lately established here has profited perhaps even more than the Y.M.C.A., their ranks being largely swelled, and the workers greatly encouraged.

On the morning of Mr. Thorne's departure many congregated on the pier for a last glimpse of the one who had "led their feet into the way of peace." All joined him in heartily singing the hymn, "Shall we gather at the river?"

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT HAMPSTEAD.

The meetings at Hampstead have steadily increased in interest. Many Christians who were at first contented with watching others at work have been drawn to speak to and pray with the anxious ones, and have themselves received great blessing. Every day great numbers of children and young people have been moved to spiritual concern. Many parents say they discern a change for the better in their children's lives. It is delightful to see how anxious the young converts are for the conversion of others. Surprisingly clear and definite, too, are the children's ideas of what they need from Christ, and what He can do for them.

The blessing is not confined to the children. Many adults have been brought to a knowledge of the Lord. The story of a remarkable conversion was related by a worker from Finsbury-park. Near Dalston there is an infidel club, and there had been some discussion among its members as to the Children's Mission. The discussion resulted in the conclusion that the whole thing was an unreality, and that the so-called conversions were simply ebullitions of emotional excitement, which might be produced by anyone skilful in playing upon the emotions.

A member of the club was deputed to attend Mr. Hammond's meetings at Finsbury-park, mix with the children during the inquiry-meeting, and see if he, too, unbeliever though he was, could not produce a convert. The young man did as arranged. He went about among the children, and by and by stopped to talk with a little boy who seemed in great soul distress. He got on tolerably well for two or three minutes; then the little boy asked him to pray. He knelt down, but could carry his pretence no further. Speechless, he knelt awhile by the child's side, and then got up and hurried from the building. But he came again, and yet again. Convinced of sin, he begged to have the way of salvation shown to him. Soon he had practical experience of the reality of conversion, and himself rejoiced in being born again of the Holy Spirit, and has since been earnestly working for his new-found Saviour. E. E. M.

Mr. Shuldham Henry is now holding a fortnight's mission in St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, and asks the earnest prayers of our readers.

Mr. F. C. Spurr has held an eight-days' mission at the Bible Christian Chapel, Black Torrington, Devon. There have been several professed conversions, and we are expecting that the seed sown will yield an abundant harvest. The solos sung by Mr. Spurr were much appreciated. T. J. Vanstone.

Little Munden, Herts.—A fortnight's Gospel services have been held in this parish by Mr. D. Newell, the people meeting first in the various hamlets, and afterwards in the National Schoolroom, which was for the most part crowded. There has been manifest blessing. I feel greatly encouraged and deeply thankful for these services. F. A. L. Foster, Rector.

We have also received notices of encouraging Gospel missions, held by Mr. J. Harris, at Walsham-le-Willows; by Captain Sherrard, R.E., in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Swansea; by Miss Jackson, at St. Neots; and by Miss Brewster, at Peterborough.

Mr. W. Y. Fullerton, one of Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists, has broken down through over work, and has been compelled to take six months' rest. He has left England for Palestine.

Wellington, Somerset.—A meeting to inaugurate a White Cross Army Association was held here on Feb. 26, when Rev. J. M. Wilson, of Clifton College, delivered an address, dwelling with great power and delicacy upon the obligations of the Army. A large majority of those present resolved to form an Association upon undenominational principles to carry out the purposes advocated. The chair was taken by the vicar, who was well supported by clergymen, ministers, and leading gentlemen of the town and neighbourhood.

The North Sea Fishermen.—A lady in Suffolk having heard of the Duchess of Grafton's gift to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, writes as follows to the Director:—"My heart has been deeply touched with the need of fresh mission ships being sent to the poor fishermen. I therefore make the following conditional offer: I will give £50 if nine others will give the same sum to complete £500 by the end of the present month." Contributions may be forwarded to our care, or sent direct to the offices of the Mission, Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C. The cost of a completely equipped mission vessel is a little over £2000.

Lambeth Ragged Schools.—We give the following extract from the latest report:—"At one of our mission services a man who was often intoxicated and a great swearer found his way to the meeting. Soon afterwards his wife came full of gratitude for the change wrought in her husband, saying that drinking and swearing had now given place to Bible-reading, singing, and prayer." Nearly two thousand dinners were provided last year for parents and children. All the departments of the Institution are going on well, including Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, young women's devotional meeting, Temperance work, clubs, bank, &c. The evangelistic Song Services, held weekly, have been a marked success. The new collector for the schools is Miss Robeson, 61, Lambert-road, Brixton-hill.

Letters to the Editor.

STAG HUNTING.

Sir,—The letter on this subject somewhat cloaks the nature of the "sport." Those who have seen a stag fleeing from the hounds know what a piteous sight it is—a spectacle of distress and fatigue—tongue out, eyes starting, and, at times, a tiny stream of blood dripping from each nostril. No animal likes being hunted, and the fact that the stag is reserved for another day seems only an aggravation of the cruelty. Popular opinion may approve this pastime of the genteel, but by a higher judgment it will not be exempted from the reproach attached to chasing and worrying any preserved animal. The whole thing is opposed to humane feeling, to say nothing of Christianity.

Yours, Countryman.

[Another esteemed correspondent writes to the same effect. We inserted the letter by Mr. Noel, not because we agreed with his defence of this so-called "sport," but because we felt the very inadequacy of that "defence" implied the strongest possible condemnation of the practice.—Ed]

THE CITY AND THE VILLAGE.

Dear Sir,—I read with great interest in a recent number of The Christian your remarks on this subject. And right heartily do I endorse your sentiment that "something must be done to check the exodus of our agricultural labourers from the country into the large towns." Truly, as you remark, "the depopulation of our villages is of vital importance, from whatever point of view we may regard it." This imigration seems to progress, more especially amongst the younger people of both sexes. With their present education the young men in many cases begin to despise

Their humble plough, slow moving, and so the most enterprising, tempted by higher wage, and the magic name of London (especially), find their way thither. This, with a general slackness of work, tends yearly to increase the exodus. The employments they secure are generally those of carmen, carters, porters, builders' labourers, &c. But frequently, their "London venture" proving a failure, they return to their village and former occupations. But what has been the result? Their acquaintance with London life has served to graduate them in wickedness of the grosser kinds, hitherto almost unknown in village seclusion.

Country life is conducive to piety.

Oh, friendly to the best pursuits of man,
Domestic life in rural pleasures passed.

Our young men always leave with at least some veneration for the things of God, alas! too easily effaced by the corrupting influence of the town, except in the cases of decided Christians, one of whom lately had the grace and courage to return, after a fortnight, on the ground that "there was too much wickedness to stay." We certainly want neither London habits nor a London element among our village folk. Any scheme for the increase of rural labour should be specially encouraged by the country, that our village population may be increased, instead of (as I now believe it is) yearly becoming less.

One great reason for this state of things is, doubtless, "The very small amount of labour expended upon our farms." In too many instances, their extensive acreage prevents the possibility of employing the number of hands necessary to their successful working. Many, I know, will sanction my remark, when I say that in many cases, twice the amount of labour might be expended upon them with an advantage both to the farmer, and the men.

Experience will, I trust, soon teach the English labourer that, in many respects, he is in a far better position than his "city cousin." With his yearly average of 11s. or 12s. weekly, his garden produce and many other advantages, his life in a measure may be very free from care, as thousands of happy Christian cottage homes throughout our country could testify.

Every pastor and village worker has come to look upon this exodus to the towns as one of the most discouraging features of their work. In many cases they lose the highest and most hopeful amongst their people. Being engaged (with my father, Mr. G. D. Shipley) in itinerant "Village Mission" work, this subject is constantly pressed upon our attention, and frequently we have the opportunity of earnestly and successfully persuading young men not to relinquish their old associations, for the very hazardous prospects of a "London Venture."—Yours faithfully,

Aigle, Switzerland. Cecil Edgar Shipley.

The Book World.

The Lost Manuscript. A Story of Home Life. By M. A. Paull. 1s. Bible Christian Book-room. The tone of this interesting little book is elevating and healthy, and the style and sentiment, while unconventional, are natural and free from exaggeration. The characters and incidents are vigorously worked out.

The Opposite House, and other Stories. By Anne Frances Perram. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. Capital stories indeed for cottage homes, and for reading at mothers' meetings, bands of hope, &c. They will awaken interest by the manner of telling, and bring forth good fruit by the lessons they contain.

Daisy Plains. By the author of "The Wide, Wide World." Nisbet & Co. The true story of a run-away slave, whose history is depicted with singular interest and pathos. It teaches the great moral lesson of "A time to speak and a time to keep silent." Valuable hints are scattered throughout for the study of the gossip and the lover.

Kenneth McAlpine: A tale of Mountain, Moorland and Sea. By Gordon Staples, M.D. Partridge & Co. This life and adventures of the shepherd boy with his faithful dog will delight every youthful reader. The book lacks nothing calculated to give interest to such a career; whilst the neat engravings of Scotch scenery are added attractions.

Bible Narratives in Verse. By Mrs. Marshman. Shaw & Co. The anthoress seemed to see a need for this little book, and her apology for writing it is that she would counteract the influence of the evil of much that is printed. The motive is a good one, but the "Narratives" are hardly such as will be appreciated by those for whom they are intended, though they are well and ingeniously written.

Memorials of the late Bishop McIlvaine. Edited by Rev. William Carus. Elliot Stock. Having already noticed these memorials of a beautiful and godly life, we gladly announce a new and cheap edition. The Bishop's letters to his children deserve to be printed separately, and to be circulated among girls at school. To young men preparing for the ministry this book will prove a help and a boon.

Border Lances. A Romance of the Northern Marches. By the Author of "Belt and Spur." Seeley & Co. Those who are fond of romance will surely find the history of the reign of Edward III. sufficiently attractive. The methods of warfare, and the sports of that period, the enmity and strife then existing between England and Scotland, all present a striking contrast to the now happy union of the two countries. The book contains twelve coloured plates.

Glimpses of Eternity: A Vision. By T. J. C. H. Remington & Co. A quaint book, but not the less likely to benefit souls. Under the form of a five-days' vision, the writer depicts the sounding of the last Trump, Resurrection, Judgment, Heaven, and Hell. Sometimes he employs narrative, sometimes dialogue, sometimes verse. The latter is more remarkable for pious thought than rhythm or poetic power. The great facts of Satan's personality, the eternity of bliss for believers, eternal woe for unbelievers are not watered down to suit "cultured" imaginations, while hypocrisy, worldliness, and unbelief are exposed with impartial vigour.

The Preacher's Analyst. Vol. ix., 1885. Helps for the pulpit. Edited by Rev. J. J. S. Bird, B.A. 6s. 6d. F. E. Longley. The object of this useful monthly is "to promote a bond of union between all the ministers of Christ's Word, and to afford assistance and encouragement in their work." To this end the editor provides sermons by leading evangelical preachers, English and American, original sermons, sermon outlines and seeds. The Christian student can find here able reviews, hints on elocution, and theological examinations. The weary town pastor can find bouquets of illustrative extracts, and the isolated labourer can be cheered and instructed by masters of town assemblies. For matter and arrangement the magazine is excellent. The annual volume makes a precious gift-book.

Mr. Grattan Guinness' New Work.—A new and important book on Prophecy, by Mr. Grattan Guinness, is in the Press, and will be shortly published by Messrs Hodder & Stoughton, to be entitled Light for the Last Days.

One of the most interesting of the series of Pall Mall Gazette Extras is that lately published which contains the opinions of many living celebrities on "The Best Hundred Books." Among those whose original contributions appear are Mr. Ruskin, Archdeacon Farrar, Dr Green, Mr. Henry Irving, Mr. H. M. Stanley, &c. There is also a letter by Carlyle on the study of books (3d. Pall Mall Gazette office, Northumberland-street, Charing Cross).

DISTRESS IN ACHILL ISLAND.

THE harvest of 1885, which, generally speaking, was so good in most parts of Ireland, proved a sad failure in the Island of Achill, where the potatoes for the most part did not even properly blossom, and the bulbs did not grow to maturity.

Though the land is very poor and barren, it is greatly over populated; the inhabitants numbering about 6000—the vast majority of whom are of the poorest and most ignorant class—and are Roman Catholic. There are, however, some 400 Protestants, many of whom are also in great want this winter, though not so destitute as the others, by whom they are regarded with somewhat of envious, and not very friendly feelings. Amongst these are several of God's dear children who are suffering with the rest.

What they most want is employment. This, by enabling them to earn for their support, would be the best way of helping them, and some very necessary and useful works remain unexecuted for want of means, such as the repairing and making passable of roads affording access for some of the villagers to their farms, and the repairing of fences.

I desire to make these facts known to Christian friends, who may be able to help in a case so directly appealing to Christian sympathy, and I shall gladly take charge of any funds that may be entrusted to me for this object; and shall see that they are expended in the most judicious way for the help—first, of those "who are of the household of faith," and then of as many of the other poor islanders as possible. Bindon Scott.

7, Dawson-street, Dublin.

Being very well acquainted with Achill and its poor people, we willingly endorse the foregoing appeal on their behalf, hoping it may reach the hands of some of the Lord's stewards, who will be glad to help, and to whose confidence and sympathy we cordially commend it.

"Women in the Church."—A correspondent writes to point out that the formal appointment of deaconesses in the Church of England, referred to in our last, is no new thing. The late Archbishop of Canterbury appointed several ten years ago at least.

Foreign Traffic in English Girls.—All who fancy that this hellish commerce has been stopped by recent exposures ought to read the "report of investigations by a special commissioner" in Paris that appears in The Sentinel for March (1d. Dyer Bros.). Englishmen and women are not responsible for the fiendish wickedness of Paris, but surely we shall be held accountable for allowing so many of our own sisters to be led blindfold, so to speak, into the traps laid for them in that gilded hell upon earth. We are in danger now of undergoing a reaction, after the exciting horrors of the past; but if we allow ourselves to be lulled to sleep while this great wrong goes on at our doors, how can we clear our skirts of the blood of these victims who are being daily allured to destruction and to death?

The Strangers' Rest.—Rev. J. Ossian Davies was announced to speak at the monthly meeting of workers last Friday. Unfortunately he was prevented by illness from being present. Mr. T. A. Denny kindly consented to fill the vacant place. He read a most interesting letter received by a worker from a sailor at Pickwick, Minnesota, U.S.A., who was converted at the Rest, and who said: "I am now pastor of a church, the only one in the village, and have a good congregation—three out-stations." Mr. Denny afterwards gave a most interesting account of his recent trip to America. Several friends and workers gave details of the work among the sailors. The subject of a night shelter for homeless men was strongly advocated, and it is hoped that one may be opened at an early date.

The Butchers' Festival.—Mr. Henry Varley presided at the butchers' annual festival, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, last week, when the spacious building was crowded to its utmost extent. They had, the Chairman said, a vigorous Temperance Society in connection with the Metropolitan Meat Markets, and he rejoiced that there was one public-house less in the market than there used to be. Mr. Spurgeon gave the men a hearty welcome to the Tabernacle. The union of masters and men he regarded as being advantageous to both, for he liked to see masters and men who thought of one another and studied each other's interests. Alluding to the Temperance question, Mr. Spurgeon hoped that there were plenty of butchers who meant to show that in everything which concerned the welfare of their fellow-men they would not give way, but stand fast by that which was right. He wanted them to help on the matters of Temperance and Purity. There was a dreadful stench going up from this city to the nostrils of the Almighty. He advised them to keep their bodies pure and clean. Even if they did not serve the Lord, he advised them not to lend themselves to the common filthiness which polluted the great mass of the manhood of this city. As to the use of bad language, Mr. Spurgeon said: Depend upon it, the man who swore would lie, and the man who lied would cheat. Regarding the treatment of dumb animals, he hoped they would be as kind as possible.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 14.—NUMBERS XXXIII.

4.—For the Egyptians buried all their firstborn.—R.V., following the Vulgate, connects this verse with the preceding one, thus: "The children of Israel went out with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians, while the Egyptians were burying all their firstborn," &c.

19.—And they departed from Rithmah.—From this verse to ver. 36 the stations named are those visited during the years of penal wandering. The determination of their position is difficult, because during this period there was a definite line of march pursued. Some identifications are rendered probable by modern research, which may hereafter suggest others. All indications thus far seem to show that the Israelites during this period did not overstep the boundaries of the Wilderness of Paran—a tract comprising about one-third of the entire extent of the peninsula which lies between Egypt and Canaan."—Sp. Com.

"The number of stations, which is very small for thirty-seven years (only seventeen from Rithmah, or Kadesh, to Ezion-geber), is a sufficient proof that the congregation of Israel was not constantly wandering about during the whole of that time, but may have remained in many of the places of encampment, not only for weeks and months, but even for years."—Keil.

52.—Then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land.—Israel was to consider that not only was God dispossessing the Canaanites of their land to give it to his people Israel, but He was using Israel as an instrument of his just judgment upon the people of the land for their gross wickedness. To fail in driving them out, was to fail in performing the work which God gave them to do, and as a punishment such failure would result in their own discomfiture, as their subsequent history abundantly proved.

MONDAY, MARCH 15.—NUMBERS XXXIV.

2.—This is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan.—Comparing with this the statement of ver. 12 concerning the "east border"—"the border shall go down to Jordan," we gather that the two and a half tribes, who had voluntarily disassociated themselves from the inheritance of Israel, and had chosen their own inheritance to the east of Jordan, were not regarded as being within the land of Canaan at all; and so we read in ver. 13, "This is the land which ye shall inherit by lot, which the Lord commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe: for . . . . the two tribes and the half tribe have received their inheritance on this side Jordan." One is reminded here of Psalm cvi. 15, "He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul." They presented, as we have seen, a picture of what has its New Testament counterpart—a portion of Israel living outside of the land of Israel.

29.—To divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.—"The self-same hand which had guided their wanderings here fixes the bounds of their habitation. Alas! they never took possession of the land as given of God. He gave them the whole land, and gave it for ever. They took but a part, and that for a time. But, blessed be God, the moment is approaching when the seed of Abraham shall enter upon the full and everlasting possession of that fair inheritance from which they are for the present excluded. Not one jot or tittle shall fail of all that He has spoken. His promises are all yea and Amen in Christ Jesus, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."—C. H. M.

TUESDAY, MARCH 16.—NUMBERS XXXV.

2.—And suburbs for the cities round about them.—The Hebrew word for "suburb" comes from the root "to drive," or "drive out," and means pasturage, or fields to feed their flocks upon. So R.V., in margin, "pasture lands." These pasture lands extended for a distance (ver. 5) of nearly one-third of a mile from the wall.

11.—Ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you.—"Through these directions, which are repeated and still further expanded in Deut. xix. 1—13, God fulfilled the promise which He gave in Exod. xxi. 13, that He would appoint a place for the man who should unintentionally slay his neighbour, to which he might flee from the avenger of blood, that the manslayer might not die before he had taken his trial in the "presence of the congregation." The number of cities was fixed at six, three on each side of Jordan, and Levitical or priests' towns were selected for all six, not only because it was to the priests and Levites that they would first of all look for an administration of justice, but also on the ground that these cities were the property of Jehovah in a higher sense than the rest of the land, and for this reason the manslayer, when once received, was placed under the protection of Divine grace."—Sp. Com.

12.—Refuge from the avenger.—The word avenger is in Hebrew goel—"redeemer"—and means "that particular relative whose special duty it was to restore the violated family integrity, who had to redeem not only landed property that had been alienated from the family (Lev. xxv. 25), or a member of the family that had fallen into slavery (Lev. xxv. 47), but also the blood that had been taken away from the family by murder."—Oehler.

28.—Until the death of the high priest.—Besides the general foreshadowing of Gospel truth conveyed typically by the cities of refuge, there is a special application to the case of Israel, who "killed the Prince of Life" but did it "in ignorance" (Acts iii. 15—17). This, their crime, is not accounted murder to any "who fly for refuge to the hope set before them" (Heb. vi. 18) and abide there till the death of the High Priest, but as He is "made an High Priest for ever," they must abide there evermore.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17.—NUM. XXXVI.

This chapter "contains provisions for preventing any portion of the inheritance of one tribe passing to another through the marriage of an heiress. The necessity for this arose out of the ordinance (xxviii. 6—11) which permitted the daughters of an Israelite dying without male issue to inherit their father's property."—Sp. Com.

4.—When the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be.—"Strictly speaking, the hereditary property would pass at once, when the marriage took place, to the tribe into which an heiress married, and not merely at the year of jubilee. But up to the year of jubilee it was always possible that the hereditary property might revert to the tribe of Manasseh, either through the marriage being childless, or through the purchase of the inheritance. But in the year of jubilee all landed property that had been alienated was to return to its original proprietor or his heir (Lev. xxv. 33). In this way the transfer of an inheritance from one tribe to another which took place in consequence of a marriage would be established in perpetuity."—Keil.

6.—Let them marry to whom they think best: only to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry.—These words have their New Testament counterpart in 1 Cor. vii. 39: "She is at liberty to be married to whom she will, only in the Lord." As the regulation contained in this chapter, limiting the marriage of an heiress to "the family of the tribe of her father," was intended to prevent tribal confusion and loss arising from alienation of inheritance, so the New Testament rule, "only in the Lord," is a merciful provision to avoid confusion and loss of a spiritual kind, arising from hearts being alienated from their rightful inheritance by association with the children of this world.

THURSDAY, MARCH 18.—DEUT. I.

The name (Deuteronomy, or second law) assigned in our Bibles to the Fifth Book of Moses, is not that of the Hebrew, which, as usual, consists only of the opening words, but of the Greek (LXX.) version, which is followed by the Latin Vulgate. It describes correctly the leading contents of the book, which have been thus summarised by Luther: "A compendium and summary of the whole law and wisdom of the people of Israel, wherein those things which related to the priests and Levites are omitted, and only such things included as the people generally required to know." We must, however, bear in mind that "there is not the slightest trace throughout the whole book of any intention whatever to give a new or second law. Whilst the laws in the three middle books of the Pentateuch are all introduced as words of Jehovah to Moses, the Book of Deuteronomy, with the exception of chaps. xxxi. to xxxiv., contains nothing but words addressed by Moses to the people, with the intention, as he expressly affirms in chap. i. 5, of explaining the law to them."—Keil.

2.—There are eleven days' journey from Horeb by the way of Mount Seir unto Kadesh-Barnea.—And yet Israel had taken little short of forty years over it! A significant allusion to their wanderings, which are briefly to be reviewed, and to the sin which caused them so to wander.

7.—Unto the great river, the river Euphrates.—The Lord thus recapitulates his original promise to Abraham (Gen. xv. 18), and again at xi. 24, and Josh. i. 4, to show that He was ready to make it good. But as Israel failed wholly to occupy the limited portion at first assigned them, this part of the promise remains to be fulfilled.

22.—We will send men before us, and they shall search us out the land.—The thought of sending the spies to search out the promised land, though sanctioned by God, and so related in Numb. xiii., originally came from the people. "It is important to remind them that the sending of the spies, which led immediately to their murmuring and rebellion, was their own suggestion."—Sp. Com.

FRIDAY, MARCH 19.—DEUT. II.

1.—We compassed Mount Seir many days.—"The people were at Kadesh in the second year of the Exodus (Num. xiii. 26), and are again spoken of as being there at the close of the thirty-eight years' wandering, and in the fortieth year of the Exodus (Num. xx. 1). This verse 1 seems to refer in general terms to the long years of wandering, the details of which were not to Moses' present purpose.—Sp. Com.

7.—These forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee.—Though the Lord had been with Israel, it could not have been said that Israel had been walking with the Lord. In like manner, we are not to confound the promise of Christ to his Church, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age," with the unwarrantable assumption of the professing Church that they have been walking with the Lord during this period. Attention to this might have kept the Douay translators from saying, in their note on this passage (Matt. xxviii. 20), "How then could the Catholic Church ever go astray?"

15.—For indeed the hand of the Lord was against them, to destroy them from among the host, until they were consumed.—And this, notwithstanding the fact stated in ver. 7, "These forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee." Surely it is significant that the Apostle of the Gentiles, writing to the Church at Rome, should say: "Be not high-minded, but fear; for if God spared not the natural branches, neither will He spare thee" (Rom. xi. 20, R.V.).

24.—Begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle.—The promise in the beginning of the verse, "Behold, I have given into thine hand Sihon . . . and his land," did not relieve Israel from the necessity of fighting in order to attain the fulfilment of the promise, but rather sustained them in doing so; and in like manner, the promise "God hath given to us eternal life" (1 John v. 11), does not make void the exhortation, "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto also thou art called" (1 Tim. vi. 12).

SATURDAY, MARCH 20.—DEUT. III.

5.—All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates, and bars.—Striking confirmation of the truth of this has been afforded by the researches of modern travellers, especially by those of Mr. Porter in this region. "The stone doors of Bashan, whether as ancient as the days of Og or not, have excited the amazement of every traveller who has visited the country."—Sp. Com.

11.—His bedstead was a bedstead of iron; is it not in Rabbath?—"The iron was probably the black basalt of the country, which not only contains a large proportion of iron, but was actually called iron, and is still so regarded by the Arabians. The word translated bedstead may mean "bier," and probably does so in this passage. Modern travellers have discovered in the territories of Og, sarcophagi, as well as many other articles, made of the black basalt of the country."—Ibid. Nine cubits was the length thereof.—"The bedstead or sarcophagus would thus be from thirteen to fourteen feet long, but was, of course, considerably larger than the body of the man for whom it was designed."—Ibid.

25.—That goodly mountain, and Lebanon.—"'That goodly mountain' is not one particular portion of the land, but the whole of Canaan regarded as a mountainous country, Lebanon being specially mentioned as the boundary wall towards the north."—Keil.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

JUST PUBLISHED. A NEW SERVICE OF SONG: PRICE FOURPENCE.

The Man who Spoiled the Music.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE. By FREDERICK BRETT.

WITH BOTH OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA IN ONE BOOK.

"It was a happy thought to arrange Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's well-known tract, 'The Man who Spoiled the Music,' as a service of song; and in this new form it is issued, in a handsome quarto costing only fourpence, by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. There is a happy blending of quaint humour and genuine pathos in the story of poor Jack—'not a bad sort of man' but for one thing—drink; and the domestic tale that opens so sadly has a joyful ending. Many choice sacred lyrics are introduced; the music is arranged in each copy in both the old notation and tonic sol-fa; and there is certainly no temperance service of song containing more of the elements of popularity and usefulness."—Christian Leader, Feb. 25.

CONSUMPTION, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

READ

MR. CONGREVE'S NEW WORK,

SIXPENCE, POST FREE.
Or Large Edition (cloth) for 1s. 3d.

SIXTEENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION—CASE of a LITTLE BOY. "BOTH LUNGS DISEASED."

In June last I received a letter from Mrs. A———, of Leeds, and statement of her little boy's case.

Six months' hooping-cough had left the child in a very weak state, with troublesome cough, very distressed breathing, pain in chest and side. These symptoms were followed by wasting of flesh all over the body and gradual loss of strength. Thrush (an ominous symptom) had appeared.

At this time medical report was given—that both lungs were diseased. "One doctor (the mother writes) has given little hope, and pronounced it 'Consumption.' Another has been consulted and said the same, and has given no hope of recovery; but (she adds) I hope you will be able to do my little boy good—nothing has yet."

In less than three weeks he began to mend. The mother reported:—"Better night's rest, thrush nearly disappeared, and sweating decreased."

In less than two months further improvement was manifest—"Cough better, appetite improved, gaining strength and flesh every day."

In a subsequent letter, the mother writes:—"Your medicine and liniment have quite cured our little boy. Everyone who saw him as he was is astonished at his recovery. Two doctors have examined him, and said he was perfectly sound. I am very grateful for your kindness, and pray that you may be long spared, and that the blessing of God may rest on your medicine. You can make use of this for the benefit of others."

---

* I regret to hear that since this case was prepared and sent for publication in December last, and several months after recovery from the disease of the lungs, the little patient was taken suddenly ill, and died from hæmorrhage of the stomach; no lung symptoms had manifested themselves —G. T. C., March 1, 1886.

Distress in Monmouthshire.—It is not in London only that the pinch of poverty is felt at this season. Pastor O. Tidman, Broad-street, Blaenavon, Mon., reports great distress among the miners in that district owing to the depression in trade. He earnestly asks for help in giving soup dinners, teas, clothing, &c., to these suffering people. Mr. T. M. Wintle, of the Christian Mission and Ragged Schools, Pontymoile, near Pontypool, Mon., says there is a bitter cry of distress in the northern parts of that county. He gives details of some painful cases of poverty and suffering, and pleads for the fellowship of our readers in providing soup dinners and other meals, as well as in distributing old clothing and shoes.

WESTWARD HO!

TO THE READERS OF "The Christian."

Dear Friends,

The great success which, under God's blessing, attended our Emigration movement last year has encouraged me to make yet further efforts to place out in the Dominion a further number of carefully trained and selected Boys and Girls during the present year.

Our enterprise opens for 1886 with great promise. I hope to send out at least 600 children, in three parties of 200 each, during the present season.

The first party of 200 boys will (d.v.) leave by the Parisian, Allan Line, on March 26; the second party, also consisting of 200 boys, will, I hope, leave in the second week in June; and the third party, of 200 girls, in the second week in July. As on former occasions, each of these parties will go out under the care of valued and experienced co-workers, who have year by year taken charge of similar contingents. They will go straight to our beautiful Home at Peterboro', Ontario, and from that place be distributed throughout the province to homes which will have been found for them through the agency of our Canadian Staff.

I would again impress upon all the readers of The Christian that the boys and girls I send to Canada are kept under our eye for years after they have been placed out; that both by visits and by letters we continue to inform ourselves of the thorough happiness and welfare of each child, and are swift to change its situation, removing it from one locality to another, if the circumstances or conduct of the employer seem at any time to demand such action.

That, spite the depression which undoubtedly obtains in most of the large cities of the Dominion, there should yet be a real demand for our boys and girls throughout the country, is the best possible proof that the Canadians are beginning to appreciate the quality of the emigrants we convey to their shores, and are satisfied that the work of TRAINING and PREPARING our children for useful lives out there has been done on this side in a thoroughly wise, practical, and Christian fashion.

No one can read the incidents given in the March issue of Night and Day, page 44, under the head of "Canadian Notes" (vide), which illustrate the benefits conferred upon the little Emigrants themselves by their change of scene, without feeling that this movement is one of the grandest that could well be devised for the benefit of all concerned: this country so overcrowded—that country so sparsely populated; the overburdened ratepayers here—the harassed farmers there, who cannot obtain useful labour except at exorbitant prices; the starving multitudes here, for whom there is no ray of hope while they continue here—and the happy, because useful, lads and lasses transported to fertile regions over there, full of abundance of food for those who, uncontaminated by the vices of the adult, are prepared to enter upon a life of real industry, cheered all the way along by a prospect of independent comfort.

If my lay sermon has any particular application, it is in the wonderful fact that £8 10s. is the magic wand by which so great a change can be achieved in the experience of one poor lad or orphan girl. That sum amply suffices to pay for everything (except the training here)—comfortable outfit of clothing (3 suits)—good box—railway fare to Liverpool—ocean passage to Quebec—railway journey to our Peterboro' Home, with a small margin over to recoup us for a brief stay at our Canadian Distributing Home before being sent out to the situation obtained by my agents on the other side.

Thus, to emigrate the whole 600 children will cost at this rate £5,100, and I appeal confidently to our wisest and most thoughtful co-workers for

A SPECIAL GIFT TOWARDS THIS BENEFICENT EMIGRATION FUND.

One Hundred trained lads or girls can be settled for life in Canada for £850, or Fifty for £425.

Sometimes I envy the possessors of wealth the grand opportunities which their money gives them of effecting so much good. Only to think that by the expenditure of, say, £102, twelve young children without a friend in life here, may be settled down in as many respectable Christian homes in Canada, where they will soon learn to forget the sorrows and deprivations of their early years, is enough to make any heart hopeful as to the future of myriads of little ones otherwise so sad and hopeless!

Your faithful Co-worker amongst Christ's Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

P.S.—Please cross Cheques, P.O.O.'s, or Postal Orders, "London & South Western Bank."

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

AMONGST the notable living preachers of the Wesleyan Methodist community there is one who occupies an almost unique position. Full of Cymric eloquence, a close reasoner, a scholar, a fearless exposer of wrong, and a scathing denunciator of evil-doers, HUGH PRICE HUGHES is a living force such as the world sorely needs.

Born at Carnarvon in 1847, he is now in the full maturity of manhood. His father is a doctor, and occupies an honoured position in that town. He is magistrate; coroner; chairman of the Board of Guardians, School Board, Grammar School; and we know not what else besides. Young Hugh was educated at Swansea. There, as a schoolboy, he came under deep conviction of sin, and realised that Christ was his Saviour. The boy had been christened Hugh after his grandfather, Hugh Hughes, who in his day was a famous Wesleyan minister in the Welsh Church. And, for his grandfather's sake, as well as for his own, the subject of this sketch can always count upon a Welsh welcome whenever he speaks within the Principality. Mr. Price Hughes believes devoutly that much of the blessing God has given him is owing to his grandfather's fervent prayers on his behalf.

Whilst at school, the following characteristic correspondence passed between Young Hugh and his father:—"My dear Father,—I think I ought to be a Wesleyan minister. Your affectionate Son." To this letter Mr. Hughes, senior, replied as briefly:—"My dear Boy,—I would rather that you should be a Wesleyan minister than Lord Chancellor. Your affectionate Father." The boy was intended for the bar, which explains his father's remark. No doubt Hugh would have been a lawyer had he not become an out and out Christian when a lad. That changed the whole bent of his mind.

After leaving school, the youth went to Richmond Theological College, where at the time the learned Dr. Moulton, now Head Master of Leys College, Cambridge, was Classical Tutor. Under the care of this distinguished man, Mr. Hughes duly graduated at the University of London. His first appointment on circuit was at Snargate-street Chapel, Dover. The whole course of Mr. Hughes' after-career was moulded by what occurred at the preaching of his first sermon; for twenty conversions followed it. At college the young student had set his face against "Revivalism"—had, in fact, laughed it to scorn. He went in for intellectual culture, and for sermons composed with an eye to rhetorical effects, and so on. But God had marked out a higher calling for his young servant. In the words of Mr. Hughes himself, "The result of that sermon seemed to settle my whole career. It was like turning a switch on the railway; it seemed to be only a little thing, but it sent me on the evangelistic line at once."

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

At Dover Mr. Hughes first threw himself into the Temperance cause, for which he has ever since so manfully fought. At college his sharp tongue was the terror of his fellow-students who advocated Temperance principles, but these good men he now numbers amongst his best friends. When he got into actual contact with the life of the people, many of his doctrinaire theories were knocked on the head for ever. He saw what a curse drink was in Dover. He read physiological books which treated upon the effects of alcohol on the human system, so that he might be armed with the strongest of arguments. As time went on, he was appointed one of the secretaries of the Temperance Committee of the Wesleyan Conference. In that capacity he proposed a series of important resolutions at the Bristol Conference, which finally committed the Wesleyan Church to the Temperance movement. But this happy result was largely due to such men as George Maunder, Charles Garrett, Dr. Stephenson, of the Children's Home, and others. Mr. Hughes prepared, with Mr. Garrett, the Methodist Temperance Hymn Book, and when Mr. Marshall Randles resigned, Mr. Hughes became senior Temperance Secretary, which office he vacated at the last Conference. He was also one of the editors of The Methodist Temperance Magazine, and has been elected a vice-president of the United Kingdom Alliance.

After staying the full term at Dover, he went to the Brighton Circuit, from there to Tottenham, and next to Barry-road, East Dulwich. In each district he stayed the full time allowed—three years. Something of the great work he was permitted to do at Barry-road has been published in The Pall Mall Gazette under the heading "Centres of Spiritual Activity." Oxford was the next sphere to which Mr. Hughes was appointed. In connection with his ministry in this far-famed seat of learning, a remarkable revival of spiritual religion broke out. In the course of a few months there were 1500 professed conversions, and Methodism assumed a position in Oxford which it had never held before. It was at that time, too, that Mr. Moody went to Oxford. Whilst residing in that classical city, an incident in Mr. Hughes' life occurred which brought him into still greater prominence. He had to speak at an annual breakfast meeting of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society in London. A great debt had been resting on it for some years, and all the money had been raised except £8000. It suddenly occurred to Mr. Hughes that the whole amount should be subscribed "right away." He suggested it, and, amidst a scene of the greatest enthusiasm, £8000 was given or promised on the spot. The report of this meeting was translated into nearly every language in which Wesleyan missionaries preach, and the Lord mightily blessed that collection all the world over. Some little time afterwards Mr. Hughes raised £1000 at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, in the same unpremeditated manner, and for the same Society. At that moment there was a missionary struggling for very life in the Transvaal, although Mr. Hughes did not, of course, know of it. A large native church had been formed amidst much persecution, and without any aid from home. In time the news reached this country, and part of that £1000 saved the struggling church in the Transvaal.

Mr. Hughes had been so successful in starting missions in the country towns that a proposal was made that he should give up circuit work altogether, and be an evangelist, like Mr. Aitken and others. A compromise was effected, however, and a young minister was sent to assist him at Oxford during his last year, so that he might have more time for itinerant mission work.

In 1884, having been appointed once more to London, he was approached with reference to starting a newspaper. The result was, that he undertook the conduct of The Methodist Times, the first issue of which appeared on January 1, 1885. With that journal his name is now prominently identified. His ministerial and Parliamentary friends supported him royally, and, so far, he has had every reason to be thankful. He seems, indeed, to be one of those men who succeed in whatever they undertake. Mr. Hughes' declared objects in his paper were three: (1) to represent the younger generation of Methodists; (2) to show sympathy with the working-classes and with all their interests, recognising the political and social changes that are taking place; and (3), to find a suitable channel through which educated young Methodists at our universities and elsewhere might be brought into friendly relations with the masses of the people. It is significant to note, in this connection, that Mr. Henry Broadhurst, M.P., a most earnest Christian man, and lately appointed Under-Secretary for the Home Department, is a member of Brixton Chapel, of which Mr. Hughes is the minister.

The valiant attitude taken by Mr. Hughes in the pages of The Methodist Times in relation to the Social Purity Movement is well known, but his practical interest in this subject is not a thing of yesterday. Quite fifteen years ago he was a worker for Repeal, and edited a little paper called The Protest. As soon as Mr. Stead had spoken out in The Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Hughes boldly and fearlessly backed him up with all the force of earnest conviction, expressed in trenchant language. In season and out of season Mr. Stead has found a faithful and powerful friend in his fellow-editor, Mr. Hughes.

Brixton Chapel, which, as we have said, is the scene of Mr. Hughes' present pastorate, is one of the most important Wesleyan churches in London. Its energy and resources are almost phenomenal. During the last fifteen years its members have spent £80,000 in schools, chapels, and other buildings in the neighbourhood. The spiritual blessing on the place has been commensurate with its material prosperity. According to Methodist custom, Mr. Hughes will have to resign the pastorate of his church in 1887. A great scheme has been developing in which he is likely, if God spare him, to bear a leading part. It has taken the form of a West-end Wesleyan Mission, a sort of Methodist Mildmay. Of this projected Mission, our enterprising and devoted friend will be the controlling spirit, and he will have as a colleague the equally gifted Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. Such a collocation ought to bring about results that will be memorable not only in the history of Wesleyan Methodism, but in the religious annals of the first city in the world.

Mr. Hughes is a born leader of men, and the effect of his strong personality upon his denomination is already being felt for good far beyond the confines of these isles. In his domestic relations Mr. Hughes is most happy, for in Miss Barrett, daughter of the late Rev. Alfred Barrett, Governor of Richmond College, he found a sympathising companion, a loving wife, and a judicious "other self." Of his partner in life, a ministerial friend has remarked, "No wonder Hughes gets on so well—with such a wife!"

English Sailors in France.—I am about to open a small reading-room for the English sailors frequenting this port. The rent is paid up to Michaelmas. I am in great need of English books, periodicals, some newspapers, &c., but have not as yet the means of purchasing them. Perhaps if Christians knew the need they would be glad to send any periodicals, after having read them. Thomas Ph. Sinel.

Trouville, Deanville, Calvados.

Dr. Heywood Smith.—Our readers will be glad, says The Methodist Times, to hear that a capital house has been secured for Dr. Heywood Smith's private hospital. It will accommodate about thirty-five patients, will be well appointed in every respect, and will, it is hoped, be ready for patients about the middle of April. We believe a little more money is still needed in order to complete the enterprise, and we hope that those of our readers who are able, but have not yet subscribed to the fund, will do so. Then, when all is ready, we must all do what we can to recommend lady patients to Dr. Heywood Smith.

A WEST-END MISSION SCHEME.

Since the foregoing sketch of the busy and fruitful life of Mr. Price Hughes was penned, he has been interviewed by The Pall Mall Gazette, on the subject of the West-end Mission Scheme referred to. Mr. Price Hughes said to his interrogator:—

In going about the East-end I have been particularly impressed with two things. One is the great success of Mr. Charrington's Mission, where thousands of the people gather to hear the evangelical Gospel. The other thing which impressed me was the useful work done by my friends at Toynbee Hall, where cultured university men come into direct contact with the poor, and place their culture at their service, devoting their time to all kinds of social work. But, for obvious reasons, the work that is done by Mr. Charrington is not done at Toynbee Hall, and that which is accomplished at Toynbee is left undone by Mr. Charrington. Now, I see no reason why the two should not be combined. And besides combining social and evangelistic work, we must have a great centre, something like the Mildmay Institution, from which agencies and influences would radiate over the whole of London, and even the country. In short, we want to make it a central station where all kinds of religious and social work will be originated, and enthusiasm generated for every good cause. We shall deal more largely with the physical needs of the people and with the social aspects of Christianity than is the case at Mildmay. We don't want to be too individualistic.

Somewhat unexpectedly the Committee have decided that our first great centre ought to be the West-end of London. In the first place, there is a great Methodist wilderness there, and we must begin to break ground. Rev. J. E. Clapham, the greatest expert in statistics that Methodism has ever produced, after going carefully through the returns of the Registrar General, finds that in the district bounded by Great Queen-street in the east, Bayswater in the west, Westminster at the south, and Hinde-street in the north, there is a population of 300,000 absolutely untouched by Methodist agencies. Now, if we take the population of the country as a whole, we provide for one-tenth of that population, so that in the district of the West-end of London we ought, upon that basis, to provide sittings for 30,000 people. This area includes nearly the whole of the aristocracy who have in no way been reached by us. This is not as it should be.

Then, again, look at the thousands of young men and women from the country who live in the great business establishments of the West, and the masses of working men who cluster about that district. Last of all, I suppose there are in this district more "fallen" women, as some people call them—"knocked-down girls" I prefer to say—than in any other part of the world. And this will be one of the most important parts of our work. There is a saying among the officers of the Guards that when you go east of Temple Bar you leave vice behind. I am not prepared to endorse that entirely, but I am sure that if you exclude the sailor section of the community at the East-end, there is very little ordinary systematic vice there. We propose to establish organisations of ladies and rescue homes to both prevent and reclaim. Our social agencies will include recreative classes, evening homes for girls, social purity societies, servants' registry offices, a labour bureau, where working men may obtain employment, and of course we shall have on one evening a week a high-class concert, and in other ways we shall seek to develop a taste for music. On Sunday afternoons, too, I hope we shall have popular lectures or addresses of an anti-secularist character where we shall teach the working men that Jesus Christ is their best friend.

We shall want a lot of money to carry out this scheme, but we shall get it. We want at least £50,000 to start with, and if the readers of your paper will provide that modest sum in the next fortnight I shall be delighted to hear from them.

When I was asked to undertake the work it was borne in upon me, as the Old Puritans would say, that I ought to accept the invitation if I could get Rev. Mark Guy Pearse to co-operate with me. He is a popular and a saintly man, and his works have attracted very great attention even outside Methodism. Somewhat to my astonishment, and I believe also to his own, he was led to throw himself heartily into the undertaking. There are many other ladies and gentlemen who are willing to join us in various forms of the work. In The Freeman there is a notice of our new movement, which winds up with these significant words: "We heartily wish our devoted brethren God-speed. We are not jealous of their advantages, but we do envy them this power of concentrating all the forces of a splendid organisation upon this dark blot in our social and religious life." Now that exactly describes our present position, because for the first time in our history as a Church we propose to concentrate all the forces of our organisation upon this particular spot; and I have only one more word to say before you leave, which is this: we have no sectarian object in view. The Mission will be, in the true sense of the word, catholic. We do not want to make denominational capital out of it, but the undertaking will be animated by John Wesley's well-known axiom, 'The friends of all and enemies of none,' and we quite adopt his equally favourite saying, 'I wish to make an alliance offensive and defensive with every soldier of Christ.' So I am confidently anticipating that ladies and gentlemen connected with other Churches, members of Parliament, and journalists, and all kinds of people whose Christian friendship I enjoy will co-operate with us in our new work.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—3.

A chiel's amang ye takin' notes,
And, faith, he'll prent them.

THE chiel is Edward E. Meakin, editor of The Morocco Times, published at Tangier. This paper was commenced in July, 1884, and issued monthly for fourteen numbers, when, on account of its uncompromising tone, the printer received an intimation that his co-operation was disagreeable to our British representatives. Mr. Meakin on this determined to fit up a printing office in his own house; and, after months of waiting for material, he and his son brought out a number of the paper printed by themselves. The young man knew nothing of printing, but with genuine English tenacity and perseverance mastered the difficulties in his way. With the assistance of an engineering friend he put up the printing machine, and with the aid of his mother and sister, and occasional help from a compositor when not engaged elsewhere, he set up the types.

Editorship was as new a function to the father as printing to the son; but necessity is the mother of invention; and the necessity in this case arose from the oppression of the native Government, and the intrigues of a few European residents. Here are two examples of the latter: (1) a little while before our visit the Austrian consul had been ousted from his office through charges which have since been disproved; (2) in the same steamer with us from Gibraltar to Tangier was the American consul of Cadiz, who had been deputed by his Government to inquire into some complaints from the same quarter against the American consul at Tangier. This cabal raised the indignation of the majority of the American and European citizens, who made such a demonstration as summarily disposed of the disgraceful intrigue.

With regard to the oppression of the natives, when a man gets rich, some one in power gets up some bogus charge against him, and puts him in prison, where he is kept, until he buys himself out, sometimes with the loss of everything.

Mr. Meakin takes up the cause of the oppressed, and day after day I saw at his house those who had come, in true Eastern fashion, with a present of eggs, or fowls, or other things, to seek help from this family of "soldiers enlisted to fight 'gainst the wrong." The presents are not accepted, but help, if possible, is never refused. As I listened to Moors, whose relatives were in prison for no crime, and heard stories of oppression of men of other nationalities, I could not help drawing a mental parallel between the Patriarch of Uz and my fellow countryman, whose aid these oppressed people sought.

> I delivered the poor that cried,
> The fatherless also, that had none to help him.
> The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me,
> And I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy.
> I was eyes to the blind,
> And feet was I to the lame.
> I was a father to the needy:
> And the cause of him I knew not I searched out.
> And I brake the jaws of the unrighteous,
> And plucked the prey out of his teeth.

Mr. Meakin is a kindred spirit of men like Wm. Wilberforce and Wm. Lloyd Garrison, of William Thomas Stead and Hugh Price Hughes. His excellent wife is a daughter of the late Samuel Budgett (the Rev. William Arthur's "Successful Merchant"), and his children are of like spirit with their parents. As Northern Africa, with its great possibilities, becomes more developed by Christianity, civilisation, and commerce, it will owe not a little to the fearless editor of The Morocco Times, which we recommend all interested in that country to procure. Three shillings, remitted to the office at Tangier, will secure it, prepaid, for twelve months.

In 1871, Mr. G. Maw, F.G.S., visited the Shelluh country, and this is what he found there:—

> We have heard much of the arbitrary exactions of the Sultan, an instance of which comes under our notice in this remote valley of the Atlas. After the usual visits to Dr. Hooker for medical relief, a number of women rush into our house, bringing a live sheep as a present to the Hakim, which they immediately kill in the apartment I had appropriated as a bed-room. Nine men belonging to this and an adjacent village are in prison at Marocco for an alleged arrear of taxes. The women with the sheep are their wives and daughters who have come to petition Dr. Hooker to intercede with Governor El Grawy (Governor of the Atlas) for the liberation of the men in prison, which he, of course, willingly promises to do. They leave two Arabic letters on the subject of their captive relatives, and kiss us on the knee as they pass out.
>
> One of the most striking features in the condition of the country is the absence of any political status in the mass of the population. The soil is nominally owned by the Sultan. There is no hereditary nobility; all offices are directly deputed from the Sultan's sovereign will; and there is not even the shadow of any of the rights of citizenship. The natural strength of the nation is thus isolated from the governing power, which, weak at its centre, grows weaker and weaker in its outlying deputies. It is not, therefore, surprising to find that all the elements of good government are wanting, and that whether taxes have to be collected, or crime suppressed, it is only by the infliction of cruel punishments, and the exercise of despotic tyranny, and petty intriguing, resorted to by all in power from the Sultan down to his meanest official.

But this was fifteen years ago, perhaps things have changed for the better in these progressive days. Not at all. In December last, a correspondent of The Daily News, at Mogador, sent the following shocking narrative of the present state of this barbarous country, within a week of our own shores:—

SLAVE MARKETS IN MOROCCO.

> In the interior there are slave markets everywhere. The traders take care to feed their slaves well before offering them for sale. The buyers examine the slave's limbs, eyes, and mouth; they make him run, and see what weight he can carry, just as if he were an animal. If the slave is a woman between 15 and 25 years of age, the examination takes more time and is much more humiliating. Her limbs, her eyes, her mouth, her figure, are first scrutinised, and then she is brutally inspected. Those who have already had children, or who give hopes of being fruitful, are naturally preferred, and fetch as high as 125 to 150 francs (£5 to £6). Virgins are eagerly sought after, at prices ranging from 200 to 300 francs. This sum is a large one for Morocco, but to obtain it the slave traders do not care what humiliations these poor girls of from eight to fourteen have to endure in presence of buyers, and often before the notaries or the judge. To form an idea of this disgraceful traffic (at the gates of Europe) you have only to attend any of the fairs and see how farmers and butchers examine horses and cattle.
>
> Negro boys from eight to ten years of age attract still more attention. Those from Foulahs and Bambara, near Timbuctoo, are always preferred, and fetch generally from 150 francs to 250 francs. The caravans generally take forty-five days to perform the journey from Timbuctoo to Souss, the frontier of Morocco. They are frequently attacked on the way by independent tribes, who carry off negroes as well as the articles bartered—say ostrich feathers, gold dust, and ivory. The caravans are got up annually, in December, at Fez, Morocco, and Elegue (in the Souss country) by Morocco merchants (Tadjers), who are noted slave-traders. These caravans go to Timbuctoo, where negroes are purchased in exchange for cotton and other goods, and they return to Morocco, the slaves being chained together by the neck, half of them often perishing on the way from hunger, thirst, fatigue, and bad treatment. The boys and young girls, being of most value, are placed on the camels, and are better cared for. The "Amoo Gheer," or great slave fair, is held half-yearly at a large town seven days' journey south of Mogador. At this fair from 2000 to 5000 slaves are sold or exchanged, and as a heavy tax is levied on all sales, it yields a large revenue to the Sheitch of that district, as well as to his Shereefian Majesty the Sultan. At the fondouks, or slave markets, where slaves are sold, the most distressing scenes are constantly witnessed of children being torn from their mothers, and wives separated from their husbands, their cries and protests finding no echo in the inhuman hearts of either their sellers or purchasers.
>
> We ask, how long can such a state of things be permitted to last, at the very gates of Europe? How is it that Great Britain, which has made such sacrifices, and has laboured so constantly to put down slavery and the slave-trade in most parts of the world, takes no interest in what is going on in Morocco, where her influence can, if she chooses, be exercised for so much good.

The reply to this most important question is, that so long as the British Government is represented by men of the present stamp, so long will the barbarism of Morocco go on unchecked, so far as England is concerned. It is foolish to go into a country for a week or two, or a month or two, and suppose you know a greal deal about it. But a few days in Morocco are enough to teach anyone that the British representatives at Tangier do not command the respect of their countrymen, and that these seek the aid of the American Consulate, rather than of their own minister or consul, for the protection of their interests. Christian philanthropy must move public opinion at home, and public opinion must act mightily upon the Foreign Office, if things are to be improved in the interests of the oppressed tribes of Morocco, or of British residents.

"An English resident in Morocco" wrote to The Times on January 9:—

> The political question as regards Morocco lies as follows. The integrity of the Empire has been up to the present maintained by four or five of the great Powers of Europe, because each one is jealous of the other's possessing a territory which would command the Straits of Gibraltar. England in particular has always consistently supported the Moors, and only for the determined attitude manifested by her, and lately by Germany also, the northen portion of Morocco would before this have passed into other hands. But in return for the protection thus extended it has been intimated to the Sultan that he is expected to throw open his territories to the markets of Europe, and that its enormous dormant wealth must be utilised, not only for the benefit of European energy and intelligence, but for the advancement of the natives themselves.
>
> It is much to be hoped that the English and German Ministers will be firm in the demand which it is supposed they are making as to the free sale of land, and that the iniquitous restrictions on commerce which seem to have been specially contrived to impoverish the country, may be abolished.

It will be of no use to rely on our representatives at Tangier. If any improvement is to be made, it must be commanded by the Government at home, or it will not be done.

It must be added, however, that the French civilisation of the adjoining country, Algeria, does not make missionary operations a particle easier but rather the reverse. The Gospel makes quite as much way in Morocco as in Algeria, where the vices of European civilisation have been grafted on those of African Mohammedanism.

R. C. MORGAN.

A PRESSING SOCIAL QUESTION.

SIR,—The poverty arising from the over-population of London and other of our large towns is a great practical question, requiring not so much relief by charity direct (as by gifts, or Poor Law operations), or by charity indirect (as by public works, which can only act if used alone as temporary alleviations, and in the end aggravate the evil), but by remedial action, on definite lines, perseveringly applied.

A parallel drawn from land reclamation may clearly, I think, indicate one of the salient features of the case. When it is proposed to drain a marsh, the first necessary operation is to divert all outside waters from coming into the land desired to be dried. When the foreign element is turned aside, one has only to deal with the water proper to the marsh itself. It is evident that the over-population of our large towns is not alone from natural increase, but also by the influx of large numbers of persons from country districts and abroad; and it is absolutely vital to the question to find means to limit this influx, while the circumstances are so grave and dangerous as to warrant measures which may interfere with the personal liberty so dear to every Briton.

A very drastic remedy is necessary to prevent rural and village populations from flocking to the towns; but it is simple, viz., by subdividing holdings of land, and giving the people a proprietary interest in it, by which the whole of the rural population, and more, would find full employment. I grant that the relative prices of meat and grain have for many years made pasture on many soils yield a greater pecuniary return than tillage; and, indeed, some inferior soils can only be tilled at a loss, as I and many farmers have proved to our cost; but my heart has bitterly burned within me, when, returning from the peasant culture of the Continent, and their frugal sufficiency, to the misery of East London, and then travelling by rail—say, by the South Western—over an almost depopulated country, pastoral in the main, to think what bone, muscle, health, and circumstances favouring morality, lie unapplied in the unturned sods and unbreathed fresh air of millions of remuneratively cultivable acres.

I do not favour the modern farming of steam ploughs and labour-saving machinery, which require large holdings and capital; for what is wanted is the nation's wealth, which is men, healthy and moral, not its accumulations of gold or its extravagances of luxury, heartless and indifferent to the welfare of the race.

This is a question which is coming to the front: it ought to do so. Christianity should remove injustices, and if it fails in this we may be sure they will be removed, perhaps at a heavy cost to those who have failed to do what our Divine Head has taught. Regarded from the humanitarian point of view, how admirable for the social commonwealth was the land law established in Israel by Divine command. First divided by lot, it was inalienable, and inherited by all the sons; thus guarding against the disinheritance which folly, excess, misfortune, or the greed of others bring upon so many when there are no restrictive laws. In Servia, the country whence I write, there is a similar law, rendering it illegal for a peasant proprietor to alienate his last five acres of land, neither can it be sold for debt; and the consequence is that there are next to no poor.

Now for the second point, that of foreigners. It is a very difficult question, that of excluding them, on the ground of reprisals, and also on account of the concurrence of manufacturing interests requiring the best and cheapest labour procurable; nevertheless the existing state of things, whereby immense numbers of foreigners work in our country, and add immensely to the over-population, must cease or be modified. It is not that I do not care for foreigners as well as for our own countrymen, but administration must be kept in view, and each country must see to its own subjects.

As to trades requiring physical strength and skill, no doubt our town populations cannot in some cases supply men in sufficient numbers. Last summer I read that Italians, even in the North, in the construction of the Forth bridge, were employed in the submerged caisson excavations; and it is a melancholy fact that the bone and muscle of our town populations, compares unfavourably with the physique of most European nationalities. But there is no good reason why, in intelligence and skill, honesty, perseverance, or self-control, our people should not be able to do all that foreigners now do in their place, or if they cannot do it, then they may be trained to it, and, in fact, must be so.

This opens a question of great importance, which, if you think this letter worth publishing, I propose to treat in another communication—viz., the capacity of our workpeople for their employments.

FAITHFUL AND TRUE.—2.

A YOUNG barrister had been some time fully qualified to practise, but he had no work to do. An elderly Christian man was one day speaking to him on the point. He asked his young friend if he ever prayed about it. "I always pray to God to guide me and bless me," he replied. "But," he said, "you ought to pray for parchments, pray for parchments." The young man took his advice, and earnestly asked God to send him work to do. Within a few weeks he received his answer. It was not parchments, but it was an important position under Government, and this led to other work, and he never afterwards was left without having his time fully occupied.

A clergyman was charged with never having paid a large sum of money—over a thousand pounds. Through the most culpable negligence, the lawyer through whose hands the money had passed had delayed obtaining the legal receipt until the matter was forgotten, and then a long time afterwards the suit was instituted. There seemed no means of avoiding a second payment, but till the trial came on prayer was offered continually that in some way the truth might come out, and the wicked plot might be detected. The lawyer who had paid the money was dead, but only a few days before the trial a young man picked up in the office a soiled piece of paper. This was a temporary receipt for a part of the money. When the plaintiff in court swore that he had never received a farthing of the money, this piece of paper was held up, and he was asked if he had ever seen it before. He was obliged to confess that it was his own handwriting, and upon this his counsel threw up the case, and a verdict was given for the defendant. Here was prayer answered in a most unlikely way, and truth and justice vindicated.—Rev. G. Everard, in "The Quiver" for March.

Bishop Lightfoot preached on Sunday week two sermons in Edinburgh. In the afternoon he addressed himself to students in St. Thomas's Church, Rutland-place. Though more than a thousand gained admission, many failed to do so. The Bishop took for his text Hosea ii. 15. He showed how secret sin, even when no evident wrong is done to another person, cannot be indulged in without bringing a curse upon the soul of the guilty one, and also upon the community. He very powerfully brought out the nature of secret sin, and the conviction of it, and concluded what was almost a "White Cross" sermon with an earnest appeal to his hearers to rise into the higher life of consecration to Christ.

OUR YOUNG CITY TOILERS.

IT is difficult to imagine that we are living in Christian England, and in the nineteenth century when we read Sir John Lubbock's speech upon the introduction of his "Shop Hours Regulation Bill." The statements made by the proposer remind us of those urged by the noble-hearted men who succeeded in bringing about the passing of the Factory Act of 1833, and the later and better one of 1848; and the mere fact that in 1886 it is necessary to legislate in order to limit the hours of work of children and young persons in shops to twelve per day is by no means creditable to us.

Some of the evidence put forward by Sir John Lubbock was of an exceedingly painful kind, and valuable as showing what is the effect of the theories of the political economists when reduced to practice. Many girls affirmed that they began their day's labour at 8 or 8.30 a.m., and continued till 9.30 and 10 p.m., or till midnight on Saturdays, taking their meals as they best could and hurrying back to the shop. "Weary and depressed," "ready to sink," "dreadfully low and weak," "scarcely strength to undress," "my health is failing, and the doctor says I am in a consumption," "thoroughly worn out"—such are some of the remarks which perhaps charitably minded readers will be disposed to pardon, as not being quite unjust as coming from the lips of young girls after such prolonged toil. Christians will be disposed to make allowances for those of them who stated that they were on Sundays utterly unable to go to a place of worship until evening, and the consumptive ones not at all, their only thought being "to rest."

One would almost instinctively suppose that a measure such as this would meet with no opposition, but to do so would be to forget the economists with their stereotyped references to the inevitable working of the law of supply and demand. Already there has been opposition on the ground that it is "inexpedient to interfere with domestic industries," and that great caution is necessary before "giving scope to philanthropic intentions." We trust, therefore, that every Christian who can bring influence to bear upon our legislators, with regard to this measure, will do so in the interests of the children and girls who, in a Christian land, at present are being worked like slaves, or perhaps even worse, because they are not their employers' personal property.

A most aggressive Evangelistic Work, under the title of "The Holiness Army," is being carried on in the neighbourhood of Street, Somersetshire. Under the direction of S. H. Hodges it has gradually grown up during the last four years, six stations being now in existence. We aim, he says, to hold open-air and indoor meetings seven days a week, and fifty-two weeks in the year, calling upon sinners to repent and believe the Gospel. About two hours every Sunday morning are spent by our corps in the open-air. Many nights each corps holds two, three, and sometimes four meetings out of doors, and this by men who have worked hard during the day. Some of the most notorious drunkards in the different villages have been brought to Christ, and are now working for the salvation of others. Copies of the report of the mission may be had from S. Horatio Hodges, Street, Somersetshire; or Charles H. Robinson, Glastonbury.

Impostors.—We are desired by the authorities at Scotland Yard to caution our readers against "the proceedings of a woman, who calls at the residences of persons in answer to advertisements for servants, and who states that she has been put to considerable expense in travelling to London to answer the advertisement. She gives as a reference the name of some person alleged to be living at an address about twenty miles distant from the Metropolis, which has invariably been found to be fictitious, and thus succeeds in obtaining various sums of money to defray expenses." We have frequently warned our readers against this clever impostor, and are sorry to find that she has not yet fallen into the hands of the police.—A correspondent in Berlin sends to us copy of a letter from Rev. Dr. Shedd, Oroomah, Persia, cautioning friends in Europe against the devices of one Kasha Moshee, who represents himself as collecting funds for orphanages in Oroomah. Dr Shedd says he is the very prince of begging impostors.

LONDON DRUNKERIES.

"YOU mean public-houses, of course?" No; we do not. We refer to organisations so much more terrible even than public-houses that, compared with them, the latter are but retail establishments.

A correspondent, A. F. R., writes to us, giving us such facts respecting workmen's clubs as may make any Christian who weighs them shudder with horror. Many of us had thought that it would have been very difficult to discover a mightier engine for destruction than the ordinary London gin-palace, supported, as everyone of them is, by the annual destruction of scores and hundreds of lives. But something immeasurably worse is fast being established in London. Unspeakably bad as the gin-palace is, the door is always open to the city missionary. He is ever welcomed there. Moreover, the hours of sale, long as they are, are still limited. Most important of all, men go to the public singly or in small companies; there is no widespread organisation to bind them to the place of temptation, or to educate their minds in atheism, communism, and debauchery. For such wholesale destruction a new instrument must be found, and this we have in the workmen's club. Its doors are closed, so that no influence from without can reach it. As its hours are unlimited, it remains open long after midnight, and on Sundays. There is no check in the sale of strong drink. But, worst of all, it is an aggressive organisation of evil, a devil's church, in which men not only band themselves together for boozing and gambling, but by which also they become zealous for the propagation of communism and atheism. The soul is debauched and enslaved as well as the body.

Here are some of A. F. R.'s assertions:—It is an awful fact that young people are to be seen leaving these haunts of vice early in the morning. . . . Some of these places have a theatrical performance on Sunday morning. Women are admitted on various occasions during the week and on Sundays. . . . In the neighbourhood where I am labouring there are over thirty of these drunkeries, and nearly every week I find a new one open, and they are extending their borders in some way or other. The membership varies from 170 to 2000.

On looking down some of their quarterly balance-sheets I find that the bar takings of one of these places was £1331 in the three months, while at another, separated from the first by less than ten minutes' walk, they were £1351, yielding a profit of £406, or 43 per cent. This club showed an increase during the quarter of 500 members. A third quarterly balance-sheet gave £1600 as the takings for drink.

They are not contented to keep the contaminating influence to adults; for, to our amazement and sorrow, we find an item in one balance-sheet of seventy-three dozen toys for a children's party.

These facts prepare us for A. F. R.'s fearful statement:—"I am prepared to prove that one of these dens of boozing and gambling has destroyed the virtuous life of more young women, and brought into a mean and discontented Atheist life more men than any 100 public-houses in any part of London."

Strangers' Friend Society.—This Society gives no relief until, by full investigation, the real facts of each case have been satisfactorily ascertained. A great demand has been made of late for left-off clothing, &c., parcels of which may be sent to the Secretary, at the offices of the Institution, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. During the year nearly four thousand cases were relieved, but a far larger number of applications were received. The present number of visitors is 270, all of whom labour gratuitously.

BIBLE STUDIES.—9.

ANOINTING OF THE SPIRIT.

(1) Oil for the light (Exod. xxv. 6). "They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them: but the wise took oil" (Matt. xxv. 3, 4). "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. v. 14). "Arise, shine" (Isa. lx. 1). "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. iv. 6).

(2) Oil upon the meat offering (Lev. ii. 15). "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power" (Acts x. 38).

(3) Oil for anointing: (a) Prophet. "Elisha . . . shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room" (1 Kings xix. 16). "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy" (Joel ii. 28, 29). "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 4). "He will show you things to come" (John xvi. 13). "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things" (1 John ii. 20). (b) Priest (Lev. viii. 30). (c) King (1 Samuel xvi. 13). "Ye are a royal priesthood" (1Peter ii. 9). "He hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father" (Rev. i. 6). "He which hath anointed us is God" (2 Cor. i. 21).

(4) Oil for healing. "Pouring in oil and wine" (Luke x. 34). "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost" (John xiv. 26).

(5) Oil of joy. "God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows" (Ps. xlv. 7). "The oil of joy for mourning" (Isa. lxi. 3). "Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over" (Ps. xxiii. 5). "The kingdom of God is . . . joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. xiv. 17). "The fruit of the Spirit is . . . joy" (Gal. v. 22).

(6) Oil of separation (Lev. xxi. 10-12; x. 6, 7). Once anointed with the holy oil, the anointed ones could not, dared not, live as others. "Comeout from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing" (2 Cor. vi. 17). "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20).

(7) The land of promise was a land of oil-olive (Deut. viii. 8). The walk of faith is a walk in the Spirit. "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Gal. v. 25). "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18).

Streatham. JANET CLARK.

Greenock.—Mr. and Mrs. King have concluded a three weeks' mission here. Cooke's Circus was packed with an audience of at least 2200 on the three Sabbaths of their mission, and numbers were turned away. On week nights the Temperance Institute was always well attended, and scarcely a night passed without souls professing Christ. Mr. King's afternoon Bible Talks were well attended, and productive of blessing. Mrs. King's singing, and also three addresses which she gave produced a decided impression, and greatly helped the mission. On the last night of the work about 400 sat down to tea in the Temperance Institute. Addresses were given by Mr. Macphail, Mr. King, Rev. James Davidson, and others, while a great many testified to receiving blessing during the mission.

Homes for Working Girls in London.—Last Thursday afternoon a meeting for "prayer and praise for the blessings vouchsafed, during the year 1885, upon the work in connection with the Homes for the Working Girls of London," was held at Gordon House, Endsleigh-gardens, Tavistock-square. Canon Spence, vicar of St. Pancras, presided. Mr. John Shrimpton, the hon. director, gave a very interesting account of the year's work; the sympathy manifested on the behalf of young girls in London extended not only throughout England, but throughout the world, he having received letters to this effect from all parts. This fact was a cause of great thankfulness. The spiritual benefits received during the stay of the girls in the Homes had been very manifest. The affection entertained by the girls towards the superintendents was a gratifying feature of the work. A new Home had been taken in Baker-street. An appeal by the Countess of Aberdeen to the readers of The Girls' Own Paper for £1000 resulted in the collection of that sum. £2000 more was required to complete the purchase of the lease, repairs, and alterations, as well as the furnishing of the house.

CONCLUSIONS.

IT would take from life its pleasure,
It would take from life its light,
Rob our souls of real treasure,
Fill with pain and sore affright;

We should live in dreary waiting
For our life to ebb away
To a dark and endless chaos,
To a night without a day,

Could the infidel and sceptic
Rob us, Lord, of faith in Thee;
What a weary sterile desert,
What a blank this world would be!

We, no doubt, of pain and trial
Then, as now, should have our share;
But without one hope to cheer us,
Sunk in endless, deep despair!

Tell us, ye who spend your talents
Trying to eclipse the light,
Sowing seeds of moral darkness,
Turning day to darkest night,

If we doubt the love of Jesus,
And distrust our Father's hand,
What support have ye to offer?
Tell us, let us understand!

We have seen earth's brightest jewels
Turn to ashes in our grasp,
And our own heart's dearest idols
Snatched by death from our fond clasp!

Yet amidst the midnight darkness
Shone a ray of light afar;
'Twas the promise of the Saviour,
Like a bright and morning star!

We will yield our earthly treasures,
But we cannot, will not, part
From the faith that binds to heaven,
From the sun that warms our heart;

From the clasp so sure and steadfast
Of our ever-present Friend;
From the sympathy and comfort
Of the love that knows no end!

RHODA CARPENTER CLEWES.

Rev. W. H. Aitken visits Cambridge this week. Great and widespread interest, says The Record, is felt in his mission, among seniors as well as juniors.

Homes for the Aged Poor.—Eleven new inmates were received during last year; but 70 applicants were reluctantly refused admission through lack of funds. The sixteenth report gives the addresses of the various Homes, to which visitors are cordially invited every afternoon. Gifts of grocery for the use of the sick, also old linen and clothes, will be thankfully received by Miss Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E. Supplies are needed for the Nursing Fund, the addition of the two Homes during the past two years having brought it to a low condition. There is no expense of office or Secretary; Miss Harrison's work is a labour of love.

Nursery for Homeless Infants, Bristol.—More than one hundred babies and fifty mothers have been admitted since the Nursery was opened, while many have had to be refused. We have been obliged, says the report, to overdraw our account at the bank—£150—to pay the tradesmen to end of year. With a larger income these innocent, deeply wronged, little outcasts could be retained for a much longer period, and then placed in good homes. Miss Louisa Marriott is the Secretary and Treasurer, and the address of the Home is Old-park, St. Michael's-hill, Bristol. The young mothers get good training and wise counsel while in the Home, and generally do well in service on leaving. Visitors will be welcomed.

Sheffield, Y.M.C.A.—A social tea and conversazione was lately held in connection with this association. Mr. M'Millan, of Buffalo (U.S.A.) Y.M.C.A. gave an interesting address, in the course of which he referred to the labours of Bishop Wm. Taylor in San Francisco, and the great moral change which had been effected amongst the people there as the result of his efforts. The association with which he is identified in Buffalo, New York State, secured a bilding af its own at a cost of £40,000. He considered there ought to be a building of the kind in connection with the Sheffield Association, and he thought the young men themselves might do a great deal towards providing one. He should be glad to aid a fund for the purpose by a donation of £200. Mr. Henry Thorne, in an address, said they would be glad to know that the work of the association in the North Midland district was progressing favourably on all sides.

THE JUDGMENT TO COME.

Address by Rev. Canon GIRDLESTONE,

At the last Meeting of the Mildmay Advent Conference.

I DESIRE by the help of God to concentrate your attention on two or three points, bearing upon our Lord's judgment. I am not going to say a word about the time, or about the place, or about the consequences. I want to speak rather about the effect, about the person concerned, and about the principles upon which the judgment will be carried on. I desire to do this entirely from God's Word, because there is absolutely no information whatever on this subject except what we can find there. If I should tax your patience in some degree, by referring to passages of Scripture, I will try to do so in such a way that you may pursue the topic at home rather than that you should pursue it here on the spot.

Let me first bring before you the word "judgment." Let us get a clear idea of what it means. There are in the Old Testament three Hebrew words very frequently used for the word "judgment." One means to arbitrate; another means to decide a case, or to fix a destiny—that is the word used in the very important chapter, Daniel vii. 10, 22, 26, three most important verses, bearing upon the destiny of the saint, and of the adversary of the Great King. It is important to notice these three verses, for this reason, that they bear upon two very important passages in the New Testament, one of which is in 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3, where Paul says to the Corinthians, "Know ye not that ye shall judge the world? . . . Know ye not that ye shall judge angels?" And again it bears upon Rev. xx., where we read that judgment is given to the saints. I think in both of those passages there is a decided reference back to Daniel vii.

But I want you to notice that there is a third word for "judgment" in the Old Testament, a word which seems to have a totally different meaning. It marks the government of Israel under the Judges. It signifies government, rule, almost salvation at times. It is a word used in such a passage as this, "Judge me, O God;" "Plead my cause;" "The Lord shall judge in righteousness." You will find the word in Psalm lxxxii., which is entirely a psalm about judging; you will find it again in Psalm xxxv. 23, 24, and in other passages, where it signifies what I think we may call the moral government of God. The righteous administration, which is manifestly a very different thing from the fixing of men's destinies, or the decision of men's cases; it goes much further. Sometimes you find the two words side by side—it is the second and third I refer to, as in Psalm lxxxii. 2.

Now, of these three words, it is the second which seems to me to be brought forward for our consideration to-night—the decision of the destiny of mankind. But I want you to see two or three other things before we come to it. First of all, there is such a thing as judgment between man and man; there is also judgment between God and man. You remember a passage in 1 Sam. ii. 25, "If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him: but if a man shall sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him?" These two cases are manifestly different. Which is the case now under consideration? Is it the decision of a matter between man and God, or is it a matter between man and man? I think you can answer that question.

Another thing we must observe—that judgment is sometimes a matter of the present, and it is sometimes a matter of the future. Do not suppose that God is holding his mind in a state of suspicion as to the condition, morally and spiritually, of any being. God knows at this moment the exact spiritual condition of every person. Although the award may be future, the estimate is present. So you must bear in mind the distinction between a present estimate and a final award. If you do not bear that in mind you cannot see clearly the difference between present justification and future judgment. Again, bear in mind this, that there is a distinction between the judgment of nations and the judgment of individuals. The Old Testament chiefly has to do with the judgment of nations; the New Testament chiefly with the judgment of individuals. Some people seem to think that the judgment of nations is entirely in the present and that nations have no part, as such, in the future; but there are chapters in Ezekiel and in other prophets which possibly point to another conclusion.

Once more, you must always, in studying this matter, carefully draw a distinction between judgment and condemnation. The word for "judgment" in the Hebrew never means condemnation; the two are totally distinct. That is an important fact. It is true that, when we come to the New Testament, sometimes we get the thought of condemnation coming in under cover of the word "judgment;" but you have to read carefully to see what you are reading about, to see whether it is God's estimate or judgment, or God's verdict, which in some cases may be condemnation. You remember a passage in John v. 29, where "life" and "judgment" are brought into contradistinction: some rise to life, some to judgment.

Well, all these matters may seem to you small minutiæ, dealing with words only. I cannot help that. If there were no words there would be no truths. Those words are God's words, and we are bound to weigh them carefully; and I do not think that we shall ever get at the whole truth unless we are far more careful in the study of the actual words of God than we have been in the past. Do not be afraid of studying words; do not be afraid of using a dictionary; do not be afraid of your concordance. How many young ladies there are who learn German, Italian, and French, who yet never think of learning Greek or Hebrew. Why not? They seem to think it is so alarming to enter upon a study where you have to pick up a new character; but it is no more a new character than music. Why, then, should they not learn it, and get God's Word in the original languages?

But now I come to the second point. Who comes under this word "judgment?" I answer, everyone. So far as God's Word makes it plain, every child of Adam is born under the law of judgment; that is to say, he is to have his destiny decided hereafter as surely as he is born under the law of gravitation, when he comes into this world. It is an absolute law under which human nature is born. Brute nature is not, I suppose; angelic nature may not be; but human nature is. After death, not annihilation, but judgment—that is a law of the race: all will be there. None can evade that any more than they can evade the law of gravitation; they are bound by the necessity of their creation, and of their constitution, to come under the judgment. It is in vain for a man to say to a rock, "Fall upon me, and hide me." The man must come forth from beneath the rock as surely as he must come forth out of the grave, or out of the depths of the sea.

Persons sometimes are a little perplexed here at the exceeding great number which make up mankind. We reckon mankind by hundreds of millions, and hundreds of millions have passed away, and we say, "What! Are all these persons to have their cases considered by a judge?" If you or I were to judge it would be a very serious matter, but when I think of the Being who calls all the stars by name, and when I think how many stars there are, I have no difficulty at all in this matter of judging. I feel that numbers which are so perplexing to me, are nothing at all to Him. He leadeth them all by their hosts, He draweth them out in myriads, He planteth them in space. What is it to Him to have a few hundred million souls pass before Him, and to have a verdict pronounced upon each?

And now I pass to the great question; Who is to be the Judge? I answer, that according to Scripture, from end to end, judgment is part of the Divine Sovereignty. Again and again you find passages in the Bible, such as Psalms xcvi. and xcvii., where you have the idea of God's sovereignty and God's judgment together. "Righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne." And this should give us confidence, because all our ideas of right and wrong are planted in us by Him who is to be the Judge of all mankind. The Author of man's conscience is to be man's Judge, and with that I rest satisfied.

I come to this wonderful statement in John v. 22: "The Father Himself judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." That gives me new light; that gives me something definite. Let me get a clear idea of the Son, and then I know something about my Judge. The Father—I cannot see Him; He is infinite; He is absolute—I cannot reach Him. I go forward—He is not there; I go backward—I cannot find Him; right and left—I cannot see Him. But He has committed all judgment to the Son; and I remember that Christ, when He was here upon the earth, once said, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Accordto the New Testament, according to our Lord's word, as well as the preaching of Peter to Cornelius, and of Paul to the Athenian philosophers, Christ is to be "the Judge of quick and dead." I turn to the Gospels and ask, What sort of a being is this who is going to judge the quick and dead? I very soon find, when I examine the Gospel, that there is a great deal of light on this question. I examine, for example, his dealings with the disciples, because I am sure that as He estimated disciples then He will estimate disciples hereafter. There are a great many disciples of Christ in this hall; have you ever considered how he estimated his disciples? He took their exact measure; He gave them their exact work to do; He appreciated their faith and their works at their due level; He bore very patiently, and with much long-suffering, with all their failures and faults. How that comes out again and again!

He regarded the multitude as sheep without a shepherd. His feeling towards them was a deep feeling of compassion; compassion prevailed over everything else. But then there were the leaders—the religious leaders—how about them? He unsparingly reads their character, and reads it out. He rebukes and exposes their avarice, their oppression, their hypocrisy, their prayers, their garments, their attitudes, their postures, and everything. Oh, can this be the same Jesus who wept over Jerusalem, who said, "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Thus we see great distinction and great distinctiveness in our Lord's judgment.

Now, if we put together the nature and character of the Son of God, and his dealings when upon the earth, I think we may frame to ourselves certain definite thoughts concerning his judgment of mankind. The first is this, that in the future judgment Christ is a thorough representative of his Father. His whole sympathies are with the Father. He says Himself, in John viii. 16: "My judgment is just, for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent Me." Take that, then, as your first step in this matter of judgment—that Christ's judgment adequately and thoroughly represents God's. It will be the embodiment of conscience; the last word of conscience to all mankind. Next, I think, you should put this, that there will be nothing personal in Christ's judgment, nothing vindictive because of anything that anyone has done against Christ. There is a wonderful verse in Luke xii., where He says: "Whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him." How many have spoken against the Son of Man unwittingly, without realising what they were doing, without really going against the Spirit. Now, whatever is purely personal against Christ will never be brought up by Christ the Judge. He will be in this respect absolutely unbiassed and unprejudiced.

The next point, which may be fully illustrated from the Gospels, is this, that in his judgment He will penetrate all disguises, see through all excuses, enter into the secret of every heart and of all motives. In Rev. i., his eyes are described as flames of fire, penetrating as fire penetrates, testing and sifting everything. That has a very important bearing upon this judgment, for this reason, that where we can only see in the human life a multiplicity of acts, some good, some bad, some indifferent. He can see the drift of the life; He can see whither a man is tending, where he is going. We cannot; consequently He can classify; we cannot. Who would like to take a single family and classify them for eternity? Christ sees the way everyone is going, and will divide them as easily as the shepherd divides the sheep from the goats. This classification is one of the great revelations of Scripture. We might have thought that men would have been divided into some dozens of groups—that there might be groups within groups; but there will be two great groups into which men will be divided hereafter.

Another point closely connected with this is that we feel a confidence in his absolute impartiality. Wealth, rank, education, and position are very dazzling and confusing to us. If a judge has a gentleman before him he has a considerable difficulty in passing judgment. He thinks that a verdict which would be right for a labouring man would act very severely against a well-dressed and highly educated man. But when you look at Christ you seem as if the line is all done away. Why? Because wealth, rank, and such like are not regarded by Him as virtues, but as trusts. As we think that all these things are trusts, and that every pound we possess we hold on trust for those who have not got it—naturally we see then we shall hardly be able to enter fully into the spirit of the New Testament. Oh, that England might awake to see that wealth is a trust! It is one of the great lessons of the New Testament.

The points that I have dwelt upon are chiefly in connection with Christ's Divine character; but there is one other matter. He will be on that day human as well as Divine, as He is now. There is a wonderful passage in John v. 27, where you read that God gives Christ authority to execute judgment, because He is the Son of Man. It is because He is human that He has to judge the human race; there is a link between the judge and those whose cause is to be decided. Yes, He has their nature. His own case is decided, and He has to decide the cases of others. The way in which we judge Christ in our lives now will have a great deal to do with the way in which Christ judges us when eternity dawns upon us.

There is another point which I desire to bring before you as simply as I can. I have been dealing with the word "judgment" and with Him who is to be the judge. What are the principles on which the judgment of God in Christ will be carried on. The first is contained in your paper. All men are to be judged "according to their works;" but what works? Have you ever asked yourselves, what are works? A work is the product of the free will. It may be an act, a thought; it may be permitting a single act of imagination to run on when you might stop it and turn it into another direction; or it may be what we call a word, which is the output of a thought. And thus you see works are the spring or the off-shoot of that wonderful gift, the human will; a man's character, at any moment, is the total result of all the actions of his free will. I know not by what method every man's case will be brought out in the next world, but I daresay it will be done very simply and very naturally. There will be no need of witnesses there, there will be no need of jurors there, there will be no lawyers there to make the worse appear the better cause; but every man will tell his own tale, perhaps in the twinkling of an eye. We are told that when men are drowning, very often their whole life comes in a series of images before their souls. Perhaps it will be so at the great day.

Works are to be tests; but remember that God does not count them, He weighs them. "The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by Him actions are weighed" (1 Samuel ii. 3). Who would like to weigh men's works? We should be very much deceived if any of us tried to weigh men's works. We should say, What scale are we to apply? There is a word here which helps us very much, and that is the word "faith." "For without faith it is impossible to please God." No works except those that proceed from faith are of the right sort. Thus, you see, I cannot separate between "works" and "faith." But there is another word which I find quite as essential—that is the word "love," because all duty lies in the word "love." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart . . . and thy neighbour as thyself." Hence I find works spring from faith, and faith works by love. I cannot, therefore, separate between works, faith, and love; there is a sort of trinity in unity.

But there is one other principle which I find, and a very important one, I think; that is, no case will be dealt with on a wholesale principle; everybody's case will be dealt with on a principle of equity. Have you ever thought how much this will tell in the great day of judgment? I mean to say, questions such as where a man was born, in what family, how he has been brought up, what opportunities he has had, what natural dispositions he possesses, what he has inherited at different times from his parents, what companionship he found, the environment, the heredity—these things which people discuss so much form very important factors in a man's character. Well, do not be afraid; Christ knows, and He will take them all into consideration. Read St. Matthew x., xi., and xii; see what is said in those chapters of Sodom and Gomorrah, Tyre and Sidon, Nineveh, and such like, and you will find yourself drifting towards a grand conclusion. Supposing the question were asked when and where you were born, one man says: "I was born in Tyre, and lived there a merchant long ago." Another says: "I was born in Sodom; I saw Lot go past, but never spoke to him; I lived in sin." Another says: "I was born in Chorazin; Jesus often walked about and taught, but He never did any good to me; I saw Him and heard Him speak, but went on my way." Another man says: "I was born in Ratcliffe Highway, brought up in a thieves' den, had a drunken father; I was told that God was like a father, but that did not give me any good impression at all."

These are not imaginary cases; they are cases that Christ brings out in those chapters. Look at John xv. 24: "If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin." This awakens serious reflections in one's mind, because we feel at once that this will cut two ways—it cuts one way for you and me, it cuts another way for the great mass of outcast souls. As I came here this afternoon I looked at the faces of the people in the streets, at the marks of care, and want, and degradation, and shame, and I felt, "They are all drifting where I am drifting—to the great end. How few advantages they have had; how many I have had. How will it be then?" I have the most absolute security that the Lord will take these things fully into consideration; I thank Him for it. Then I think of the persons who have been converted. In 1 Cor. vi. there is an awful list of evil persons, and then come the words: "And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Then, I think there are myriads more who are not washed and sanctified—how is it that while so many are washed so many more are not washed? Whose fault is it?

I think there are three answers to this, and with this I must close. The first is, God has his purpose in the Church, and He has his purpose for the race. The Scripture is chiefly taken up with an account of his purpose with regard to the Church; but there are passages which show that He has a purpose for the race. Secondly, we must with sorrow acknowledge that a great deal of the degradation of man is self-imposed. There was a moment in the pickpocket's life when it made him ashamed to pick a pocket, though it does not do so now. Men do not come into the world with a conscience seared—they all come into the world with a conscience and a will, and that will may say "Yes" or "No" to conscience. That is the essence of the thing, and accordingly there is a power of educating a conscience up or a dragging it down. And many of those who are so unimpressible or hard to reach, were not so once. They were not got at at the right time, and they have little by little let themselves down to the depth. And may it not be that we Christians have not done everything we could for them? We often talk of Christian evidence, but the best Christian evidence is a Christian life—a life of love; that goes further than anything else. Peter, in one of his letters gives good advice to wives about their heathen husbands. Do not talk to them, he says; live the Gospel before them. A godly life is the thing that wins a man. Be living epistles of Christ, and you will win them.

Let me ask, Do you want that at the judgment seat you shall shine like stars, and do you want that at the judgment seat many of the poor lost souls of London should shine as stars? Then, I beseech you to beseech Heaven that you may have the grace to shine now. It is among the first pieces of advice which our Lord gave in the sermon on the Mount, "Let your light shine before men." Shine now; do not be content with saying as Moses said: "Send by whom Thou wilt;" but say with Isaiah: "Here am I, send me."

UNFRIENDLY DOINGS IN THE FRIENDLY ISLANDS.

We have received from a correspondent the following extracts from the letter of a friend in New South Wales:—

Our annual [Wesleyan] Conference commenced in Sydney last night (January 19), when the President was elected. There is a great deal of important business to be done at the present sitting, not the least of which will be the relations of our Church in Tonga, about which you have doubtless seen some notice. We had a missionary here called Baker, who did not give unqualified satisfaction to the Missionary Board. He obtained a great deal of influence over the king, and at length resigned his connection with us and became, not only premier, but absolutely ruler—the Hon. and Rev. Shirley Baker. Tubou (the king) reigns, but Baker rules, say the people.

He has induced the king, who is very old, and will do nothing except Mr. Baker is at his elbow, to sever his connection with our Church, and set up a Free Church. He also persuaded another of our missionaries (Mr. Watkin) to join the covenant, and, because the people were unwilling to leave the Church in which they had been reared, great persecution was resorted to by the king and the recreant missionaries. Some thousands from fear and compulsion joined the king's Church, but many held out. Some of these were threatened that they would be put to death, others that they would be banished to Fiji. Some women were actually taken to a desert island and left there without food, others were beaten, a great many of the people had their land taken from them, and numbers are shut up in certain parts which they dare not leave even to get food without a special permit. Our Church lands and buildings were seized, but some of them have been given back after a strong representation made by the Deputy High Commissioner for the Pacific.

These are pretty strong measures to be adopted by Wesleyan missionaries! Such a case has never been known before. The excuse put forward is that they could not agree with, or did not like, Mr. Missionary Moulton, the head of the Training Institution in Tonga, and a first-class man; also that they wanted to be joined to the New Zealand Conference, instead of the N. S. W. The Tongan Parliament, that is, the king and premier, have passed some strong laws directed against our Church and Institution. Mr. Moulton is now in Sydney for Conference.

East London.—Mr. George Hamilton has carried on a good work for about fifteen years at the Hall, 59, Mile End-road. Meetings are held every night all the year round, and three times on Sunday. With the view of an extension of the Mission, and removal to larger premises, Mr. Hamilton has invited Mr. William Forbes, of Holloway, to assume the joint superintendence of the work. Mr. Forbes will still be at liberty to conduct occasional services elsewhere.

Didsbury.—A ten days' mission has been held in the parish of St. James, Didsbury, Manchester. The services were conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton and Mr. Barlow, the latter from the staff of the Manchester City Mission. Bible-readings and addresses on the Christian Life were given each afternoon and evening at the Rectory by Mr. Walton, and every evening a mission service, with after-meeting, was conducted in the parish room by Mr. Barlow. The Lord's presence and power were deeply felt, and to many it has proved a time of unspeakable blessing.

A GOOD OLD "SALT."

A friend, residing in Folkestone, writes to us:—"Probably you have never yet heard of 'Cookey,' who adorned one of the pages of The British Workman some few years since. He is a good old 'salt,' who spends his time here between the sailors in the harbour, and the children about the streets. His great ambition just now is to get the enclosed letter embodied in The Christian." It gives us much pleasure, indeed, to gratify the wish of "the good old 'salt.'" We only omit such portions of the letter as are purely personal, and the name of the writer, who, we suppose, did not pen his deeply-interesting epistle, thinking that it would ever be published. We are sure, however, it will be good for all our young readers to know that they too may, even to old age, secure the respect and affectionate remembrance of those who knew them, if like "Cookey," they seek to do good to all as they have opportunity. This Toronto letter has also a very encouraging message to Sunday-school teachers. Having said so much by way of introduction, we will now let the letter speak for itself:—

My Dear Friend,

A few days ago I picked up a copy of The Kentish Express, and, like a prodigal, I looked for news of my old home at Folkestone. I was delighted to see there the notice of a presentation that had been made to you, and particularly so that it mentioned the children of the Congregational Sunday-school having a hand in it. My children were around me when I caught sight of your name in the paper (they are now as old as I was when you knew me), and I exclaimed: "Why, my old friend 'Cookey' and his wife are still alive!" I wish I had been where I could have had a hand in that Sunday-school present, for I don't know anyone, among the friends of my boyhood, whose memory I respect more than "Old Cookey." I have thought of it since, and finally said to myself, "I'll never be satisfied till I have a hand in that token of respect;" so, as I could not send spectacles or walking sticks, or any such useful article, I have sent a Post-office Order for one pound as my mite towards the Sunday-school children's present and mark of respect.

You will excuse my calling you "Cookey," but that is the name that has endeared you and your memory to the children of Folkestone; and it may be a cause of some pleasure to you, to find that you are remembered with affection by some of the little ones of the past. If spared to see three score years and ten, I think one could ask no greater earthly compliment than to be remembered by busy men, scattered thousands of miles apart, as a friend and favourite of their childhood—remembered, not for lavish gifts of worldly wealth, but for kindly words of encouragement, simple words of good advice, and a humble Christian life and example; and such is my memory of you—God bless you! I am inclined to think men could be found in all parts of the globe, who remember you with similar regard. Within a year a lady was staying at my house in Toronto, and she lived in the United States, and she remarked to me, "Do you remember 'Cookey' of the Band of Hope meetings at Folkestone. I wonder if he is alive?"

Perhaps I'll have to tell you who I am, so you may remember me. Well, I am one of the boys who used to attend the Sunday-school in the old Union Chapel, both before and after the new Congregational Church was built on Tontine-street. I am one of the boys who first signed the Temperance Pledge in the Band of Hope meetings in the same place, and used to wear a medal with the pledge on it; I brought it to this country, but it is gone, and I often wish I had one now as a relic. I wonder if you remember us Band of Hope youngsters with our medals on, marching to Sandgate, to hear J. B. Gough lecture from the cottage he was born in. I do. My brother Joseph, then fifteen years old, was also one of the Sunday-school boys, and by the way, before he was that age, he drew the only map of Palestine the Union Chapel Sunday-school had, and it hung on the walls for years after he left home. He is, and has been for nearly twenty years a chief engineer on ocean steamships, and at present sails to Brazil, and carries the Christian principles with him on the ocean that he was taught in the old Sunday-school. He and I both went to work in the S.E.R. Co.'s steam-boat shop just before father died. As I was a young chip, only ten years old, I was for four years in the store-room, and had to go round the harbour to the station and boats four or five times every day in all weathers; and it was not always sunshine to me, either outside or inside in those days, and it was during that time that I so often met you, and learned to know "Old Cookey" as the children's friend. I got many a cheering word of encouragement and a friendly pat on the head that sent a warm glow through me, and helped to brighten the dark spots. My dear mother is still living, and makes her home with Joseph in Liverpool.

I have been on this side of the Atlantic just about twenty years. I came here soon after my apprenticeship was completed. I am also an engineer; and from the little shop in Folkestone, and out here, God has prospered me. I am a Sunday-school teacher here, and often in my class I think of my old school days, and wonder how many are there that I knew. When one is long from home the memories become dearer. I shall be very much pleased to have a line from you, and to hear of your welfare.

Yours very sincerely, T—— W——.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

Chill winds and prolonged want of work are making great havoc among the poor known to us. In a mothers' meeting of eighty among the poorest there have been seven deaths in the past week, principally through chest colds. The overruling of these trials is most precious; in our gatherings for instruction many testimonies are given by these poor but grateful people. The women's paid sewing meeting is most valued. The men continue to enjoy their soup suppers, and, whilst doing so, we give wholesome lessons on various uplifting remedies. We are rejoiced to see that noble men, holding empty spaces of land, have set to work to build "model dwelling-houses," or, as they are called, "four per cent. houses."

The work of the Flower Mission is increasing, and with it the call for more workers. Some of those who once worked with us are laid aside by sickness; some have been called to labour in foreign lands. Are there none who are waiting for the Master's call, "Go work to-day in my vineyard," who will gladly say, "Here am I, send me"? Large workhouses and infirmaries are open to us, and we know how gladly the inmates welcome the Flower Mission visitors. In winter and in summer the visits are made, and the monotony of workhouse or infirmary life is cheered with the Gospel message or the voice of song. Any friends who wish to see the work should visit the Home of Industry between 12 and 2 on Wednesday or Thursday.

Our band of loved and homed destitute orphan boys leave us on April 8 for Canada. Our band of lady-workers are all upheld and specially strengthened for this trying time. We believe our Father's heart longs that the rich and poor Christians should meet together in more fellowship. Annie Macpherson.

Mr. John Shrimpton's Letter to Lads.—The author is now prepared to circulate this letter (gratis), and will be pleased to forward as many as can be wisely distributed among "youths engaged in business." It is not suitable for schoolboys, being particularly addressed to those at work. Applications to be addressed to Mr. John Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London.

Fox-court Ragged School and Mission.—The Committee in their new Report review with much satisfaction the work of the past year in the new building. A Youths' Institute has been started, the various agencies have been stimulated, the infants' and day-school have been provided with a daily breakfast, and about eighty children have had a substantial dinner during the winter twice a week. Many of the old scholars are now comfortably settled in life, and conducting their households in the fear of God. The Free Lending Library is much appreciated, and meets a deep need. All communications to be made to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. Thomas Fagg, 133, Pentonville road, N.

THE LATE J. B. GOUGH.

ACROSS the water, as on this side, many expressions of the high esteem in which our departed friend was held are finding their way into the public Press. In an article written for The New York Evangelist, while Mr. Gough was yet hovering between life and death, Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, says:—

"Throughout a whole generation he has been the prince of dramatic platform orators—dividing with Spurgeon and Moody the distinction of having addressed more auditors than any man of this era. Like Moody, he was converted under the ministry of Edward N. Kirk, in Boston. My intimacy with our beloved brother commenced while I was a student in the Princeton Seminary. He came there in 1845, and set us students—and the Faculty also—wild by his unique style of oratory. From those youthful days in Princeton onwards to this hour, my love for dear Gough has been undisturbed by a ripple. I have known him through and through, in times of prosperity and in dark hours of adversity; he has always been pure gold, with the clear stamp of the Lord Jesus Christ on the coin. The love of Christ has been the master-passion of his soul; before no public assembly has he ever lowered his colours, or hesitated to avow his humble, earnest faith as a Christian."

The New York Independent says, in a leading article:—

"His impassioned appeals for temperance and purity and honour, illustrated from his own experience, have lifted many thousands out of a similar ruin. No orator of the day in either hemisphere had either his fire or his pathos. Others had more culture and grace, possibly more invective; but no one of them could cover, like him, the whole gamut of emotion, or whirl the hearer so suddenly and against his will from passion to passion, from laughter to tears. No one had such a strong hold on the loftiest emotions, or grasped the heart and conscience so like a master. Not one word came from his lips that was not helpful. He had the Christian passion for lifting men out of their own evil selves into the life of God. After all, eloquence, like every other high art, cannot reach its supreme attainment, except as it carries God and duty in its soul. It was genius, sanctified by a Christlike purpose, that made John B. Gough the greatest orator of his age."

In a prelude to his Boston Monday Lecture on Feb. 22, Mr. Joseph Cook paid a very able and eloquent tribute to the memory of Mr. Gough, as an orator and reformer.

Memorial services were held at Wylie Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, and also at the residence of the minister in Frankford, where Mr. Gough's body lay previous to its removal to Hillside, Worcester. At the latter meeting Mr. George H. Stuart told the following incident:—He first met Mr. Gough forty-two years ago. A man who is to-day one of the leading merchants of the city, Mr. Stuart said, was present that Sunday in 1844, and heard Gough's address advocating temperance. The merchant, then rich, and worth millions to-day, had just stocked his wine cellar with choice liquors. After he had listened to Gough's stirring speech he went home, and going into his wine-cellar, he emptied all the bottles of their contents; since that day there has never been a drop of wine in the merchant's house. At the meeting in the Presbyterian Church interesting tributes to the memory of the deceased were given, among others, by Mr. John Wanamaker, and Mr. William Noble.

In accordance with the wish of Mrs. Gough, no public funeral service was held at Worcester, but about one hundred friends attended at Hillside, Mr. Gough's residence, on February 24, to pay their last tokens of respect before the funeral. The services were very simple, says a Boston paper, but the fact that none but sincere mourners were present lent an impressiveness to the occasion which fully justified Mrs. Gough's choice. Rev. Israel Ainsworth, pastor of the Congregational Church in Boylston, said he had never met a man so great as Mr. Gough who was so profoundly humble. His sympathies were boundless, and took in alike the scholar and the statesman and the humble labourer. In a conversation on the labour question shortly before his death, Mr. Gough said if the employers would think of those who work for them as souls, and not alone as hands, much of the difficulties which now come between capital and labour would pass away.

Addresses followed from Rev. D. O. Mears, Dr. W. Taylor, of New York, Dr. Gould, of Worcester, and others. Dr. Taylor said: No death has occurred in this country for a long time that will be felt as a personal loss by so many people in Great Britain as this. During the past year three of our greatest warriors have died in this country. Their names are as well known in Great Britain as here, but few people had seen them, few had participated in the results of their bravery. When the the tidings were sent across the water that Gough was no more, sadness thrilled into thousands of hearts. Everyone who had heard him felt he knew him, and breathed a blessing on his name. Thousands whom he had been instrumental in lifting from degradation regarded him as a personal benefactor. His loss is felt not alone among the lowly. Bishops and dignitaries in the English Episcopal Church like Temple, Thorold, and Farrar, great preachers like Spurgeon and Parker, and thousands of workers in the cause of social and religious reform, feel that they have lost a brother. The last words said to me by Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon when I was last in London, were: "Remember us to Mr. and Mrs. Gough."

Dr. Gould, one of the intimate friends of the deceased, said:—Mr. Gough had for some time felt that his end was near. Death struck the first bell at Northfield last summer. His friends can never forget the scene in Piedmont Church last September, at the reception tendered the English Temperance speaker, William Noble. As Mr. Gough spoke, he seemed to catch, like Elijah of old, a vision of the descending chariot of fire, and, solemnly taking the mantle from his own shoulders, he put it on the shoulders of his younger brother, and then grasping him by the hand, in words that thrilled all our hearts, charged him to stand firm and give no quarter to the great enemy until the final victory. Our hero sleeps; his matchless tongue is silent; other great and good men will carry on the work, but the world will never see a second John B. Gough. Superb as were his gifts, his highest power was not in his gifts, but in himself, in the great, true, noble, loving, guileless, heroic, Christian man that was behind all. Standing in this hallowed home, and admitted to its inner sanctuary for nearly thirty years, I cannot suffer my brother to be carried hence without my testimony that this wonderful life, with its almost unparalleled labours for good and humanity, has had the roots of its power in this godly, consecrated Christian home. Prayer ceaseless and importuning has surrounded him in all his public life. Never has my soul been so thrilled and uplifted as when in the freedom of home worship at this altar, with the loved family around him, he poured out his soul before God with childlike humility and frankness of expression, and then on pinions of conquering faith bore us up to the mercy seat.

There was hardly a dry eye in the house, says the reporter, as Dr. Gould ended. The impressive silence that followed was broken by a fervent prayer offered by Rev. Dr. Gordon. The choir then sang the hymn, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," which was a favourite at the family worship at Hillside. Later in the afternoon, a quiet procession, consisting of hearse, pall-bearers, and relatives, in carriages, slowly made its way to the city, where, without further service, the remains were temporarily entombed at Rural Cemetery. Later in the season the interment will take place in the family lot at Hope Cemetery, New Worcester.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Y.M.C.A.—The latest report shows the most prosperous year ever experienced. Members and Associates now number 940—an increase of nearly 400. The evangelistic meetings and missions proved a great blessing, more than 200 persons having professed conversion, while many Christians were quickened. The various meetings for prayer and fellowship have been greatly appreciated; the Bible-classes show an encouraging increase; the Vigilance Corps, with its representatives in forty places of worship, has done good service, and the educational classes have been ably conducted. The programme of arrangements shows that upwards of forty meetings are held weekly.

Roman Catholics in Belfast.—Major-General Haig writes to us commending the work of the Irish Church Mission among the Roman Catholics of this city. He says the work is undergoing development, and is crowned with much success in the conversion of those who attend. He speaks particularly of one street notorious for evil in past times, which has been completely transformed. Rev. E. Robinson (3, Holborn-terrace, Belfast) is the missionary lately appointed, and a mission-room, says General Haig, is greatly needed for the proper carrying on of the work. Help for the erection of this is solicited, and may be sent to Mr. W. Pasley, Secretary I. C. Mission, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Y.M.C. ASSOCIATIONS OF NEW YORK STATE.

STATE CONVENTION.

ABOUT 400 bright-looking, intelligent and energetic young men recently gathered in Elmira, New York, from all sections of the State, together with visitors from other States. They were the secretaries and delegates of the various Y.M.C.A.'s of New York, assembled in annual convention for the twentieth time. They were welcomed to Elmira with a cordiality seldom if ever equalled in the history of these gatherings. The opening address was by Rev. E. F. See, of Albany, who delivered a discourse on the aims, the needs and the encouragements of the work of the Y.M.C.A., which made a deep impression upon the minds of even the most experienced workers. Then followed very interesting and encouraging reports of work accomplished during 1885.

In the evening the report of the executive committee, was presented by its chairman, E. P. Platt, of Poughkeepsie. Last year 111 associations were represented in State conventions. The total membership is 21,500. Eighteen occupy buildings of their own. Eighty-four general secretaries are employed at fifty places. Rev. George A. Hall, with an assistant, visits all sections of the State, organising new associations, and strengthening those already existing. Twenty-six new associations were organised during 1885.

Edwin Packard, President of the Brooklyn association, followed with a description of an ideal association home, comprising a reading room, library, parlour, gymnasium, game room, class and meeting rooms; these should be more attractive than the saloons, which are always bright and warm.

The evening session each day was followed by an evangelistic service for young men, in which the Association methods of dealing with young men were put to a practical test, with successful results, among a large number of the young men of Elmira.

The second day's session opened with a sample training class, showing methods for a critical study of the Word of God and the practical application of it in efforts to lead men into the Christian life. Sumner F. Dudley, Treasurer of the State Committee, reported that, for the proper prosecution of the work in 1886, the sum of 6000 dollars was needed; 4500 dollars were pledged.

A paper, by W. S. Sloane, of New York, on the White Cross movement to promote personal purity among young men, was followed by an interesting discussion of the subject, led by James McConaughy, of New York, who has successfully organised the work in that metropolis. A deep impression was made on the convention of the importance of undertaking some definite work along this line, although there were some differences of opinion as to the wisdom of adopting White Cross rules in all associations. In the evening one of the most eloquent addresses of the convention was delivered by Rev. George M. Stone, of Hartford, Conn., on the use of the Bible. The speaker recommended learning portions of the Bible by heart, and proved, by his own use of it, that Scripture is more eloquent than mere human language can possibly be.

The third morning was devoted to a discussion of work for boys, in which great progress was reported since a year ago; and to a paper by Prof. Smith, of New York, on the importance of physical culture as a means to the end which the associations have in view. Utica was chosen as the next place of meeting.

Newport and Isle of Wight Conference.—Sir,—May I draw the attention of your readers to the somewhat early date of this Conference this year? Other brethren hold Conferences in the early summer. After taking council with them, we have fixed the dates of this Conference in the Legh Richmond Hall, Newport, Isle of Wight, for May 12, 13, 14. May I ask the earnest prayers of your readers for a full blessing to be given at these three days of quiet waiting on God?

Newport, I.W. H. G. Thwaites.

Konigsheim House of Rest, Weston-super-Mare.—The report before us says:—"During the year just closed we have been privileged to see souls brought to God, and others led to deeper consecration. A spirit of love has prevailed in the House, and we want all our friends to join us in thanks to God for his great goodness." Eight to nine ladies have been inmates of the Home during the past year; the majority were governesses, while others were Christian workers. The rest and change afforded them at this seaside resort has been attended with most satisfactory results, as letters abundantly testify. Miss Fanny Buckley is the Hon. Lady Superintendent.

Notes and Comments.

SOME of our old and personal friends have expressed dislike to the portraits of living men appearing in The Christian. But if our kind and beloved censors could see, as we have lately done, with what interest isolated and earnest labourers look upon the features of brothers and sisters working or fighting for their common Lord, they would surely sympathise with them, and thank us for giving them this pleasure.

The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen have already visited several of the large hospitals in Dublin, going through the wards, conversing with the patients, and leaving a bouquet of flowers at each sufferer's bed. They have also found time to visit one of the excellent off-shoots from the noble Prison-gate Mission—the Girls' Training Home. To each of the inmates the Countess addressed a few words of comfort and encouragement. It is by such exercise of Christian sympathy, rather than by frequent festivities in the midst of a starving populace, that the high office held by Lord Aberdeen will be elevated in the public mind. It is evident already that the character of the new Lord Lieutenant is profoundly appreciated.

Lady Aberdeen, as one of the conveners of the Central Committee of the Women's Section of the forthcoming International Exhibition at Edinburgh, has addressed a letter to the Dublin newspapers, stating that it is the desire of the Committee of Ladies to make the stall representing the industries pursued by women in Ireland as comprehensive as possible. They aim at drawing attention to the innate skill shown in making lace, knitted work, &c., "and the great possibilities of its increased beauty and perfection," so that there may be "a further organisation of these industries," and a great stimulus given to their development. We trust the excellent work presided over by Mrs. Hart, to which we called attention a few weeks ago, will benefit by the wide publicity which will thus be given to the Gweedore industry, and that many of the peaceful and industrious people of the sister island may in consequence be enabled to support themselves in decent comfort.

It has frequently been urged that of the money contributed to many of our religious and charitable societies a very large proportion goes in salaries to officers, and therefore quite fails to effect the purpose for which it it was given. An illustration of this has been furnished by Dr. Chance, who, in his evidence before the Dublin Hospitals Commission a few day ago, stated that although the hospitals in that city cost eighty thousand pounds per annum, little more than thirty thousand is expended upon the patients; "the houses and the officers" exhaust the balance. In charity as in other matters a little care and personal investigation frequently are desirable; he gives twice who not only gives quickly, but who sees, if possible, that his contribution is not diverted from the object for which it was intended.

In 1 Cor. ii. 13 the Apostle Paul, according to the literal Greek, says that in proclaiming the Gospel, he joined spiritual things to spiritual things. The words are very instructive. Paul teaches us to guard against setting forth Divine truth by what is discordant and incongruous. Secular music, secular lectures, choir singing for entertainment, are inadmissible in public worship, because misjoined, and they will inevitably disappoint all round. It would be well to ask concerning very much which is unspiritual, and nevertheless joined to spiritual things, what profit has come to Christ's cause thereby.

The Fortnightly Review for this month contains a terrible article by E. Delille, on "Parisian Hells." The Paris gambling-house or club is described as a fountain-head of corruption, cheating, and ruin. Persons of the highest political position are said to be at the head of many of these houses, which are made attractive by an Oriental magnificence. All classes play, and all but sharpers are impoverished. Paris, says the writer, once the brightest of cities, has taken on a listless, dispirited air, and is in "decline, in a manner painful to see."

There are, it is to be hoped, counter-balancing considerations to be set against the discouraging views of Mr. Walter Besant, in respect to the boys and girls in London who have been in Board Schools. He says, in the current Contemporary Review:—

> They live in the streets. Their favourite amusements and pleasures yearly grow coarser, and their conversation continually viler. The proportion of four per cent. of them who carry on their studies in night schools is decreasing. Last August Bank Holiday I was on Hampstead Heath. Troops of girls were running about, and I may safely aver, that language more vile and depraved, revealing thoughts more vile and depraved, I have never heard from grown men or women in the worst part of the town. There was absolute vileness, and the quiet working men, among whom they ran, looked on in amazement and disgust.

The latter part of Mr. Besant's article is devoted to the project of evening schools of a new order. The scheme has been more fully set forth by Rev. Dr. Paton, of Nottingham, in a pamphlet published by Isbister & Co., and a council has been formed at the Mansion House, with very influential names upon it. The object is, with the aid of voluntary helpers, to make night schools more attractive by musical drill, singing, modelling, and magic lantern. We venture to hope that there will be combined with this well-intentioned and important movement the power of personal intercourse, and the spiritual influence of Christian character and motive.

In its issue of last week The Record comments, in a leading article, on the proposed West-end Methodist Mission, described on a preceding page, in which Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Rev. M. Guy Pearse are to be the leading actors. We cannot congratulate our contemporary on the tone and spirit of its remarks. To say of any serious and earnest attempt at coping with the practical heathenism of wealthy London, that "Whiteley, the universal provider," is "its nearest analogue in secular life," is, we think, neither dignified nor Christian. Such a comparison, moreover, comes with a singularly bad grace from the ardent advocate of a Church which, in past times, has claimed, more than any other in these realms, to act the part of a religious "universal provider."

Surely The Record does not well to be thus grieved when any "big thing" in Christian effort is attempted outside the boundaries of the Established Church. The other day that Church attempted, and successfully carried through, "a big thing" in its "missionary simultaneous meetings." Our contemporary was justifiably jubilant over it, but we did not observe that the organ of any other Church showed any symptoms of ecclesiastical jealousy. All the churches put together have not hitherto been so successful in evangelising the West-end of London, that the friends of any of them can afford to sneer at a responsible and well-considered endeavour to supply the lack.

Some time since we animadverted in the strongest terms on the monstrous decision of Mr. Saunders, Police Magistrate, by which a little girl of four, who had been brought before him by a rescue officer, was sent back to a den of infamy, because in his opinion she was too young to know right from wrong! There were many public protests against this magisterial interpretation of the law, but it seemed as if nothing could then be done to overrule it.

Not so thought our courageous friend Dr. Barnardo, who, as our readers may remember, lately confessed that he has not unfrequently practised "philanthropic abduction," since there was no other way of securing the moral safety of the abducted. Here is what he says in the current number of Night and Day, with respect to the case of this little four-year-old:—

> I do not think any reader of this magazine will blame me when I say that under these circumstances I practised what I preached. Within two or three days poor little Fanny Jenkins was in my care safe and sound; and I have her at this moment where I imagine it is not likely that anybody will attempt, legally or otherwise, to interfere with her. But so far as I am concerned, I would absolutely rejoice if the attempt were made, for I am satisfied that if I were only once prosecuted, such important facts would be brought before public notice as would be almost certain to lead to a much-needed change in the law. I forbear to describe the terrible condition in which the poor child was when she came to me. Suffice it to say that I could produce independent medical testimony, if necessary, in proof of the fact that she was not too young to be very seriously affected by her residence in the vile den from whence I rescued her.

Most encouraging accounts have reached us of the meetings held by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey at New Orleans (La.), and Galveston (Texas), but we have not space in our present issue for details. Mrs. and Miss Moody accompany the evangelists on their southern campaign.

We much regret to learn from Pastor Chiniquy, of St. Anne, Kankakee County, Illinois, U.S.A., that on the night of February 13, the establishment of Messrs. Craig & Barlow, the publishers of his "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," was burned to the ground. The plates, which had been destroyed in the previous fire, had been reproduced, and the proofs of the work were being revised by the pastor. The plates of the "Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional," together with many volumes of that work, were also destroyed. These successive calamities seem to show the ruthless and unscrupulous hand of the Papal incendiary.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers, who are soon to sail for Australia, have kindly offered, through Mr. Loudin, to sing in London before their departure, the whole of the proceeds to be devoted to the relief of the existing distress. We trust the generous offer will be taken advantage of, and that the result will be, not only a delightful evening for those who hear these gifted coloured songsters, but a substantial addition to the relief funds.

THE NEED OF OUR SOLDIERS IN IRELAND.

No provision is made by the authorities for lodging soldiers on furlough passing through Dublin to or from their homes. Respectable houses will not admit them. Where shall they go?

The Dublin Soldiers' Institute has for the last three years to some small extent supplied this need, but the demand for accommodation was so much greater than they could meet, an Extra Wing to their premises (to include a lecture hall) was decided upon early last year, and some funds for the purpose were collected, on the strength of which the new building was commenced. These funds are now exhausted, and the building is unfinished. A sum of nearly £1000 will be required before it could be fit for use. Night after night during this winter furlough season, numbers of soldiers are being turned away from the Home for want of room, the usual alternative for such, if decent men, is to walk the streets all night, as they find it almost impossible to obtain any respectable shelter without friends in a strange city.

This urgent APPEAL is made on their behalf to the friends of our soldiers everywhere. From Ireland much cannot, under present circumstances, be expected; but it is felt that the Dublin Soldiers' Home is not a mere local Charity, but, as the above facts testify, it is one which must call forth the sympathy and aid of all throughout Her Majesty's dominions who value our British soldiers, and who would seek to do them good and benefit them both in body and soul. It may be added that it is the English and Scotch soldiers who specially and almost entirely take advantage of the Home (although all are welcome). Since the establishment of the Home many have been "born again" at the meetings and classes held there. To God be all praise.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED PHTHISIS—at NEWCASTLETON, N.B.

In the early part of the Summer of last year (I am writing this in Dec., '85) I received a statement of the case of Mr. Henry Milligan, accompanied by a letter from his brother, Mr. J. Milligan, Douglas-square, Newcastleton. Persons who had found benefit from my medicine in the village had urged the application to me as a last resource.

The young man's illness had commenced with severe cold and inflammation of the lungs. He was attended by a doctor of high position at Penrith and others, till brought home. Medical report:—"Right lung in a very bad state."

At this time the symptoms were:—Bad cough, excessive night sweats, severe pains in the right lung, expectoration difficult, sometimes streaked with blood; general loss of flesh, and especially in the legs and arms. Patient very anxious to commence the treatment.

In less than a month there was marked improvement. "My brother is a great deal better. He feels stronger. The pain is nearly gone from his right side. He was confined to his bed when I first wrote; now he can sit up nearly all day." Further letters note a gradual progress to recovery.

About two months since (after my last series of weekly cases had been sent to press) I heard from his brother relative to the case of a lady who had witnessed the patient's recovery, and was anxious to use the same means. In this letter he says:—"Your valuable medicine restored my brother to his usual health. He had gone so far that he could not lift his head from his pillow. It was said that he would not live a fortnight."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

REVIEWS.

"Our friend is known to be clear as light upon evangelical truth, and this is apparent upon every page he has written. He gives us here sweet enlargements upon the words and visions of the prophet, which to our mind are shorter than we would have had them. What he gives makes us long for more. A desire for more is nature's way of witnessing that what she has received is good."—C. H. Spurgeon, Sword and Trowel.

"None can read it without his heart being stirred with the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and Saviour Jesus Christ It is beautifully printed and bound, and will be a favourite with many givers."—The Christian.

"It is on the bearing of this hope upon the future of a redeemed and purified earth that the author dwells with power in this volume, which will prove a blessing to thousands, as others from his pen have done."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Here, as in all the author's writings, the Gospel bells ring out clearly and melodiously. No one will read, Jew or Gentile, saved or unsaved, who will not be instructed, comforted, or it may be awakened to be found ready in the coming day."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

Mr. Thomas Newberry is exhibiting his beautiful model of the Temple of Solomon, with explanations, at Kilburn Hall, Kilburn gate, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week, at 7.30 p.m.

"Take no (anxious) thought for the morrow." No wonder so large a proportion of the Christian Church read this with incredulity, as though it were an impossible command! We fear that a vast extent of weakness and sin springs from this very incredulity. The command is plain and simple, and was issued by our Lord Himself. Like most of his commands, it is impossible and still it is possible, for "all his biddings are enablings." It may strengthen the faith of some, in the possibility of our attaining to this impossible obedience, to listen to the testimony of the saintly John Milne, of Perth: "I have no to-morrow; the Lord is carrying me, and I do know that sweet, happy life of faith, of nestling in my dear Lord's bosom, to which you alluded. Amid constant engagements, and great responsibility, I really know no ease. It is a style of life which I have sometimes fancied, but which I never knew before. I am trying to care for the things of the Lord, and He makes many dear, wise friends care for my concerns. I think I do see that He is making me feel an interest in every creature I meet in his providence."

"Faith appropriates what love provides." We do not know who struck out this happy saying, but we present it to our readers as one that is full of helpfulness. If each who reads it will quietly ask, What has love provided for me, here and now? and follow up the question, he will probably be surprised, as the answer is unfolded to his view, with the happy surprise of one who happens suddenly on great wealth.

The following testimony supports the stirring appeal by Rev. James Gall, in our last number, in which he urges the duty of every believer to put the winning of souls in the very forefront of life's duties. About the year 1867, a prominent Baptist minister of the West-end of London was in Paris, and met there the engineer of one of the Seine steamboats, a member of a Baptist church in that city. The man told him that he had been one of the most wicked men in Paris, but his mate who worked on the same boat was converted, and day after day pressed upon his attention the great love of the Saviour, until his heart melted, and he gave himself to the Lord:—

> For you must know, Mr. Lewis, it is a rule in our Church that when one brother has been converted he must go and fetch another brother; and when a sister has been converted, she must go and fetch another sister. That is the way 120 of us have been brought from Atheism and from Popery to simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

This, surely, is the best means of evangelisation ever invented, as it is about the simplest and most ancient. "Andrew first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias. . . . Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found Him of whom Moses did write."

Brixton.—A new hall, named the Shaftesbury Mission Hall and Ragged School, was opened last week in connection with the work carried on by Mrs. Cunningham, at Brixton. Mr. George Holland, who presided, warmly commended the work to the sympathy of those present, and brief addresses were given by various other friends. The hall is within three minutes' walk of the "Bon Marché," Brixton Station. Mrs. Cunningham's address is 12, Bellefields-road, Brixton; the hon. treasurer is Dr. E. Preston Lewis, 453, Brixton-road, S.W.

MR. HAMMOND IN RICHMOND.

THE first meeting in Richmond on Saturday week indicated the deep earnestness of many of the workers on behalf of the unsaved. Over thirty short prayers followed in succession. During the past three months the committee have as often as possible secured the attendance of some of the leading workers from places in London where Mr. Hammond has been holding meetings, that they might give reports of the work, and encourage Christians here to get a like blessing. This has done very much to prepare the way for the work of God's Spirit which now accompanies Mr. Hammond's preaching. When he came we did not stop to look at him, but were ready to work at once.

Each evening the hall has been filled, and several afternoons large drawing-room meetings have been held. At all the services the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit has been realised.

We noticed a lady busy amongst some of the smaller children. We heard her saying to them, "When I was only seven years old I attended some meetings Mr. Hammond conducted at Chelmsford, and I heard him sing the hymn he wrote for children—

I feel like singing all the time,
  My tears are wiped away;
For Jesus is a Friend of mine—
  I'll serve Him every day.

When on the cross my Lord I saw,
  Nailed there by sins of mine,
Fast fell the burning tears, but now
  I'm singing all the time!

He told us that if we would feel like singing all the time, we must become Christians, and love the Saviour who died for us. I went home weeping and told my mother that I wanted to be a Christian, and feel like singing all the time. She told me that I must stop crying then and be good, but she did not tell me anything about Jesus. The next Sunday my Sunday-school teacher found me weeping for my sins, and she explained the way of salvation to us, so that I understood it; then I saw how Jesus had suffered for my sins, and then I learned to trust Him. Ever since then I have been happy, and if you, dear children, will give yourselves to Jesus, He will make you happy also." Next night we found a little girl just seven years old, who had been spoken to by this lady, and she said, "When that lady was talking to me I made up my mind to be a Christian." The little thing seemed very happy, and evidently was trusting in Jesus.

The drawing-room meetings have been times of great blessing; nearly all who have attended them, who were not Christians before, have become so in the very first meeting. The Lord has truly poured upon his people the Spirit of grace and supplication, and the answers to prayer daily given are most encouraging.

The work has not been confined to children, but many adults have been reached. Some evenings, when large numbers of adults have been present, Mr. Hammond has addressed himself largely to them, and yet the crowds of children present have listened attentively. Mr. Spiers has rendered valuable assistance. He has visited the day-schools and interested the children, so that all classes have attended.

Bow Common.—A meeting to inaugurate the opening of the first section of the enlargement of the North-east London Mission Hall, at Bow Common, was held on Monday, March 8. It is intended to devote the upper rooms to the nightly use of the hundreds of factory girls, who are here of the poorest and most degraded of their class. By the distribution of coals, provisions, and worn clothes, and the Country Home for Sick Children, something is being done to lessen the prevailing destitution; much more could be done if sufficient means were forthcoming. A sale of useful and fancy articles is to be held upon the premises 203—205, Devon's-road, Bow Common-lane, E., on Monday, March 29. Help in kind or otherwise would be gratefully received by the Superintendent, Mr. W. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

MILDMAY ADVENT CONFERENCE.

THE subject for consideration on the first afternoon was "The Coming of the Messiah, as predicted in the Old Testament." It was in large measure dealt with, however, in the addresses of the same morning.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 3.

This afternoon the important and practical topic of "The Coming of the Lord an incentive to Missionary Zeal" was considered. Mr. J. H. Tritton presided. They might differ as to the interpretation of prophecy, he said, but in regard to this work, which the Church had undertaken in obedience to the last command of Christ, there was no room for difference of opinion.

Rev. Gilbert Karney contended that they who believe in the pre-millennial return of Christ have the strongest reason for earnest evangelistic effort amongst the heathen. Indeed, there is a marvellous prophetic connection between missionary enterprise and the approaching end of this era. The two subjects are linked together in a wonderful way, and in doing their Master's work they had the joy of knowing that they were hastening his coming; that they were (as the Revised Version beautifully put it) "casting up a highway for Him that rideth through the desert." A wonderful coincidence is to be observed between the circumstances attending the birth of Christ and the providential series of circumstances which now, as they believed, are preparing the way for his Second coming. Before the first coming of Christ, the Jews, believers in monotheism, as opposed to the polytheism then current, were scattered abroad throughout the whole Roman empire, and a state of expectation then current, amongst other signs, heralded his coming. During the last eighty years—though the world, from the time of Abraham till the death of George III., had gone on in much the same way, the most speedy means of locomotion being by the horse—what wonderful developments of science there have been, opening many doors that hitherto have been fast closed. Though there is much in the condition of the world, looked at by the eye of sense, almost to break our hearts, and cause them to say, "Hath God forgotten to be gracious?" we should nevertheless "look up," knowing that the coming of Christ is the only remedy for what they mourned over; all the more earnestly should they labour to carry out his purpose—the gathering out a people for his glory from all the nations of the earth.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson spoke of the coming of Christ as the great stimulus for missionary labour. Having referred to the day in which he was led to see that the pre-millennial view of the coming of Christ was the only one warranted by Scripture, he showed that they who would bear testimony for Christ must have felt the love of Christ in their hearts: "The soul that has received power from on high, he shall be my witness," said God Himself. Speaking, then, especially of India, he said such were the men that were wanted there. A native said to him one day, "We do not want any more preaching, we are prepared to accept your society as superior to anything we have; but we want to see the men who live it." India's want to-day is the vitalising influence of Christian lives; before the Divine power of holy living, all other powers would fall and become weak. The men of India did not want the varied isms of Christianity in India; they wanted men who could take the blessed Word of God and preach that. Thank God that now they were awaking to their responsibilities; and let them remember that it is men filled with the power of the Holy Ghost who alone can be witnesses for God in heathen lands. Three years ago he stood with a fellow traveller in the streets of Jerusalem. Talking to an old Jew through an interpreter, he inquired of him, "Do you expect the Messiah?" Instantly a smile lighted up the sad face of the Jew, as he replied, "He might come to-morrow." Afterwards he took his companion to the heights above Jerusalem and pointed out that what Christ had foretold 1800 years ago regarding the treading-down of Jerusalem, had been fulfilled in the rise and spread of the Turkish power, which, however, is now fast hastening to decay. He continued: "The Man who said that those things should happen, the evidence of which we see around us, was the Christ of God, your Redeemer; and I believe what He has said respecting the future will still happen. The words of the Master, that have come true in the past, will come true also in the future." For the Christian there is no hope like the hope of his coming, both to fill with enthusiasm for the work that now lieth at hand, and with glorious anticipation of the future.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

My Beloved Brother,

I HAVE come across a copy of your paper, The Christian, and, as I looked through it and saw some of the old names, my thoughts wandered back more than a quarter of a century. Once again I imagined myself back in that old Euston room, at those precious whole nights of prayer; once more enjoying those times of refreshing, when dear Richard Weaver first came to London, in Cumberland Market, St. Martin's Hall, Exeter Hall, with beloved Reginald Radcliffe, and W. Carter and Shuldham Henry; the happy seasons spent in the "green rooms" of various theatres, while Jesus was being lifted up to assembled thousands in the front, and then the glorious times we had in going around the pit, and having fellowship with the joy there is in the presence of the angels, as we conversed with one and another of the new-born souls. How my soul at this very moment cries out, "Oh, my Father, give us such times again." How my soul yearns to see such sights once more.

How abiding was the work then accomplished. Go where one will, you can meet with some who were converted at that time. I remember one night, especially, that about sixty dear brethren spent in prayer, and the burden seemed to be "Oh, Lord grant that from this company thy Word may sound out into all the world." And now, twenty-five years after, I can trace some of those sixty, in various countries of Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australia. I have met with several in various States here, who directly, or indirectly, through those sixty, were brought to know and love Jesus. I do think, however, that in those days there was far more time spent in secret than in public prayer. What wrestling times were spent alone with God! How we used to leave one another for our respective work, after having been on our knees together, knowing that the battle was the Lord's. How, if God was not glorified in a meeting by souls being saved, we met and humbled ourselves before Him. But why mention all this to you? It is simply that you, with myself, and one or two others out here, may pray that now, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, the Lord may be pleased to give us such seasons again. Will you join us in prayer for this object?

I have been in Colorado just over a year, and have visited many of the great mountain mining camps. Sometimes I go and work at my trade; at other times I am unable to do this, and go amongst the miners—a rough, but mostly educated class of men, who willingly help one who carries to them the message of salvation. I have visited them in their cabins and shanties, in the saloons and gambling dens, and yet not once have I had a rude word said to me . . . Sometimes I am above timber line, 10,000 and 12,000 feet, with ranges rising still higher, perpetually covered in snow, but precious souls are there for whom Christ died, and in my feeble way the Lord helps me to speak of Christ and Him crucified. Will you pray for me?

I have recently been for three months on the frontiers of Utah, and was enabled to build the first church in a new town in that country. I find that in the simple tale of the cross, in the Gospel as defined by Paul, in 1 Cor. xv., there is still "power"—power to draw the people together, power to maintain a congregation, power to save all who believe. May we be kept to preaching "Christ and Him crucified," risen, alive, coming again.

I was in Fort Collins three weeks ago, and saw Mr. Golding Dwyre, who is doing well, and several other English people lately arrived; best of all some have been converted since coming here. We are in hopes this year of securing prohibition for Fort Collins. Last year we lost by a very small number of votes, but we restricted the number of saloons to six, at high licence of 1000 dollars each. This year the cry is, "These six must go." We have several prohibition towns in the State, and how we wish we could get it for the whole State—same as our sister State of Kansas. During the two years I have been in America I have been in hundreds of houses, and never once been asked to take, or even seen, any kind of stimulant, save tea or coffee. Oh, that the people of England, especially the Christians, would give it up for the Lord's sake and their brother's sake; and not put an occasion of stumbling in their brother's way, by offering them intoxicating drinks.

We have all enjoyed excellent health in this beautiful climate . . . When you feel worn out and need rest and change, come to the Rocky Mountains; there are many warm Christian hearts, English and American, to give you a hearty welcome.—Affectionately yours in Jesus,

Thomas Marsh.

A WEEK OF GRACE IN ROSS-SHIRE.

AVOCH is a small fishing village, situated in Ross-shire, about ten miles beyond Inverness, with about one thousand one hundred of a population. Some eight months ago the esteemed pastor of the Congregational Church, Rev. Mr. Philip, passed away to his reward. The church unitedly fixed their minds on a devoted servant of the Lord, Rev. G. Moir, late of Aberdeen, and invited him to become their pastor. Mr. Moir had on several occasions assisted Mr. Philip at evangelistic services, and was greatly owned of the Lord in leading souls to the Saviour. He accepted their invitation, and entered upon his labours about six months ago. Before he had been a few weeks among the people, he saw some encouraging manifestations that the Lord was working with him. He and some of the living people of his charge thought of putting forth some extra effort by arranging for a series of evangelistic meetings.

In view of holding these they had several special prayer meetings, in which earnest and urgent prayer for the Divine blessing was offered up. Mr. Moir next invited two evangelists to come and help. One of these had been engaged for about forty years in the same blessed work, and had been much owned of God throughout the North of Scotland; the other had been at the work for about sixty years.

These two brethren arrived in the village on Saturday, February 20, and that evening, at seven o'clock, nearly 300 gathered together to welcome these brethren, and to unite with them in imploring the Divine presence and blessing on the effort about to be made. At the services held in the chapel next day it was evident that the Lord had heard and was answering their united and believing cry. So eager were the people to hear that four public services were held in the large chapel, which was filled at each service; at the evening service, many could not find accommodation in the chapel, and they gathered together around the doors. At the close of the service, any who felt their need of Christ, and were anxious to find Him, were asked to remain in their seats, or if they could not do so in the crowded state of the house, if they were carried out they were asked to return again. About forty anxious inquirers gathered together, and were personally dealt with, until about 10.30 p.m., when a considerable number professed to accept Jesus as their Saviour, and to find rest and peace.

So mightily was the Lord working that the whole population of the village became more or less interested, and were singularly ready to be spoken to about their souls. This state of mind among the people so cheered the three brethren that on Monday morning they started out to visit the people in their own houses; they did not enter a single dwelling but they found either some young believers rejoicing, or those who were deeply anxious about their souls, ready to be dealt with. On Monday evening another public meeting was held, when the chapel was again crowded. At the close Mr. Moir put it very solemnly before the unsaved to decide, and their decision was to be whether they were to take sides with Satan or Jesus. An aged man, between sixty and seventy years, left with the crowd, but on his way home the thought of whether he was to take sides with Satan or Christ struck him so forcibly that he stood still on the street, and, after pausing a few moments, he said, "Oh, Devil, I won't go another step with you to hell." He turned about, went back to the chapel, and being directed to Isaiah liii. 6, accepted the blessed truth and Jesus with it, and found perfect rest.

Between those who remained in their seats and those who returned to the inquiry meeting, about fifty or sixty anxious souls were gathered together to be spoken with, which occupied some five or six workers, who were conversing with them until 10.30, and afterwards some special cases were taken into the Manse, and dealt with there. On Tuesday morning the three brethren went again to visit the anxious in their own houses, and were kept hard at work until the hour of the public meeting in the evening arrived. The chapel was then filled to overflowing; at the close about sixty anxious waited to be spoken with, a large proportion of whom praised and thanked the Lord for having saved them. On Wednesday afternoon it was arranged to hold a prayer meeting. After an hour had been spent, and the meeting was closed, and the Blessing pronounced, one of the young converts was so full he could not restrain himself He started prayer and praise and thanksgiving to the Lord for saving him, and cried to the Lord to continue the blessed work in their midst; the fire caught the others who were present, until seventeen of the young converts engaged in prayer, one after the other; and so eager were they that sometimes two or three were on their feet at one time. So short and pointed were their requests that the seventeen prayers did not occupy more than twenty minutes.

On Thursday a gentleman, who is a large landed proprietor in Aberdeenshire, came to aid in the work. Besides getting a rich blessing to his own soul, he was greatly used of the Lord in his public addresses and in his visitations of the anxious at their own homes. A praise and testimony meeting was held that forenoon for the benefit of the young converts. An audience of about two hundred came together. One of the young converts started to his feet and thanked the Lord that he was one day old; another that he was three days old; a third, an old, grey-headed man, thanked the Lord that although he had lost one of his bodily eyes, and the other was fast following, the Lord had opened both the eyes of his soul to see the precious Saviour. In the evening the chapel was again filled with a most attentive congregation, and at the inquiry meeting about seventy waited for conversation, occupying the time of those conversing with them until about 10.30.

On Friday and Saturday evenings the chapel was again crowded, and the number of inquirers who were anxious to be spoken with would number about 110 on these two evenings.

On Sabbath, the 28th, a prayer meeting was held at 8 a.m., which was attended by about sixty. So eager were the people to hear, that five additional meetings were held ere the services closed; at the evening meeting the chapel could not contain the numbers who came out, and the many who came together at the inquiry meeting to be pointed to the Saviour was most encouraging, and many professed to find peace. About 400 souls have been personally dealt with in this small village during the week. One peculiarity of the work is the open honesty of the inhabitants with whom you come in contact. If you ask them whether their souls have been converted, they will give you at once a straightforward "Yes" or "No." Another thing is the entire absence of all noise and excitement; if any were to ask how this work originated, and has been carried on, the answer is to be found in Mark xvi. 20.

R. S.

Mr. J. B. Wookey, Secretary of the Gospel Purity Association, will be glad of the opportunity of addressing the male members of senior Bible classes in London, on Sunday afternoons. His address is 31, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Major Whittle closed his labours in Leavenworth, Kan., February 19, and began meetings in Topeka on Sabbath, February 21. The work at Leavenworth has been a great blessing to the Churches, and has resulted in numerous conversions.

Cow Cross Mission.—Mr. William Catlin has issued his annual report. He and his fellow labourers are still toiling on for the temporal and eternal benefit of the poor of Clerkenwell. There is an all-round practical Christianity exhibited in connection with this Mission. In addition to Gospel services in the open air, Sadlers' Wells Theatre, and in the Mission Hall, the hungry have been fed. The address of the General Superintendent is 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

Mr. Francis Murphy in Ohio.—A correspondent of The New York Witness writes telling of the good work being done by Francis Murphy and his son, in Mansfield, Ohio. They have been holding a series of evening meetings in that city in one of the rinks. The rink was large and would hold about two thousand five hundred people. It had been crowded to overflowing each night. Unfortunately, some wretch set it on fire on the morning of February 9, and it was totally destroyed. Mr. Murphy is doing great good throughout Ohio, and can collect and hold immense audiences. Mr. Murphy, jun., addressed a large assembly in the Congregational Church here on the evening of the 11th inst. He is greatly esteemed here as a Temperance advocate, and a more promising young man is seldom found. Would to God there were many more such men as Francis Murphy and his son!

DISTRESS IN EAST LONDON.

[Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo's journal, is eminently readable this month. From its "Personal Notes," crowded with incidents, at once pathetic and heart-stirring, of privation meekly borne, and of loyal service for the Lord among his poor and his little ones, we take the following paragraphs.]

THE distress in East London this winter has been quite unprecedented for its severity. For many years I have known nothing at all like it. The inclement weather greatly accentuated difficulties which naturally arose from the widespread depression of trade. I never knew so many thousands of persons of the respectable, decent, and industrious class to be in such want of food and needful clothing as has been brought under my notice this year. It has been almost a hopeless task to struggle with the chronic and deep-seated poverty to be found not in any one particular quarter of the East-end, but throughout almost every district. My excellent fellow-workers are unceasing in their labours among them. Hundreds of families are personally visited every day from room to room, by our deaconesses and other experienced helpers, and any little relief we can give is distributed as wisely as possible; yet the misery in which poor helpless women and delicate children are involved is at times appalling to contemplate. Not one shilling of the Mansion House Fund has found its way into my hands; we have simply done what we could with such monies as were sent to me direct for the purpose of relief. Some of my workers are almost growing faint and weary in the struggle, so ineffectual seem their best efforts to stem the stream. Two devoted friends, who have during the past winter visited hundreds of families, frankly told me that it was more than they were able to endure to contemplate day by day the quiet despair which seemed to have settled down upon numbers of the people whom they visited, all of whom belong to what we would call the respectable, industrious classes, who were, to a large extent, deprived of the means of subsistence, and before whom there scarcely dawns a single ray of hope.

The "great clothes difficulty" is one of the most distressing that confronts the destitute poor in the East-end. When decency survives even the lingering pain of slow starvation, the labour of earning a subsistence is immensely impeded by the lack of garments. In the first week of this year application was made to me on behalf of the children in a family living in a single room in High-street, Shadwell. On investigating the case I found the whole of the family almost literally blockaded in their squalid one room by the sheer want of rags to cover their nakedness. The surroundings were of an intensely wretched description. Three girls, aged 17, 15, and 9, and three boys, aged respectively 12, 11, and 8, lived with their father in a dirty hovel almost bare of furniture. Not one was fit to go out of doors, except the father himself. The history of this man has been one of gradual failure, due in large part to his being subject to epileptic fits, a tendency which he had transmitted to his eldest daughter. He was at one time a shipping butcher, in which occupation he had filled more than one situation industriously and honestly till the inevitable dismissal came on account of his illnesses. For some time he had worked at a street-barrow stall, but this, too, had to be given up; and at the time my attention was called to his case he had simply starved with his family for some days. The motherless children were in terrible destitution and nakedness, and it was with great thankfulness of heart that I was able to give clothing to the elder, and, on account of the father's physical infirmity, to open our doors for the three youngest ones, who are now, thank God, safely housed in Stepney and at Ilford.

On the subject of Free Meals to Children Dr. Barnardo writes: I am giving hot free breakfasts every morning to the children of our free schools in Stepney, and four times a week our dinner-table is also spread for the wee mites who are the greatest and the most innocent sufferers during every season of distress, from whatever cause it may arise. To give a good hot breakfast of cocoa and bread costs one halfpenny, and a really nutritious dinner costs a penny. Thus, for every £10 received, 2400 children get breakfast, and 1200 dinner. That is about the extent of my weekly expenditure. All gifts sent in aid of this endeavour should be marked for Free Meal Fund, and be addressed to me at 18, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

Letters to the Editor.

EMIGRATION FOR WOMEN.

DEAR SIR,—So many very suitable applications reach me through readers of THE CHRISTIAN that I shall be glad if you will mention that our first protected party for this season sails under the escort of Rev. J. Bridger and our matron in the Circassian, April 22.

There is now free emigration to Western Australia for domestic servants, with adequate protection both on the voyage and on arrival.

Thanking you for the kind manner in which you have always helped on our work, I am, yours faithfully, ADELAIDE ROSS.

Snelsten Rectory, Ashburne, Derbyshire.

"HEART CIRCUMCISION."

DEAR SIR,—The controversy as to the doctrine of sinless perfection is an old one, and I do not wish to revive it by controverting the statements made in the passage which you have quoted from The Bombay Guardian. But I would beg permission to question the interpretation therein given of Romans viii. 11.

In the excellent commentary on the Romans, by Rev. Handley Moule, lately issued as part of the "Cambridge Bible for Schools," the following notes upon verses 10 and 11 of this chapter are to be found:—

"The body is here the literal body doomed to death, and so already 'as good as dead,' not yet 'redeemed' (ver. 23). It cannot here mean 'the flesh' (in the sense of that word in this context), because just below it is promised that the body shall be made alive hereafter by the Holy Ghost. . . . In short, the Christian is here reminded that the penal results of sin still affect the body, so that it must die, but that the regenerate spirit is rescued from the spirit's death. Ver. 11, 'Quicken'—make alive. Though the word 'raise' is not used, the reference is to the resurrection day (cf. 1 Cor. xv. 22). The word is no doubt chosen to include the case of those who shall 'remain to the coming.'"

It is quite evident that the "quickening" of the body in verse 11 must be the opposite to the death of the body in verse 11, so that if the quickened body means the sanctified body, the dead body means the unsanctified body. And who can imagine that Paul would have written to the Christians at Rome: "If Christ be in you, the body is unsanctified because of sin: but the spirit is life because of righteousness." If the body of each believer is sanctified for the Lord's service, why should Paul assume that theirs was not? And, what is more, the sanctification of the Christian's body is the result of his spirit's sanctification, and must always be proportional to it. So that any contrast between the two in this respect must be a false one.

Verse 13 is also inaccurately quoted. It does not say: "If ye through the Spirit do mortify the body, ye shall live;" but "the deeds of the body." The passage is evidently parallel to Col. iii. 5, where it is not the body, but indwelling sin which he calls upon them to mortify, i e., put to death.

I remain, truly yours,

Woking. HORACE NOEL.

[We are thankful for this correction, only regretting that the points alluded to did not catch our attention. We need hardly assure our readers that we have never been able to accept the doctrine of sinless perfection, or the total eradication of sinful tendency in the believer's heart. To our view, such teaching is contrary to Scripture and experience. On the other hand, we protest against the idea, which, though unformulated, is exceedingly prevalent, that conscious bondage to sin in some form, and, to some extent, is a practical necessity. We hold that this doctrine of necessary disobedience is as pernicious as the opposite extreme of sinless perfection. We quoted the article from The Bombay Guardian, because it seemed to us to rouse Christian believers to seek and expect such an experience of the Spirit's keeping that they shall be able to say with Paul, "It is no more I that live, but Christ that liveth in me."—ED]

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE NEW PAROCHIAL SOCIETY of the Protestant Episcopal Church, recently organised in New York, has more calls for the services of missioners than it can respond to.

TUNIS. — A small Protestant congregation exists at Tunis, numbering from 100 to 200 persons. Thanks to the benevolent support of the resident French minister, the Bey has given them some land in the best part of Tunis, worth £1200, where they intend to build a church.—Christianisme.

MANY Italian journals are filled with facts connected with the exportation of children of both sexes. L'Italie, of Milan, says the speculation in children who are sold for a few francs to mountebanks or for worse purposes, has become a shameful but fruitful industry to many parents.

DENMARK.—The death is announced, on Feb. 2, of the venerable Dr. Kalker, who was president of the Evangelical Alliance meeting at Copenhagen in 1884. Dr. Kalker was born in Stockholm in 1802, and was the son of a Jewish Rabbi, but was converted to Christ when twenty-one years of age.

ST. GALL.—The Grand Council of this canton has passed a law forbidding all public works on Sunday, Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Easter, Ascension Day, and Whitsuntide. Wages are not to be paid on the rest-days nor in public-houses. The law came into operation in January.—Journal Religieux.

JAPAN.—A society has been formed in Japan whose object is the introduction of the Roman alphabet into the language. This is a much needed reform. A pupil in the ordinary public schools has to charge his memory with 4000 written characters, and in the higher schools with double the number. —L'Evangéliste.

NATIVE ITALIAN CHURCHES. — Rev. W. Paterson, Fraserburgh, says:—There is evidence of such encouraging progress among these churches that if Italy were adopted by the Scotch churches and the English Independents, and helped in planting new churches for a few years, Britain might soon retire and leave the land entirely to Italians.

SEWING WOMEN IN NEW YORK.—There are in New York 200,000 women who make their living by sewing, and the majority of whom exist under conditions of the most crushing servitude and incessant toil. These poor creatures are the helpless thralls of so-called "sweaters;" men who take contracts to furnish large quantities of garments to the wholesale and retail houses, and grind their workmen down to the lowest pittance that will support life. The "sweaters" have no bowels of compassion, and the supply of sewing women is so constant and large that resistance to the starvation wages offered is, in the absence of organisation, out of the question.

THE PLAGUE SPOT OF EUROPE. — Yet another of the too-frequent scandals connected with the gambling-houses at Monte Carlo has been made public. The victims this time are described as "an English baronet, about fifty-five years of age, who lived in a magnificent villa on the Italian frontier," and his housekeeper. About ten days ago the baronet, who is said to be well known in the English colony that winters at Nice and Mentone, blew out his brains with a revolver, owing to the loss of his whole fortune at the gambling tables; and his suicide was followed some days later by that of his housekeeper, who, in sorrow at her master's death, poisoned herself with laudanum.

MADAGASCAR.—No doubt, says The Nonconformist, Queen Ranavalona will be seriouly embarrassed by the permanent presence of a French agent in her capital; if he should happen to be an overbearing and fanatical man he will be able to give much trouble. But, except by a gross violation of the new treaty with France, he will be unable to interfere with the internal administration of the country, or with the freedom of missionaries, so long as they are protected by the native Government. The French at Antananarivo will be—for some time, at least—an intrusive and hostile element; and, as they are not above intriguing, and there will be no adequate counteracting European influence, it is impossible to say that both the Government and Protestant missionaries will not have cause for much anxiety.

DISTRESSED LONDON.

Millwall.—The free meals given in the schoolroom of the Congregational Chapel, Millwall, have been the means of bringing some under the sound of the Gospel, and in several cases lasting good has resulted.

21, Maud-road, Plaistow. W. J. Temple.

Destitute Seamen.—Miss Child and her helpers have had much encouragement in the Gospel work in connection with the soup suppers amongst the destitute "sons of the sea." Any who will help in speaking to them will be welcomed at the "Sailors' Welcome Home," 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway.

Christian Community.—Among those we are endeavouring to help are some of the poorest children and adults of this parish. The cases of utter and frightful destitution reported by our city missionary make one's heart ache. We are giving free meals as often as funds will allow. G. F. Hilcken, Treasurer.

Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, E.

Summers Town Mission, Lower Tooting.—The mission workers are endeavouring to raise money for tickets for which the recipients will receive food or coals, and help the hungry until change of weather sets in or work is found. The work is carried on in a neighbourhood where the residents are almost entirely of the working classes, and many are regular attendants at the Hall. The Committee appeal to the Christian public to aid them. The Treasurer is Mr. Proctor, Glengariffe, Nightingale-lane, S.W.

St. Giles's Christian Mission.—I know not what we should have done, through this terrible winter, but for the prompt and loving gifts from readers of The Christian. We have distributed some thousands of tickets for bread, meat, coals, soup, tea, and sugar, besides providing children's dinners, warm clothing, and blankets, and we feel we must go on while this bitter weather continues. We are supplying 1000 good dinners for the famishing children at a cost of £5.

Sincerely yours, Geo. Hatton.

4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Gee-street Christian Mission (Goswell-road, St. Lukes, E.C.). — This work was commenced about twenty-three years ago in Bell-alley, Goswell-road, and for want of room was removed to the chapel, No. 5, Gee-street, close by. Many children and youths have been led to Jesus, and the Adult Mission has been a saving blessing to their parents. The evening classes and dinners to poor, hungry children have been most helpful. The free Sunday breakfasts and Gospel services afterwards, are also a great blessing to many poor people. The Hon. Superintendent is Mr. H. Rudgley, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside, London, E.C.

Artillery-lane Mission.—For years past a quiet yet important work for Christ has been carried on at the Artillery-lane Mission, Spitalfields, by Mrs. Finn, and her helpers. It is conducted solely by voluntary help from the Superintendent downwards. Through the kindness of the Samaritan Society free breakfasts are given to the needy on Sunday mornings. There is visitation carried on at twelve large lodging-houses, in each of which from fifty to 200 of the lowest and most abandoned are found. Gospel services are also held in the Hall at various times. The workers have seen numerous cases of well-ascertained conversion. Any who might like to see or assist in the work will be gladly welcomed. It is pitiful to see the numbers attending who are in such an abject state of poverty, and to whom no assistance can be rendered. Any sums given will be economically spent. Artillery-lane is closely adjacent to Petticoat-lane. Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Finn, 14, Talbot-place, St. Ann's-road, Stamford-hill, N.

Mr. F. E. Marsh has concluded a three weeks' successful Gospel mission at Darvel, N.B.

Sailors' Bethel, Lowestoft.—At the recent anniversary of this Mission encouraging reports and testimonies were given.

Polish is not piety: refinement is not religion: manners are not morals, else Paris would be a paradise. —Dr. Alexander White.

Correction.—We are asked to say that the messenger referred to in our last as having absconded with orders for copies of the official report of the Advent Conference was not the trusted Mildmay messenger, and that the missing orders were those taken at the Hymn-book Stall.

African Missions.—We would draw attention to the notices in our list of announcements of two missionary meetings to be held at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, and Conference Hall, Mildmay. They are certain to be of deep interest, and we trust there will be large attendances.

Erratum.—In the report of Rev. H. E. Brooke's address at the Mildmay Prophetic Conference in last number (p. 27, col. 3, line 27), for "or reside (as it is sometimes put) in a house under ordinary circumstances," read, "not that He is to reside (as it is sometimes put) in a house," &c.

Emigration to Canada.—Dr. Barnardo wishes us to announce that a special meeting will, D.V., be held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, on Monday next, 22nd inst., from 12 noon to 1 p.m., to commend to the Lord two hundred of his lads who are to sail for Canada on the 25th. The boys will be present, and Dr. Barnardo will give a brief address.

Manchester.—A fourteen days' successful mission has been held in the United Methodist Free Church, Queen's-road, by Rev. Edwin A. Carter, evangelist from Mr. Spurgeon's Pastor's College. During the mission Mr. Carter addressed the employers of Craven Brothers at their works during the dinner hour, and also the workmen in connection with the coach and waggon works of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company at Miles Platting and Newton Heath.

Mission and other Appeals.

Christian Mission Hall, Blackstock-road, N.—The workers in connection with this mission hall, which has recently been renovated, earnestly appeal for funds to meet a deficit, so that they may be enabled to carry on their hitherto successful mission. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. J. Mitchell, treasurer, 46, Victoria-road, Stoke Newington, N.

Fishermen.—In a very short time the trawling fleet belonging to Brixham, South Devon, will proceed to the North Sea on their annual fishing voyage. I want to distribute Christian books, tracts, periodicals, &c., and penny Testaments, and shall be glad to receive supplies (carriage paid).

John T. Almy, Baptist Minister.

Vectis Villa, Brixham, Devon.

Shacklewell Gospel Mission.—We have to leave our present room on or before the 25th inst., and move into another room in the same street. Considerable alterations are needed, and the funds of our Mission being entirely exhausted, we ask your readers to help us. We need about £50 for this purpose. Charles Gull, Superintendent.

4, Stafford-place, Grove-road, Stamford-hill, N.

Servants' Home, Beresford House, Fremont-street Hackney.—A small house has been taken near the Triangle, Hackney, for the benefit of respectable servants, out of situations, living at a distance from their friends. Such a sheltering, Christian Home is greatly needed, and this has been commenced in faith and prayer, those connected with it being assured the Lord will provide. Any help towards maintenance and furnishing will be gratefully received by Mrs. Gawin Kirkham, 15, Beresford-road, Mildmay-park; or Mrs. Seymour, Wilton House, Hackney.

Welcome Home, Cardiff.—We have seventy-six destitute sailors to whom we give breakfast and supper and shelter every day, and three meals on Sunday. Their misery is great. These are times for fine investments in Luke xiv. 14. George Lawrence.

17a, Bute-road, Cardiff.

Stratford, E.—In acknowledging monies subscribed by our readers, Rev. Raymond Pelly states that a good Gospel and Temperance work is being sustained at the Mission Hall in connection with his church. Men, women, and children are reached in various ways, and special efforts are being made at present to supply the needs of the poor.

Deep Sea Fishermen.—Following close upon the announcement of the Duchess of Grafton's generous gift of a new vessel to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, we learn that an anonymous donor in the county of Norfolk has handed a cheque for One Thousand Pounds to Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P., as a donation towards the work of the mission.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 21.—DEUT. IV.

7.—For what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them? &c.—This verse and the next give the two distinguishing characteristics of Israel's greatness. "God nigh unto them . . . in all things that we call upon Him for," and "this law which I set before you this day." In other words, prayer and the Word of God. By the one it was their privilege to speak to God; by the other God spoke to them.

13.—His covenant, . . . even ten commandments.—An important identification of the Sinai covenant with the ten commandments."

15.—Ye saw no manner of similitude.—The kind of idolatry against which they are here cautioned is not so much that forbidden by the first commandment—the worship of other gods, as that of the second—worshipping the true God under some form or similitude. This was the idolatry into which they fell in the worship of the golden calf (see Psalm cvi. 20), and afterwards became Israel's sin (1 Kings xii. 28) under Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

20.—Out of the iron furnace.—An iron furnace means a furnace for smelting iron.

27.—The Lord shall scatter you among the nations.—This contemplates "all the dispersions which would come upon the rebellious nation in future times, even down to the dispersion under the Romans, which continues still."—Keil.

30.—When thou art in tribulation.—The same word used in Daniel xii. 1, "a time of trouble," and from the reference to "the latter days" apparently the same time is intended.

41.—Then Moses severed three cities, &c.—These verses are inserted between two discourses of Moses, simply because the fact recorded took place between their delivery.

MONDAY, MARCH 22.—DEUT. V.

3.—The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers.—"The 'fathers' are neither those who died in the wilderness, as Augustine supposed, nor the frefathers in Egypt, as Calvin imagined, but the patriarchs, as in chap. iv. 37."—Keil. This distinction between the covenant of Sinai and that made with fathers is an anticipation of Gal. iii. 17. But with us who are all of us here alive this day.—"The covenant was made not with the particular individuals who were then alive, but rather with the nation as an organic whole."—Ibid.

12.—Keep the Sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee.—This reference to the original command in Exod. xx. 8 shows that what follows is not intended to be a quotation of the fourth commandment, from which, in ver. 15, it differs, but rather a new edition of it, so far as concerns the different reason for keeping it which is appended. It is not here (as in Exod. xx) God's rest in creation, but Israel's rest in redemption from Egypt, which is to be the reason for observing the Sabbath; and this paves the way for the New Testament view of Christ's rest in redemption, into which believers enter by faith (see Heb. iv. 10).

22.—He added no more.—"Lit., 'He did not add,' i.e., He spoke no more with the great voice directly to the people, but addressed all other communications to them through Moses. The expression points to the occurrence as one that was not repeated. This marks . . . the special eminence and permanent obligation of the ten commandments as compared with the rest of the Mosaic enactments."—Sp. Com.

28.—They have well said all that they have spoken.—"God approved of what the people said, because it sprang from a consciousness of the unworthiness of any sinner to come into the presence of the holy God."—Keil. And, it may be added, because it expressed their desire for a mediator to stand between them and God.

TUESDAY, MARCH 23.—DEUT. VI.

4.—Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord.—"These words may be termed the creed of the Jews. Their expression is in the original singularly terse and forcible: "Jehovah our Elohim, Jehovah one." Their very brevity opens them to different constructions (these may be seen in the margin of R.V.). The rendering of A.V. is on all grounds the best."—Sp. Com.

"This clause not merely precludes polytheism, but also that which reduces the one absolute God to a national Deity—a Baal (Hosea ii. 16), and, in fact, every form of theism and deism which creates for itself a supreme God, according to philosophical abstractions and ideas. For Jehovah is the absolutely living God, as He has made Himself known in his deeds in Israel for the salvation of the whole world."—Keil.

See this finally recognised in Zech. xiv. 9: "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one."

5.—With all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.—"The demand, 'with all the heart,' excludes all half-heartedness, all division of the heart in its love. The heart is mentioned, first, as the seat of the emotions generally, and of love in particular; then follows the soul, as the centre of personality in man, to depict the love as pervading the entire self-consciousness; and to this is added 'and with all thy might,' i.e., of body and soul."—Keil.

12.—Beware lest thou forget the Lord.—They are here warned lest the very blessings which the Lord should give them might tempt them to forget the Giver, as we learn from Hosea ii. 8 they did.

25.—It shall be our righteousness, if we observe to do all these commandments.—This is not, as many commentators suppose, to be explained in harmony with the righteousness of faith as set forth in the Gospel; it is rather in most marked contrast; for the condition "if," on which the attainment of righteousness under the law hinges, leads to universal failure; but "what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh," &c. (see Rom. viii. 3).

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24.—DEUT. VII.

6.—For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God.—In these days of exaggerated humanitarian sentimentality, when man is made much of and God ignored, it sounds somewhat strange to read, "Thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them . . . nor show mercy unto them . . . for thou art an holy people." But, nevertheless, this was the very reason why humanitarian instincts were to be sacrificed at the shrine of God's command. First of all, they were to destroy the nations because God had appointed them the executors of his wrath and just judgment against their abounding wickedness (see ix. 4); secondly, they were for their own sakes to destroy them, lest they should be turned away from following the Lord (ver. 4). There is no real opposition between "Love your enemies" and "Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate Thee."—Ps. cxxxix. 21.

10.—Repayeth them that hate Him to their face.—This probably refers to the open and manifest judgment from God Himself, which came upon the sinful inhabitants of the land through Israel. See Josh. ii. 9, where Rahab's "I know that the Lord hath given you the land" shows how the nations of Canaan regarded the invasion of Israel.

12.—If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep, and do them.—Keil renders the word "judgments" "demands of right of the covenant Lord upon his covenant people." The whole context both preceding and succeeding points to the commands to destroy the Canaanites, and exterminate their idolatries, as being the "judgments" here referred to.

22.—Thou mayest not consume them at once, lest the beasts of the field increase upon thee.—The spiritual lesson conveyed by these words is well pointed out in one of Hart's hymns, who, speaking of why sin is not at once extripated, says:—

> Spiritual pride, that rampant beast,
>   Would rear its haughty head;
> True faith would soon be dispossessed,
>   And carelessness succeed.

THURSDAY, MARCH 25.—DEUT. VIII.

3.—Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—"Lit., 'every outgoing of the mouth of the Lord' (comp. xxix. 56). The term 'word' is inserted by A.V. after the LXX., which is followed in Matt. iv. 4 and Luke iv. 4. It does not so much refer to the spoken word or written word as to God's appointments. 'He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast' (Ps. xxxiii. 9). "God does not speak grammatical vocables, but true essential things. Thus sun and moon, heaven and earth, Peter and Paul, thou and I, are nothing but words of God."—Luther. On the quotation of these words by the Lord Jesus in his temptation (Matt. iv.), Stier remarks: "The first meaning of the saying of Jesus is, 'I commit the sustentation of my life entirely into the hands of God.'"

16.—To do thee good at thy latter end.—"This is presented as the result of God's dealings. The people had been suffered to hunger (ver. 3) and fed with manna in order that God might prove them. But this trial was not laid on them arbitrarily, but as a moral discipline qualifying for the blessings which God designed ultimately to bestow. The 'humbling' and 'proving' are exhibited as God's immediate purpose: 'the doing good' to Israel as the eventual issue."—Sp. Com.

18.—It is He that giveth thee power to get wealth.—"Like all the guidance of Israel by the Lord, what is stated here is applicable to all believers. It is through humiliations and trials that the Lord leads his people to blessedness. Through the desert of tribulation, anxiety, distress, and merciful interposition, He conducts them to Canaan into the land of rest, where they are refreshed and satisfied in the full enjoyment of the blessings of his grace and salvation; but those alone who continue humble, not attributing the good fortune and prosperity to which they attain at last, to their own exertion, strength, perseverance, or wisdom, but gratefully enjoying this good as a gift of the grace of God."—Keil.

FRIDAY, MARCH 26.—DEUT. IX.

3—He which goeth over before thee . . . He shall destroy them and He shall bring them down.—"The threefold repetition of the personal pronoun" He "is peculiarly emphatic."—Keil.

5.—Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thy heart, dost thou go to possess their land.—This warning against the self-righteous thought of their merit entitling them to the inheritance has its New Testament counterpart in the words of Eph. ii. 8, 9, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

8.—Also in Horeb ye provoked the Lord.—"Rather 'even in Horeb:' the conjunction here, as often, introduces a special example of a general statement. The time and circumstances made the apostasy at Horeb particularly inexcusable."—Sp. Com.

20.—And I prayed for Aaron also the same time.—"It was not from the people only, but from Aaron also, that Moses averted the wrath of God through his intercession, when it was about to destroy him. In the historical account in Exod. xxxii. there is no special reference to this intercession, as it is included in the intercession for the whole nation. On the present occasion, however, Moses gave especial prominence to this particular feature, not only that he might make the people thoroughly aware that at that time Israel could not even boast of the righteousness of its eminent men (Isa. xliii. 27), but also to bring out the fact, which is described still more fully in chap. x. 6, that Aaron's investiture with the priesthood, and the maintenance of this institution, was purely a work of Divine grace."—Keil.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27.—DEUT. X.

The first five verses of this chapter give special emphasis to the object for which the ark was prepared, viz., to contain the (second) two tables of the law, the first having been broken by Moses, to denote the complete failure of the covenant at Sinai. These (second) tables were not to be put before the people, as seems to have been intended with the first, but were put into the ark—the type of Christ—there to remain till He should come who should say: "Yea, thy law is within my heart."

8.—At that time the Lord separated the tribe of Levi.—The words, "at that time," as also in ver. 1, denote that of the encampment at Sinai.

12.—And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee?—"I.e., 'Since all that thou hast is thus shown to be of mere grace, without desert of thine own.'"—Sp. Com. The word "require" is in the Hebrew, literally, "ask," and thus shows that what is here spoken of is not the Lord's "requirement" in the sense of obedience to his law as such, but rather his reasonable claim to the voluntary love and service of a saved people from gratitude to Him for all his unmerited favours so freely bestowed on them, as well as his unwearying forbearance with their repeated provocations.

16.—Circumcise therefore.—This points to the spiritual import of circumcision, which, following the typical import of the outward sign, meant "the putting away of the filth of the flesh" (1 Pet. iii. 21). But, though the aim of every Jew "who is one inwardly" (Rom. ii. 29), its attainment is only to be had in Christ (see Col ii. 11).

WESTWARD HO!

TO THE READERS OF "The Christian." [2nd NOTICE.

Dear Friends,

The great success which, under God's blessing, attended our Emigration movement last year has encouraged me to make yet further efforts to place out in the Dominion a further number of carefully trained and selected Boys and Girls during the present year.

Our enterprise opens for 1886 with great promise. I hope to send out at least SIX HUNDRED children, in three parties of 200 each, during the present season.

The first party of 200 boys will (D.V.) leave by the Parisian, Allan Line, on March 25th; the second party, also consisting of 200 boys, will, I hope, leave in the second week in June; and the third party, of 200 girls, in the second week in July. As on former occasions, each of these parties will go out under the care of valued and experienced co-workers, who have year by year taken charge of similar contingents. They will go straight to our beautiful Home at Peterboro', Ontario, and from that place be distributed throughout the province to homes which will have been found for them through the agency of our Canadian Staff.

I would again impress upon all the readers of The Christian that the boys and girls I send to Canada are kept under our eye for years after they have been placed out; that both by visits and by letters we continue to inform ourselves of the thorough happiness and welfare of each child, and are swift to change its situation, removing it from one locality to another, if the circumstances or conduct of the employer seem at any time to demand such action.

That, spite the depression which undoubtedly obtains in most of the large cities of the Dominion, there should yet be a real demand for our boys and girls throughout the country, is the best possible proof that the Canadians are beginning to appreciate the quality of the emigrants we convey to their shores, and are satisfied that the work of TRAINING and PREPARING our children for useful lives out there has been done on this side in a thoroughly wise, practical, and Christian fashion.

No one can read the incidents given in the March issue of Night and Day, page 44, under the head of "Canadian Notes" (vide), which illustrate the great benefits conferred upon the little Emigrants themselves by their change of scene, without feeling that this movement is one of the grandest that could well be devised for the benefit of all concerned: this country so overcrowded—that country so sparsely populated; the overburdened ratepayers here—the harassed farmers there, who cannot obtain useful labour except at exorbitant prices; the starving multitudes here, for whom there is no ray of hope while they continue here—and the happy, because useful, lads and lasses transported to fertile regions over there, full of abundance of food for those who, uncontaminated by the vices of the adult, are prepared to enter upon a life of real industry, cheered all the way along by a prospect of independent comfort.

If my lay sermon has any particular application, it is in the wonderful fact that £8 10s. is the magic wand by which so great a change can be achieved in the experience of one poor lad or orphan girl. That sum amply suffices to pay for everything (except the training here)—comfortable outfit of clothing (3 suits)—good box—railway fare to Liverpool—ocean passage to Quebec—railway journey to our Peterboro' Home, with a small margin over to recoup us for a brief stay at our Canadian Distributing Home before being sent out to the situation obtained by my agents on the other side.

Thus, to emigrate the whole 600 children will cost at this rate £5,100, and I appeal confidently to our wisest and most thoughtful co-workers for

A SPECIAL GIFT TOWARDS THIS BENEFICENT EMIGRATION FUND.

If the means are forthcoming, 100 trained lads or girls can be settled for life in Canada for £850, or Fifty for £425.

Sometimes I envy the possessors of wealth the grand opportunities which their money gives them of effecting so much good. Only to think that by the expenditure of, say, £102, twelve young children without a friend in life here, may be settled down in as many respectable Christian homes in Canada, where they will soon learn to forget the sorrows and deprivations of their early years, is enough to make any heart hopeful as to the future of myriads of little ones otherwise so sad and hopeless!

Your faithful Co-worker amongst Christ's Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

WHEN lecturing a few years ago upon a favourite topic, Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE was congratulated by the chairman upon his wonderful mastery of the Cornish dialect. Mr. Pearse humorously replied that there was nothing remarkable in the fact, for until he was one and twenty he was "a Cornish minor." Some of the audience, not understanding the play upon the word, concluded that the popular author had been a veritable miner, and went away wondering how so rough a jewel had taken on so fine a polish. Those in the secret, however, knew that the lecturer was only playfully referring to his Cornish extraction. He was born at Camborne in 1842.

The scenes and circumstances of childhood, the atmosphere of the town or village where the early days of life are spent, the very pictures on the walls of the home, are all important factors in education, and exert a greater influence in the shaping of character than many imagine. How largely Mark Guy Pearse was thus influenced is abundantly demonstrated by his writings. His boyhood was passed amid such scenery as that so graphically described in "Daniel Quorm":—

> High heaps of stones on either side of the way, the refuse of the mine workings; little streaming rivulets, that had just been pumped from great depths, and were yet warm; clanking chains, that stretched from the engine-house away to the shaft, and thence down in the mysterious gloom; men dressed in suits of flannel, stained a dull ochrish red, with a candle hanging from the shoulder, and another stuck in front of the hard canvas hat, ready to light them on their perilous journey; up and down the coast projecting headlands, bold and rugged; and, beyond all, the Atlantic, transparent green where the yellow sand lay underneath it, merging on either side into the deepest blue.

The people among whom Mr. Pearse grew up are thus described in a lecture given at the City Temple, entitled, "Some characteristics of West Cornwall":—

(From Photograph by F. Snary, Bristol.)

> Of average height, but of rather more than average courage, toughness and endurance; with a quickness of perception and a love of adventure developed by their occupation; a temperament emotional, impulsive, and yet capable of a faithful devotedness; of the stuff that makes good lovers and good haters; strong in their preferences and in their prejudices; sensitive, and somewhat suspicious of strangers; stubborn if opposed, and if threatened dreadfully pig-headed, yet quick to respond to the first approach of tenderness and generosity. Loving companionship, the Cornishman is a poor bachelor, and lives almost all the world over in communities, making the interest of his set completely his own, and cheerfully sharing their hardships. Take them altogether, they are men with good heads well set on broad shoulders, men with back-bones in them—vertebrate creatures—not mere jelly-fish, taking the shape of any hand that squeezes them; and with hearts in them—not mere digestive apparatus, as Carlyle would say.

In such surroundings, Mr. Pearse's wonderful powers of observation found a fine field for exercise. Here lived sturdy Daniel Quorm, and dear old Frankey Vivian, and Widow Pascoe. Here he knew old Rosie, and the blind fiddler, John Tregenoweth, and many another of whom he has written so graphically.

Mark Guy Pearse was converted at Wesley College, Sheffield, when it was under the distinguished governorship of the late Rev. Dr. Waddy, for whom Mr. Pearse always cherished a very reverent and loving regard. His first religious address, given while yet a schoolboy, at a little chapel near Sheffield, was a prophecy of the career of usefulness, as a Christian teacher, for which God has so abundantly qualified him. In 1861 he left the beautiful wilds of Cornwall for London, and entered as a medical student at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. This step was taken with a deep consciousness that God had called him to a higher work; but the way was not yet made plain. The manner in which God directed the young man's steps is only another illustration of the truth that the best preparation for future honour and dignity is found in the faithful and patient discharge of present duty. When God has other and higher work for his servants, He will not overlook them.

Being a member of the Methodist Society and a local preacher, Mr. Pearse at once attached himself to the Wesleyan Church nearest his residence, and tried to find some work. But it was not an easy matter to discover an outlet for his energies, either in teaching or in preaching. Referring to these days, Mr. Pearse says, "I knew but two or three people in the congregation with whom I worshipped, and went in and out amongst them as a stranger without a word of friendly recognition—a state of things which I am thankful to hope is less common in London Methodism to-day." After having been in London for a few weeks, Mr. Pearse was introduced, at the house of Mr. James Duncan, to the late Rev. Thomas Vasey, the then superintendent of the Hackney Circuit. This devoted minister talked to the young man in such a kindly genial way that his heart was at once won. And so a few evenings later in Mr. Vasey's study he was prepared to give a hearty response to the loving appeal, "Come now, I want you to tell me who you are, and what you are doing, and all about yourself."

"It happened," says Mr. Pearse, "that for many weeks I had felt an irrepressible conviction of my call to the ministry, and had longed for light and direction in the matter. Thoughts and feelings had burned within me for weeks past, until I prayed that either my way might be opened, or these impressions be destroyed for ever. Here, now, they found this strange outlet, encouraged to the utmost freedom by such kindness. This was the beginning of a kindness and interest that it is impossible to describe." The ultimate result was that Mr. Pearse gave himself to the work of the Wesleyan ministry. His first pastoral charge was in Leeds, where he commenced his labours in 1863.

The triennial change of ministers, which is the rule in the Wesleyan Church, like all human arrangements, has its defects; yet, in some cases, at any rate, it certainly works beneficial results. To a sympathetic nature, contact with all sorts and conditions of men is a grand opportunity for development; and to an observant man it affords unsurpassed means for the study of character. And these advantages Mr. Pearse did not fail to utilise as he went first into the midst of the working men of Leeds; then to the refinements of a London suburb like Brixton Hill; then away to the agricultural district of Ipswich (where he met with "Mister Horn and his Friends," and all the setting of that story, and where he found such incidents as that described in the January number of The British Workman, entitled, "It Won't Sink"); afterwards from Ipswich to Bedford; thence to Highbury, at that time a rich and influential congregation; and then away to the miseries of the poor and the vices of the rich as they lie side by side in Westminster and Pimlico. In this last sphere of labour his health failed, and for a year he retired to Bude, on the north coast of Cornwall, resuming work afterwards in the quiet town of Launceston. Reminiscences of his sojourn in these places appear in scenes and facts given in "Simon Jasper," and in the volume entitled "Cornish Stories." Of Launceston, quaint and beautiful, Mr. Pearse has given us a picture which we may, perhaps, venture to reproduce:—

> The little town nestles close under the castle, so snug and safe that it is content to sleep, for the most part, in the shadow of its ancient protection. The castle has managed in some subtle way to keep the town in happy harmony with itself. The narrow streets come suddenly upon a modern-looking market-place, but it upholds an aristocratic dignity by doing nothing for six days of the week, maintaining an air of lofty reserve; and it borrows an appearance of antiquity from an old clock that is placed on its roof, where two ancient figures, gaily painted and gilded, strike the quarters of each hour with grave accuracy. You turn aside to a row of shops that display the latest novelties and freshest fashions, but the short street ends in an ancient, square-built gateway, arched, and over it there is the borough lock-up, to which a straggling staircase climbs from the outside. You may perhaps catch the rumble of the train, and the shriek of the whistle, but it is far off and subdued, altogether in another parish, as if old Dunheved (Launceston) itself lay safe from such disturbance and desecration.

After three years spent in this secluded and charming old town, Mr. Pearse removed to Bristol, where he has resided for nearly six years. The books he has written there, "Thoughts on Holiness," and "Some Aspects of the Blessed Life," are, as their titles indicate, expositions on entire consecration. They will prove to be epoch-making books in the spiritual history of thousands. Mr. Pearse's ministry in Bristol has been crowned with continuous and abundant blessing. He can address himself with equal ease to the cultured and uncultured. So great is the desire to hear his fresh and vivacious putting of the old truths, that in the chapels where he preaches a similar usuage prevails to that adopted at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The seat-holders are first admitted, and only five minutes before the commencement of the service are the general public allowed to enter, who then throng aisles, communion-rails, and vestry. The service is joyous, hearty, and enthusiastic, and as free as possible from conventionality. At its close the preacher goes to the door and cordially shakes hands with the people as they leave the chapel. In this way he acquires a knowledge of the congregation, and immediately detects the presence of strangers, to whom words of hearty welcome are spoken.

Mr. Pearse's popularity is due to his reverent familiarity with the Word of God; to his intense loyalty to Christ, and to his earnestness and simplicity, combined with pungency, humour, and pathos; a combination of gifts which never fails, by God's blessing, to attract and benefit a crowd of hearers. Like Mr. Moody, he is not afraid to let the crowd smile—indeed, he often gives his audience the opportunity of relieving their pent-up feelings—but he never lets go the helm; they are in his hands all the time. His sermons sparkle with fresh, apposite, and easily-understood illustrations, "For a sermon without them," says Mr. Pearse, in "Daniel Quorm," "is like a house without windows." These are not unfrequently drawn from child-life. "I was walking along one winter's night," said Mr. Pearse, when recently occupying Mr. Spurgeon's pulpit, "hurrying towards home, with my little maiden at my side. She said, 'Father, I am going to count the stars,' 'Very well, I said, go on!' By and by I heard her counting—two hundred and twenty-three, two hundred and twenty-four, two hundred and twenty-five. 'Oh dear!' she said, 'I had no idea there were so many!' Ah! dear friends, I sometimes say in my soul, 'Now, Master, I am going to count thy benefits.' I am like the little maiden; soon my heart sighs—sighs not with sorrow—but burdened with such goodness, and I say, within myself, 'Ah! I had no idea that there were so many.'"

No one will wonder that Mr. Pearse has such a warm place in his heart for the little ones. He tells us that he went once through the Bible that he might see all that God had said about the children, and it was wonderful to read how He talks and thinks about them. "The only place he could find where men and women were mentioned without children was in Paradise; and he had sometimes thought that if Eve had a babe in Eden to take care of, she would not have had time to listen to the tittle-tattle of the serpent, and been led to steal her Master's apples." "I love to think," says he, in "Simon Jasper," "of how God told the prophet to say that 'the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing,' like as if He counted it one of the prettiest sights earth could show."

The same features which make Mr. Pearse's sermons and addresses so attractive, are found in all his writings. Very much of the religious literature of the day is soporific in its tendency, like the works of a well-known author, pronounced to be invaluable by his attendant, who found that by taking up one of these books when weary with the day's work, he could go to sleep at once. But who could go to sleep over "Daniel Quorm"—to the spreading of whose religious "notions" who will not say "God-speed"?—so jealous for his Master's honour, so sarcastic with those spiritual dyspeptics who seem to find a luxury in speaking of this beautiful world as a howling wilderness. "Howlin' wilderness it may be," says Dan'l, "till the blessed Lord comes to us; then the wilderness do begin to bud and blossom as the rose, and rejoice with joy an' singing." Some of Mr. Pearse's books and tracts have been translated into most of the European and Asiatic languages, from Gaelic and Welsh to Malagasy and Chinese. The familiar figure of Daniel Quorm in Chinese dress, with the indispensable pigtail, would form an interesting picture. The sale of Mr. Pearse's works in the British Empire alone has exceeded a million copies, and many editions have been brought out in the United States. Twelve years ago the first edition of "Daniel Quorm" was published, and it has now reached the seventy-fourth thousand.

Concerning his literary gifts, a recent writer says: "God has given Mr. Pearse the precious and enviable power of being able to explain the good news in the most refined and exquisite English, and to make it plain to everybody by the most vivid and memorable illustrations. We do not know any teacher or writer who brings home to us our great Christian privileges in so intelligible, attractive, and persuasive a manner."

It is scarcely necessary to say that in Mr. Pearse the friends of the Temperance reformation have an ardent and powerful advocate. For many years he was a moderate drinker, thoroughly convinced that it was a nobler thing, and a higher exercise of manhood, to be temperate than to abstain. "I found," said he, in a speech delivered several years ago, "very good company in Cana of Galilee—if any wished to go further and fare worse, let them, but leave me with the Master. So it went on. I rather liked to argue this matter with teetotalers, feeling that my position was really triumphant. Then came an evening ever memorable to me. I had gone to the house of a troublesome teetotaler, who had that day buried his only son. My sympathy with him in his great sorrow checked my replies to him in our conversation, and made me think only of how I could comfort him. Of course, we had got on to the old argument. 'I do wish you'd join us,' he had said earnestly. I shook my head and congratulated myself on my good company in Cana of Galilee. I went home, but that night I could not sleep. My thoughts and heart went out to this father in his grief. I said half aloud, 'I would do anything to comfort him;' at once it occurred to me, 'Sign the pledge and join him in his Temperance work; that would comfort him.' 'But why should I give up so much for Him?' I asked myself. Then came words spoken, I thought, and still think, by the Master Himself: 'Thou talkest of my company at Cana of Galilee. What did I give up to comfort thee?' And once again, I saw not Cana, but Calvary. There hung my Lord in his great grief and agony, and dreadful shame. For me He had laid down his life! Should I dare any more to quote his example? Yes, indeed I could, but for quite another purpose. 'We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.' I sought my Lord's forgiveness for my blind selfishness, and the next morning I signed the pledge, and joined my friend in his Temperance work. But no forgiveness, no earnest work has been able to undo the mischief of my example as a moderate drinker."

Many would have been interested by the announcement in our last week's sketch of Rev. H. Price Hughes, that, at the expiration of his present pastorate in the autumn of this year, Mr. Pearse intends, subject to the approval of the Conference, entering on the work of the projected West-end Mission, in conjunction with Mr. Price Hughes. What may be the results of that movement time alone can show.

HOLINESS A KNOWLEDGE OF JESUS.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

ALL true religion is a knowledge of Jesus. Holiness is not a theory; it is not some one definite blessing; it is a growing knowledge of Jesus—what Jesus is, and what He does for us.

All knowledge of Jesus is a revelation made to us by the Holy Spirit. Turning to the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians you will see the steps of this revelation. He writes to them because they have trusted in Christ, "after that ye heard the word of truth, the 'Gospel' of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise" (i. 13). And now, because they have gone as far as this, the Apostle prays for them: "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints," &c. So, then, because they know the Lord for forgiveness, they are now to receive the Holy Ghost that they may know what they have got in Christ, and what Christ has got in them.

The need of this revelation and its blessedness may perhaps be most effectually brought out if we turn to an incident in the life of our Lord. Will you turn, please, to Matt. xvi. 13, 14, 15? "When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, He asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am? And they said, Some say that Thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets." The outside world got as high as men have ever got in their estimate of Christ—"one of the prophets."

Then turning to them, Jesus asked: "But whom say ye that I am?" Then Peter, in his eagerness to speak for once of some true service, cried: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Whence came this deeper and higher knowledge of Christ? Was it that Peter had been very intimate with Christ for many months; had heard his words and seen his works? Was it that by some special discernment he had seen more clearly and truly than others had done? No. Peter had no eyes to see it of himself, nor could any advantage or opportunity avail to give him the knowledge. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

And yet, though it was a revelation made by the Holy Spirit of God, the disciples had the power to limit their sight to that which they wanted to see—all that was to satisfy Jewish ambition, and the national longing—a power that should cast out the Roman, and make the Jew supreme. And now, in this coming kingdom, Peter was to be Prime Minister—the keys were to be in his hand, the government was to be upon his shoulder. All that Joseph was to Pharaoh, Peter was to be to Christ in his kingdom. And, now, see what follows: "From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day." At the thought of such a thing, Peter's soul was filled with indignation, and he took hold of Jesus and began to rebuke Him, saying, "Be it far from Thee, Lord." And Christ turned and looked about Him, and rebuked Peter—"Get thee behind me, Satan."

Think of it. That there should be a knowledge of Jesus revealed by the Holy Ghost, and yet beside it may be great black gaps of ignorance, wherein lurks all selfishness and earthly ambition. It is an easy thing for us to follow in Peter's steps. To see in Christ a way of forgiveness, an escape from hell and a hope of heaven, and of being happy for ever and ever. And yet alongside of that knowledge there may be an angry rejection of further revelations of what Christ would be to us. The blessed Lord wanted to prepare the disciples for that dreadful event that overhung Him and them; to familiarise their minds with the thought of it; to fortify them with faith and courage. If Peter had only been willing to see this truth, he would not have done as he did when at last it came upon him with all its terribleness.

But it was not only for their sakes that Christ wanted them to know these things. It was for his own sake too. The twofold purpose of the Spirit's revelation is illustrated here, that they might see what they had in Jesus, and that they might see what Jesus had in them. There began now to press upon the Lord Jesus the dreadful weight of his cross—the shame, the agony, the curse of it stood out in awful vividness before Him. Every day this great burden had to be borne. And He wanted to gather his disciples about Him, and to talk with them of these things. He wanted their sympathy. I think there were three times in the history of the Lord when, if help had not come from heaven, the human nature of Christ must have given way. Once was when He was perishing of hunger, and angels came and ministered to Him. Once when the great agony of his grief so pressed upon Him that his heart must have broken if relief had not come. "And there appeared an angel from heaven, strengthening him." The third occasion was now and here. When this burden of Calvary was so pressing upon Him that the mind itself might well have been overwhelmed, if there were not some outlet for the pressure of these thoughts. Oh, is it not infinitely sad that Christ should have had to go to the saints in heaven for sympathy and fellowship because it was denied to Him by his disciples! "There appeared Moses and Elias talking with Him of the decease that He should accomplish at Jerusalem."

But the mischief is not ended yet. "And Jesus was transfigured before them: and His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light." Again Peter sees only what he wanted to see. "There, that is what we want. If we can but keep Him thus then his triumph is assured. Not dreadful hints of defeat and ruin such as He spoke three days ago, but a kingliness like this; and with Moses and Elias beside Him, too! This is the very thing. They say that He is opposed to Moses. Now, if Moses will only stay, he can give his testimony. They say that Elias must first come; and here he is." So thinks Peter within himself. "Of the decease that He should accomplish at Jerusalem"—of that Peter heard never a word—did not want to hear of it; and, breaking in with blundering cruelty upon that communion, Peter cried, "Let us make here three tabernacles—one for Thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias." Ah! Peter not only refused the Lord his own sympathy, but by his blindness cut off that sympathy of "the great old saints of other days," and himself puts the Lord Jesus on a level with "the prophets." And there came a voice from heaven, saying, "This is my beloved Son: hear ye Him."

And now they come down the hill-side—the blessed Lord in his sad loneliness; Peter, I think, sullen and disappointed that Christ throws away such chances of securing his victory; and James and John jealous that in this kingdom which is to be established Peter is to be first and foremost, and they are to be passed by. Look at it, and linger over the sight until it sink into our hearts—that lonely, lonely Christ carrying the awful secret of his coming sorrow, and not an ear into which He can whisper it. And these his followers and disciples, eager only after their earthly ambitions, jealous and disputing! Ah, we too may find in Christ only what we want to, a hope of heaven, and source of comfort; but when He would seek to lead us into the mystery of the crucifixion, of the shame and bitterness and death, we too may turn upon Him with reproof, "This be far from Thee, Lord." Alas, that so often in our midst there should stand a lonely Christ, whose great desires we cannot read, whose secrets we cannot enter into, who finds in us no response, no sympathy! Oh, my soul, thy place is at his pierced feet, there to pour out thine agony of shame and grief that so often all this should be true of thee!

And so it goes on through all the story. The lonely Christ cut off from the sympathies of the disciples; the disciples rejecting the revelation of Christ, and full only of their own schemes and ambitions. Turn to St. Mark ix. 31, and see what happens when they come down from the mount: "He taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of Man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill Him; and after that He is killed, He shall rise again the third day. But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask Him." But now He has a question to ask them which reveals again the sad picture of the Christ alone and the burden of his sorrow pressing upon Him, and behind Him the disciples noisily, and even angrily, talking by the way. And now He asks them: "What was it that ye disputed by the way? But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed which of them should be the greatest." Think of it again, and let all that can be touched and appealed to within us feel the power of it—the lonely Christ carrying the great purposes of the world's salvation, his great longings concerning men, and we following Him as his disciples, and yet never thinking his thoughts; never touched by his desires; eager only after our low desires, greedy only for our own advantage.

We have not done yet. More touching, more heart-rending than anything we have yet turned to is that which comes now. St. Mark, who always notices the looks of Christ, finds it difficult to put into words the strange awe that rested upon them now. It is evident that as Jesus goes on before them, there is something in his look and manner which frightens them. Look at the words in Mark x. 32: "And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed; and as they followed they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto Him, saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn Him to death, and shall deliver Him to the Gentiles: and they shall mock Him, and shall scourge Him, and shall spit upon Him, and shall kill Him: and the third day He shall rise again." Surely that were enough to fill them with tenderest sympathy and eager love to their dear Lord. No. Read what follows. Then it is that there comes the mother of James and John, desiring to speak with Him, and asking a certain thing of Him, as if beckoning Him aside, and whispering her request into his ear. The dispute between the disciples has extended to the friends. Why, indeed, should Peter be first? There seems to have been a relationship between Jesus and John and James, and the family are jealous of one who does not belong to them having the first place in the coming kingdom. "Grant that these my two sons may sit the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left in thy kingdom."

The Master, thinking only of the cross with its foul dishonour; the disciples thinking only of the throne and their own prominence. And so the lonely Christ goes on His dreadful way. Oh, it is a picture not of the past only, but of to-day. These things happen in our midst—Christ unable to teach us what He would; our sympathy withheld; and the soul full only of its own importance, and its own advantage.

Eagerly let us ask—What is the remedy for this dreadful possibility? A few months have gone by, and now look at these same disciples. Here is Peter standing up and boldly proclaiming Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. They can think of nothing else. It is not that transfigured Christ of whom they never weary of talking—not Christ with Moses and Elias—it is of Christ crucified. They are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot or blemish. That is their joy and glory now. And what has become of their differences? They are all forgotten. They all continue daily with one accord, and live together with singleness of heart. And what now of their swelling ambitions? They are swept utterly away. Listen: "And having beaten them, they commanded them that they should not speak in the name of Jesus. And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name."

What has happened? They have received the Holy Ghost. The eyes of their heart are opened to see what they have in Christ, and what Christ has in them. In Him, now a Prince and a Saviour—a risen and Almighty Lord; and in them He has servants and followers who count not their own lives dear unto them, if they can but love and glorify Him.

And now that is what we have to do—to receive the Holy Ghost for this revelation and enlightening; to open the doors and windows of the soul for his incoming; to surrender ourselves to his precious promptings and guidance; to read the Word in his light, and to be led of the Spirit.

THE LEPERS OF INDIA.

THE very mention of these words is surely sufficient to call forth the pity of Christians. Leprosy is one of the oldest of known diseases, and abounds in the East at the present day, as it did thousands of years ago. The little pamphlet before us, being the Eleventh Annual Report of the Mission to Lepers in India, is one which we take up with deep interest, while none could be unmoved by the pathos of the story told in its pages. The missionaries speak of different phases of this terrible disease. In one place there are as many as 230 lepers.

It is, indeed, a cause for thankfulness that there is a bright side to this picture of human woe. It is not a little that these poor outcasts should be lovingly tended, and nursed, and cared for, but how much more that they should also have the Gospel preached to them. Many of these poor creatures have witnessed a good confession, both by lives of patient devotion and on dying beds, from which the enfranchised spirit passed in triumph to the better land. The report states that during the past twelve months the society has been enabled to assist eight asylums—four in connection with the Church Missionary Society, two with the American Presbyterian Society, one with the London Missionary Society, and one with Gossner's Evangelical Mission — by providing for the support of 124 lepers, and by making grants for the payment of teachers, erection of buildings, and other expenses Yet there are in India thousands and thousands of lepers who have never even heard the good news of salvation.

Emancipation in Brazil.—Slavery dies hard in Brazil. The Emancipation Bill provides that all slaves over sixty years of age are to be set free, and others in the course of seventeen years. A slave who happens to be fifty-eight or fifty-nine will thus be kept in slavery till he is verging on fourscore.

Evangelical Schools in Italy.—Dear Sir,—We have just visited the four schools at Pisa and Cisanello, conducted by Miss Carruthers, and have been rejoiced to know what an active power for good they are in training more than 200 of the young in this neighbourhood, from their earliest years, in Gospel truth. The Word of God is daily read and taught. Miss Carruthers is desirous now to enlarge her borders, as this year, for the first time in the Commune of Pisa, the Italian law has been practically applied, which makes public elementary instruction obligatory on all children. Owing to the fact that there is as yet no public school in the neighbourhood of Cisanello, she has now a grand opportunity of getting the whole education of the district into her hands, and thus of bringing a large number of children under Christian influence and instruction. Should any desire to help on this good work, Mrs. Filby, 10, Chapel Field, Norwich, will give further details.—Yours truly, F. K. D.

BIBLE STUDIES.—10.

EPH. I.—"IN HIM."

"Blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ."—Eph. i. 3.

(1) Chosen in Him (Eph. i. 4). "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee . . . because the Lord loved you" (Deut. vii. 6—8). "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling . . . according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" (2 Tim. i. 9). "A living stone . . . chosen of God. Ye . . . living stones . . . are a chosen generation" (1 Pet. ii. 4, 5, 9).

(2) Accepted in Him (ver. vi.) "A plate of pure gold, and grave upon it . . . Holiness to the Lord . . . It shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord" (Ex. xxviii. 36—38). "We have a great High Priest . . . Jesus" (Heb. iv. 14). "He shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt offering; and it shall be accepted for him" (Lev. i. 4). "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). "He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness" (Is. lxi. 10).

(3) Redeemed in Him (ver. 7). "Having obtained eternal redemption for us" (Heb. ix. 12). "Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us . . . redemption" (1 Cor. i. 30). "Ye were redeemed . . . with the precious blood of Christ" (1 Pet. i. 18, 19). "When I see the blood I will pass over you" (Ex. xii. 13). "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13). "Sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Rom. vi. 14).

(4) United in Him (ver. 10). "You, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of his flesh through death" (Col. i. 21, 22). "Now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For He is our peace, who hath made both one . . . having abolished in his flesh the enmity . . . for to make in Himself . . . one new man . . . and that He might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross" (Eph. ii. 13—16). "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me, that they may be one, as we are" (John xvii. 11). "That the world may believe that Thou hast sent me" (John xvii. 21). "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John xiii. 34).

(5) Made heirs in Him (ver. 11). "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 12). "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iv. 7). "An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away" (1 Pet. i. 4).

(6) Sealed in Him (ver. 13). "The earnest of our inheritance" (ver. 14). "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be" (1 John iii. 2). "Jesus Christ, whom, not having seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Pet. i. 7, 8). "Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known" (1 Cor. xiii. 12).

Tracts for Jews.—A series of short conversational tracts on various aspects of truth at which the modern Jew stumbles, is being issued by Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. They will be of great service to all who are endeavouring to evangelise among the seed of Abraham.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—4.

TANGIER, MOROCCO.

HOPE HOUSE, as the headquarters in Africa of the "Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber Races" is appropriately called, is already sending forth its gladsome rays into the surrounding darkness. Rev. E. F. Baldwin, with his family, and six other missionaries, are at present busily occupied in mastering Arabic, labouring meanwhile amongst the Moors and Jews and Spanish as far as they are able.

First, there is the soke, or market, which twice a week presents a strange and busy scene. Natives arrive in hundreds with their horses, camels and asses, laden with produce from the villages and towns in the interior, their journeys varying in length from one to thirty days. The work, though necessarily quiet and unostentatious, is none the less real. The distribution of Scripture portions, followed often by very interesting conversation, is like bread cast upon the waters, carried away, lost sight of, but which will surely be found after many days.

Another important branch is the visitation in their houses of the Moorish women, amongst whom a terrible state of things exists. They are considered to have no souls, consequently no provision is made for their spiritual needs. There are the mosques, which are attended five times a day, but by men only, the women being debarred this privilege. Neither are they able to read, so that their life is pitiable indeed. They therefore gladly welcome the visits of the lady missionaries, and attentively listen to the Word of God. Their condition is illustrated by the following incident: An Eastern prince, on returning from a visit to England, astonished his sister by describing what he had seen, and the manner in which women were treated there, but she replied, "It cannot be so; thou art mad." He went on to say that women in England were even taught to read. "Ah, my poor brother, now I know thou art mad," was the reply, and she declared it was useless for him to attempt to teach her to read. Shortly afterwards she saw him in the courtyard with a book, apparently attempting to teach a donkey to read. With tears in her eyes she exclaimed, "Oh, my brother, thou art indeed mad! Who but a madman would try to teach his donkey to read?" "Then," he replied, "thou art no better than this donkey. It is useless for me to try and teach him to read, and thou sayest it is useless to try and teach thee!" She acknowledged the force of this argument, learned to read, and became an educated and intelligent woman. Again, a Moorish woman sought official protection against the cruelties of her husband, and obtained it. Another Moor, who had been in no way connected with the case, heard of this, tied his wife to the floor, and gave her a terrible beating. He admitted that she had always been a most excellent wife, and had given him no provocation whatever; "but," said he, "it shall never be said that a Moor cannot do what he likes in his own house!"

A most important part of the work is the Medical Mission, which was formed about a year ago, and undertaken by Mrs. Baldwin (a physician's daughter) and Miss Herdman. As the number of patients increased, however, it was thought advisable to seek the services of a duly qualified medical man. Such a one was found in Dr. Churcher, who was educated in Edinburgh, and who is in many respects a model medical missionary. He is enthusiastic in his profession, and devoted to the work of the Lord, making the medical and surgical relief which he administers, subservient to the salvation of souls. Three mornings a week are set apart for the reception of patients, who come in large numbers, with great variety of complaints. Indeed it is difficult to confine it to alternate days, for many, coming from long distances, often appear on those intervening. Whilst one case is being dealt with, the Scripture is read and explained to those in the waiting-rooms. Thus the medical work becomes the pioneer of spiritual good, especially as it wins the confidence of the people, and entrance is gained to their homes, which can be used to incalculable advantage.

Dr. Churcher is assisted by two English ladies, Miss Jay and Miss Caley, who, being much interested in this branch of study, are making excellent progress under his instruction, both in dispensing and surgery. Many of the patients have subjected themselves to native treatment, which is of a very crude and ineffective order. For example, if a man has rheumatism or a pain in his leg, a wound is cut by which it may be relieved. If this result is not at once secured, a pea is inserted to keep the wound open. By this counter-irritant, the original pain is sometimes alleviated, but often it so debilitates the system that death from exhaustion ensues. We saw one man who had had a pea in each leg for seven months, and at first resented the idea of their being thrown away.

The need, however, of a small hospital is much felt, as it is impossible, in many cases, to effect a satisfactory cure without constant attention to the patients, especially when coming from long distances, and suffering from maladies requiring constant watching. This would also afford increased opportunity for spiritual teaching. Bottles are extensively used, but obtained with difficulty. If any friends would like to help by sending some, carefully packed and filled with sugar (as the natives like the medicine sweet), such gifts, carriage paid, would be very acceptable.

The week days at Hope House are occupied as follows: Rise at six, breakfast at seven, family worship at eight (this occupies forty or fifty minutes), and is full of freshness and interest, as each member of the household takes part in turns; the reading of Scripture is followed by verbal exposition, or a chapter from Rev. Andrew Murray's "Like Christ," or some similar work. From nine till ten the Arabic class is held, under the conduct of a native teacher. The rest of the morning is spent in the study and practice of medical work alternately, and other duties, the afternoon being divided between visits to the soke and homes of the people, and private study and recreation. A Bible-reading and a prayer-meeting occupy two evenings a week, the rest being devoted to various pursuits. Sunday being the chief market day, a few hours are devoted to work amongst the people there. During the morning and afternoon short meetings are held for edification and instruction in the Scriptures, either at Hope House, or at those of the other Christian friends in Tangier. There are also two services in the English Church, at present conducted by Rev. Mr. Baker.

On the Thursday afternoon before we left we recognised our mother tongue, and, turning round, we saw a company of men from H.M. ship Grappler (which was anchored in the bay), and who had got leave ashore for a few hours. Mr. Baldwin invited them, and as many of their comrades as could obtain leave, to tea on the Saturday evening, and on the morning of that day, after seeing us on board the French steamer Ville de Tanger, bound for Oran, he went on board the Grappler, and repeated his invitation. We learn by a letter from Mr. Baldwin that eight came, and highly enjoyed a hearty game of football, in which Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Lockhead joined. This prepared them for a still more hearty tea, after which an hour was spent in an informal service of singing, and a short Bible-reading by Miss Caley, on "Ready," which was "suitable, excellent, and well given." On leaving they declared they had not had so happy a time for many a day. None of them appeared to be decided Christians, though some had been engaged in temperance work, having learned from Miss Weston (at the mention of whose name their eyes glistened) its value and importance. We trust seed was sown that will bear fruit unto eternal life.

FAITHFUL AND TRUE.—3.

A FRIEND of mine was much troubled with servants—constant change and no comfort, as most of them turned out unsatisfactorily, although bringing the best of characters and hired at high wages. The few who very likely wished to stay, or were worthy of being kept, had to leave on account of their own home troubles. "No one stays" was the answer invariably given to me if I tried to persuade some servant I knew to go.

I went to the throne of grace for my friend, and said, "Lord, let me be the means of finding a good servant for my friend." Now I never call at that house without feeling, as the parlour-maid answers the door, "Behold an answered prayer." Not only has their servant stayed, but she so values her kind mistress and her comfortable place that she has persuaded a friend of hers to go and live there too.

HOW THE LOVE OF JESUS MADE ME TIDY.

THE following practical testimony has been written at our request by a well-known Christian lady:—

My conversion took place during my school holidays, when I was about fourteen years of age. Soon after I went back to the boarding-school, where I took my place among the girls as a young believer in Jesus. Up to the time of my conversion I had been extremely careless, and was well known for my untidiness. This bad habit remained in force for some little time after my change of heart. But one day my teacher called me into her room and said, "My dear P——, do you not profess to be converted?" "Yes," I said, "I am." "Well, dear, do you know you are grieving the Lord Jesus by your untidy, disorderly habits?" Among other things she told me of my irregularity in mending my stockings. I never shall forget the intense sorrow it gave me to think of bringing dishonour upon that loving Saviour who had done so much for me. I determined that from that moment I would, by God's help, turn over a new leaf, and darn my stockings regularly, and keep everything under my care as became a child of God. The change that followed was so marked and immediate that for the remainder of my time I was held up as an example of neatness and order.

I have found that the relation of this experience has been greatly blessed to Christian servants. When they have realised that they can make furniture and grates, &c., bright for Jesus, their joy has been very great. The knowledge that the most menial acts are ennobled when done unto Him has given a new zeal and liberty to life.

Switzerland.—The question of faith-healing continues to occupy the attention of many evangelical Christians in Switzerland.

Rev. G. O. Barnes and his family, says The Indian Witness, has left Calcutta for Colombo, after ten days of hard work in that city. From Colombo the evangelists proceed home to America, by way of Australia.

LIVES IN PLEDGE.

FREQUENTLY in the columns of The Christian references have been made to the shortening of life, as one of the deplorable results of that unholy race for wealth, which, in the case of many employers of labour, has stifled all consideration and pity. It is hoped that at least some readers have been led to look at the question of starvation wages from the higher ground of that Divine commandment in which the sanctity of God's gift was declared, rather than from the lower platform of the aptly termed "dismal science." Unfortunately, there is an almost general tendency to look at the subject only in the aspects made familiar by recent discussion, such, for instance, as that of the influence of insufficient remuneration upon morality, and to overlook entirely the still more important, and far more terrible one of the effects of such remuneration upon the death-rate.

The reason of this is, perhaps, not far to seek, for we have come to look upon the fluctuations of the death-rate as due, in a great measure, if not altogether, to causes of a mysterious kind, quite beyond human control—causes, in fact, referred to as coming within the term providential. Most of us thoughtlessly enough decline to consider any of the questions affecting life and death which seem in any way to touch upon the border ground of God's will and man's responsibility. Yet of this human responsibility there cannot be any doubt; and to anyone who carefully studies the matter it becomes only too evident that, as a nation, we are as prodigal and wasteful of the human lives around us, as we are of God's lesser gifts of food.

There can be no difficulty in the consideration of this vital question, and no lingering doubt left as to seeming interference with Divine Providence, if we bring to bear upon the study of it the Master's declaration, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish," and take that revelation as applicable to all the teeming life about us. We must, at the same time, recognise the painful fact that in this, as in most other things, it is the tendency of the selfish heart to run counter to the Divine will, and to sacrifice to its own greedy and grasping interests that which God intended to be preserved in happiness.

As society is at present constituted, in these days of bitter competition and cruel cheapness, every week sees a large increase made in the number of those who get their bread at the peril of their lives; and the word of the Lord comes now to each of us with, perhaps, even greater force than it came to the prophet of old, to lift up our hands towards Him for the lives of the young children that faint for hunger in the top of every street. It is folly to attempt to shelter ourselves, as most of our political economists do, behind the so-called "effect of inevitable laws," when it is so clearly evident that those laws are not of God's making, or in accordance with His revealed will. The early grave of the factory worker, slain in her girlhood by toil too hard for her weak frame, the death of the consumptive match-box maker, whose wretched pittance was too little to enable her to keep body and soul together, or the miserable end in the hospital ward of the girl driven upon the streets by hunger, and who would have been virtuous could she but have found fairly remunerative work, represent just so many murders for which society in its collective capacity, and some persons individually are responsible to God. An account of the wasted life will have to be rendered both by one and the other.

Speaking recently, with regard to factory girls in the East-end of London, Mr. George Holland said that "thousands of them are perishing from consumption—going into a decline, and then to an early grave;" the reason being that "their earnings are very small, and they cannot get sufficient food for themselves."* However much we should prefer to push the matter aside with a commonplace remark as to consumption being the scourge of England, we cannot without criminal wilfulness hide from ourselves the dreary fact that in this Christian land of ours, with all its boasted light and its almost numberless privileges and blessings, thousands of human beings, weak and emaciated men, weaker and still more emaciated women, and children, whose only experience of childhood has been the bitterness of hunger and unrelieved sickness, are dying with less nobility than unregarded flies; for the insect may have filled its little day, but the being made in the image of God is passing away in preventible disease, in what ought to be only the morning hours of life.

To the Christian, therefore, all the side issues of this burning wage question are of deep moment, for if he is anxious to know the will of God and to do it, it must become very clear to him that he cannot lawfully have any part or lot in anything the result of which is to slay, instead of to preserve and to protect. In his case there must be no fencing with the subject, for there can be only innocence or blood-guiltiness. There is no middle course between the two; and it ought not to be difficult for him to elect between the possession of a clear conscience before God, and the accumulation of wealth obtained at the cost of those who have to labour for daily bread at the peril of their lives.

It is, however, not only the employer of labour and those who derive incomes from the revenues of large concerns who are responsible for the waste of life amongst the underpaid toilers. Every person shares in the guilt who knowingly benefits by purchasing at places where cruel cheapness is the rule. Therefore, instead of hurriedly setting the question aside as being one affecting only the East-end of London rather than, in a greater or losser degree, every manufacturing town in Great Britain, it behoves each of us to ask ourselves whether it may not be that some article of clothing or of finery which we are wearing represents a man's or a woman's hunger, sickness, and death.

A HOME FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

DEAR SIR,—In The Christian for March 11 you mention that a correspondent asks you "to urge ladies in London to try and plant lodging-houses near our great railway stations, so as to get hold of young women coming from the country, before they fall a prey to the emissaries of the devil." With the aid of a few Christian friends, I have opened at the following address such a lodging house, or home for young women, and employment agency, which when filled we hope to make self-supporting.

The house is within five minutes' walk from the Great Northern, the Midland, and Euston-square stations. It is midway between the King's-cross and Gower-street stations of the Metropolitan Railway, and omnibuses from Charing-cross and Waterloo terminus pass the door. I should feel very thankful to have the co-operation of Christian workers in making this house increasingly a centre of godly influence and help.

Yours truly, Sarah A. Bromage.

"GETTING UP" A REVIVAL.

By Dr. G. F. PENTECOST.

WE need not say to our readers that we are out and out in favour of evangelists and evangelistic work in the churches. At the same time, we are free to confess that there are a good many false notions, and dependencies upon evangelists. There could be no greater mistake for churches or pastors to make than to suppose that evangelists can bring a revival with them, or that the Church may secure a blessing in connection with an evangelist's work by turning away from worldliness for a few days. The great need of the Church to-day is to be found in an out and out separation of herself from the world—in a real repentance and a clearing of herself from the thousand and one entanglements and compromises which she has made.

It is pitiful to see the weak and spasmodic efforts that are everywhere being made to "get up revivals." For a few days a small portion of the church will come together and pray, and, if they can, get an evangelist to preach for them and call for inquirers. And then when this spasm is over, with results more or less unsatisfactory, they relapse into coldness, indifference, and worldliness again. We would recommend to all such the third chapter of Jeremiah, and that each one for himself make inquiry as to whether he is backslidden in heart and life, or whether he is truly and honestly, out and out, on the Lord's side.—Words and Weapons.

THE CANADIAN BACKWOODS.

THE following letter was sent to a lady who send to the writer a weekly copy of The Christian:—

Our work here is among the isolated settlers of the Canadian backwoods, and the visits of such a paper are always seasons of refreshment. The spiritual destitution of this country is of itself an inspiration to consecrated service. Many of the settlers are from the old land, where the religious privileges were plenty, and because of their abundance were not taken advantage of as they might have been.

I am endeavouring to hold Christ up before the people at nearly a dozen places, but the whole country, being sparsely settled, is in need of many consecrated servants of Christ before the work can be overtaken. We want upon the field where I am labouring something like 2500 dollars to build meeting-houses at some four points. Half of this amount the people will raise by self-sacrificing efforts themselves; for the balance we are looking to the Lord, as we cannot think of plunging the little bands into debt. Will you join your prayers with ours that the Lord would graciously own the efforts being made to extend his kingdom.

We have just concluded a series of evangelistic services at one of our stations. God was with us. Saints were revived, and some fourteen or fifteen profess to have been "born again." We have now commenced another series at another station, in the midst of infidels; the ground is hard, but God is mighty.—Yours in the Lord's work,

Sundridge, Muskoka, Canada. E. Bosworth.

Canadian Emigration.—Sir,—As March, April, and May are the best months for emigrating for those who wish to engage in farm work in Canada, I would state that I have heard from a friend in Manitoba, who placed fifty young men there for me last year, that he has situations ready with farmers for one hundred more this spring. During visits to Canada and the States I arranged with friends in different places, who make inquiries among the farmers of their districts, as to the number of young men wanted. They send me the result, receive the young men, taking introductory letters from me, and place them with farmers to get the necessary experience to work their own free grants of land. Twenty-two young men sailed with last week's steamer, and others will go by successive weekly steamers. I shall be glad to send particulars of outfit, passage, &c. (cost about £20), to any young man resolved to emigrate for farm life.—Yours, &c.,

LITTLE FOXES.*

By Rev. George Litting.

> "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines."
> Cant. ii. 15.

THESE quaint words are thought by some to be the remains of a vintage song. The Israelites seem to have kept not only harvest festivals at the ingathering of the corn, but also vintage festivals at the ingathering of the grapes; and, perhaps, they did sing such a song as these words seem to show. Whether or not, one thing is plain, the foxes of Palestine were very troublesome to the vine-growers through undermining the walls of the vineyards and barking the vines, thus causing them to shrivel and wither, and become unfruitful.

I want to impress upon you the fact that you have a garden or vineyard entrusted to your care, in which you are expected to cultivate choice plants, and that cunning little foxes are always trying to get in, in order to spoil the plants. Only great watchfulness will keep them out.

What, then is the garden, and what the plants to be cultivated? The garden is the garden of the soul, and the plants are Christian graces. Paul puts it before us in 1 Cor. iii. 9, thus: "Ye are God's husbandry;" and as for the Christian graces, he calls them in Gal. v. 22, 23, "Fruits of the Spirit," namely, "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Putting all these together we may call them Christian character. That is what you have to cultivate, Christian character. In order to cultivate a good character, you must keep out the cunning little foxes. I shall tell you of two or three which are sure to try their attacks upon you.

One is SELFISHNESS. A very sly fox is selfishness. He begins his attacks upon children's gardens, and carries them on as the children grow up into men and women, doing all the harm he can. There is a beautiful delicate plant in the Christian character which selfishness likes to fasten on, and suck all the life out of. It is love. There are others as well, but he especially tries to kill love—love to one's parents, love to one's brothers and sisters, love to one's playfellows, love to one's teachers, love to one's neighbour, love to one's enemy, love to all around us. What a tender, beautiful growth it is, and how much care, cultivation, and encouragement it needs! But selfishness steals in, and tries its best to make this care of no avail. We all know selfishness when we see it. The worst of it is—so cunning is the thing—we can often see it in others, but seldom in ourselves. We are ready enough to say, "What a selfish boy or girl A or B is!" We hardly ever venture to think, much less say, "What a selfish boy or girl I am!"

Then there is another cunning little fox which plagues children in their cultivation of the Christian vines: I mean SULKINESS. I said people do not often observe their own selfishness, and certainly I may say that they seldom observe their own sulkiness—at least, as long as they are in the sulks. No; everybody is wrong in the eyes of the sulky person. He cannot possibly be wrong—so he thinks—and, therefore, he pouts, and looks black, and will not speak, and sometimes, so foolish and obstinate is he, will not eat. Well, if it were not for the mischief done to the Christian character, I should say, "Let him sulk—ay, and let him go hungry too." I remember when I was a little boy, in my part of the country, if a child sulked with his bread and butter, the mother used to say, "Ah! never mind, honey will come to it by and by." That was a wise way of treating the matter; for sure enough, when hunger had driven away sulkiness, the bread and butter, before despised, became wonderfully sweet. But even so there had been mischief done to the Christian graces; for, looking into our list of them as given by Paul (Gal. v. 22, 23), I should say that sulkiness is a terrible killjoy; it kills joy in the sulky person himself, and often it helps to kill joy in those around him.

I come now to a third little fox, which forces its way into the vineyard in order to bark the vines. It is PASSION; that is, ANGRY TEMPER. What terrible mischief is done to the Christian character by ungovernable anger! Why, anger led to the first murder, for we are told that Cain was wroth, and his countenance fell, and it was in his wrath that he rose up in the field and slew his brother. The Lord Jesus knew what frightful things such anger might lead to, and, therefore, spoke very strongly about it in his Sermon on the Mount. One thing is very clear, where angry passions prevail, the tender, beautiful Christian plants of peace and gentleness cannot flourish. No; these are stripped from every boy or girl who will give way to evil temper. Not peace, but uproar, attends upon anger; not gentleness, but ferocity, accompanies wrath.

Cultivate the advice of the wise man, in order to do away with passion in others: "A soft answer turneth away wrath," he says. Act on that. That is the best cure for angry temper, not only in yourselves, but in those who are angry with you; angry, that is, either with or without a cause.

There are other sly foxes ready to injure your cultivation, besides those I have mentioned. You see what they are, bad habits. They will be continually trying to creep into your heart, and spoil your good works. Pray to God, I implore you, to give you daily strength to keep them out, so that when he requires an account of your husbandry, you may be able to show him a vineyard with very fruitful vines, a garden with very graceful plants, a character made perfect in the fruits of the Spirit.

ELSIE'S LAST CHANCE.

Little Elsie Venable had one fault that cost her mother many anxious tears; out of a large family of boys and girls she was the only one whose word could not be depended on.

"What shall I do about Elsie?" Mrs. Venable asked her husband. "It breaks my heart that I cannot teach her to tell the truth, no matter how severely I punish her."

"Elsie is a tender-hearted child," replied her husband, thoughtfully; "suppose you make her feel how much it distresses you by punishing yourself."

One day, after this, Mrs. Venable saw Elsie coming from the garden, with her hands behind her back; she met her at the door and said, gravely, "Didn't I tell you not to eat any more gooseberries, Elsie?"

"I haven't been near the gooseberries," answered the little girl, promptly; but the next minute her hands were found full of berries, and the seeds were sticking between her teeth.

Mrs. Venable led her to her own room, and talked earnestly and sadly about the wickedness of lying. "Now, Elsie," she said in conclusion, "God has given you to me that I may make you a good child; when you commit such a sin, it must be because I have not done my duty by you, so I am going to punish myself. I shall stay in my room all day and eat no food, and pray God to keep my child from ever telling a lie again."

Poor Elsie! She was very miserable. Her mother did not come out to dinner, nor to tea, and a gloom seemed to hang over the house. It was some time before the little girl even felt tempted to tell a story again.

Summer and fall, with their fruits and flowers, passed away. One day in the early winter, Elsie's mother was seized with a sudden and violent illness; the doctor was with her all day, and the children were kept out of the room.

As the early twilight began to gather, Elsie slipped noiselessly up to the bed where the dear mother lay pale and exhausted. She drew her little daughter down to kiss her, and whispered, faintly, "Go into my closet, darling, and get yourself an apple."

Now apples were very scarce this year, and the children were only allowed to have one a day from the closet chest. There was nothing that Elsie liked half so well as an apple, and while her mother was speaking the tempter whispered, "She didn't ask whether you had had one; you needn't say anything about it; that won't be a story." But, after an instant's hesitation, the little girl felt that it would be a silent lie, and then she said, "I've had my apple to-day, mamma."

The sick mother saw the hesitation, the quick flush, the look of resolution, and knew just what a struggle it had been, and what a victory. A sweet, bright look came to her suffering face, as she pressed Elsie's hand, whispering faintly, "Dear child—dear Elsie—that was right—and makes mother so happy."

The next morning, very early, Elsie roused up in her little bed, and looking out of the nursery window. A deep snow had fallen during the night and covered everything with its beautifull whiteness. Elsie uttered an exclamation of pleasure, but it was checked by the sound of sobbing in the room, and, standing up in her bed, she saw her father and the elder children clinging together at the hearthstone, weeping bitterly. They had not observed her, and, with a sudden pang at her heart, she slipped out of bed, and ran, in her little bare feet, to the mother's room. It was empty and desolate, and the child stood, shivering and bewildered, until her father came, and, wrapping her in a great warm shawl, carried her down to the parlour.

There, on a white-draped couch, lay the precious mother, as cold and white and still as the beautiful snow outside, but wearing, it seemed to Elsie, the same glad, bright look that had come to her face the evening before.

With a burst of tears, the child threw herself upon the quiet form, crying aloud, "O mother, mother! I'm so glad I told you the truth; it was my last chance!"—Boston Congregationalist.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.

THIS lady, whose stay with us has given so much pleasure to so many, and whose success as a lecturer has been attested by invariably over-crowded audiences, left our shores on Thursday for the Holy Land, where, amid the scenes of her youth, and the associations of her early life, she will gather information and inspiration for her further labours. It is her intention to return to England in the summer, when she will prepare new lectures for the coming season, which will begin about the middle of September. Her lectures have proved so interesting and instructive in the line of Biblical instruction, and so many applications have been made for them, that the Committee of the Sunday-school Union have arranged with Miss von Finkelstein that her services shall be entirely at their disposal, from the middle of September until the end of the year. Applications may, therefore, now be made to the Secretaries, at 56, Old Bailey, E.C., who will arrange so that as many as possible of our friends in London and the provinces may hear these eminently useful and interesting lectures.

Miss von Finkelstein gave her last address at Union Chapel, Islington, on Sunday week, in connection with the Gifford Hall Mission anniversary, and her last lecture at the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday week, when crowded and delighted audiences testified to her increasing popularity. She leaves England with the best wishes for a prosperous and happy journey, and with the assurance of a cordial welcome on her return from a large circle of warm-hearted friends.—Sunday-school Chronicle.

MOTHERS' MEETING CONFERENCE.

AT the recent conference at Mildmay, a request for prayer was sent in to this effect: "Will the Lord's people remember in prayer the mothers in France, that they may be led to train their children for God." Mr. Mathieson added, "Also for the mothers in England." The importance of leading the mothers to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus and his salvation, in order that they might be enabled to train their children for God, cannot be over-estimated. For years past many Christian ladies have been labouring amongst mothers of the humbler classes, and much blessing has been given in this sphere of service; but it has been often felt that if there were some special opportunity for workers in mothers' meetings to meet together for conference and prayer, to compare notes and methods of conducting the meetings, it would be exceedingly helpful. There is often great isolation in service, and a little intercourse with fellow-workers would be a boon, and lead to increased usefulness.

It is therefore proposed to have such a meeting on Wednesday, March 31, at 3.30 p.m., at 36, Baker-street, Portman-square, W., for open conversation and conference, and at 7 for prayer. It is intended only for those actually engaged in conducting mothers' meetings. The names of any ladies wishing to attend will be gladly received, and any further particulars given, by C. C. Hawkins, 36, Baker-street, W.

Cincinnati.—As one result of the mission in this city by Rev. Sam Jones and Mr. Sam Small, a good beginning has been made towards the subscription of the amount needed for the erection of a suitable home for the Y.M.C.A.

FATHER'S SLIPPERS.

TEN little busy fingers
  Working till they ache,
Strained eyes and a knitted forehead,
  And a back that was bent, to make
Father's new birthday slippers:
  Worked till it seemed for awhile
The daughter thought more of his slippers,
  Than her father's own sweet smile.

Many a social evening
  Passed almost without a word;
Her work was all she heeded,
  And she scarcely saw, or heard
Her father enter the chamber.
  Seldom she spoke to him.
'Twas work till her head grew weary,
  And work till her eyes grew dim.

Softly father approaches,
  Seeking his darling's kiss;
But the busy one strangely slights him,
  Her only excuse is this;
"Father, I am so busy,
  Am working so hard for you,
I cannot linger or loiter,
  The moments are fleet and few."

So sadly the father left her,
  A frown on his gentle brow,
He had come for an hour's communion,
  But alone she must labour now.
True, she was working his slippers:
  But he wanted her voice and heart;
And these she withheld: so turning,
  I saw him unmissed depart.

Do we never slight our Father—
  Our Father who dwells in Heaven,
Engaged on some "birthday slippers,"
  Some work to his service given?
He asks for an hour's communion—
  Our voice and our heart—but we
Are so full of our little working,
  We seldom his presence see.

Better that father's slippers
  Were made at father's side,
With a chat, and a voice of singing;
  And better that we abide
Near to the Heavenly Father.
  Then will the labour be
Pleasant, and find acceptance,
  Done at our Father's knee.

ORPHAN DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS.

THE Principal of an Orphanage for the Destitute Orphan Daughters of Musicians is Miss Helen Kenway, herself an accomplished musician, and a lady of deep and earnest piety. For some years she had been educating, and otherwise providing for these orphans, without asking for help, but the time came that she was constrained to do so, and a modest little Report will tell of the work of the last two or three years.

Miss Kenway is now most anxious to purchase the Home, for which she pays a rent of £60 per annum. The lease of it for fifty-five years has been offered her for £600; and it is towards this sum she is seeking the help of kind Christian friends. Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. W. H. Cummings, have kindly consented to act as trustees for this charity, and both are subscribers to the Building Fund. Says a correspondent:—

I spent a fortnight at this interesting Orphanage in July last, and while much gratified by the sweet singing of the children, I was most impressed by the excellent daily Scripture teaching of Miss Kenway, and the amount of knowledge the children possessed of Divine truth. They were a happy little family, taught to look up with childlike confidence to Him who feeds the fowls of the air, and clothes the lilies of the field, and who "knoweth that we have need of all these things."

Anyone interested in this work may learn further particulars from the Principal, Miss Kenway, 10, Darnley-road, Royal Crescent, Notting-hill, W., or from Miss Pyne, 14, Walcott-parade, Bath.

The Surgical Aid Society (Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, E.C.) renders valuable help to sufferers requiring surgical appliances. During the present distress such assistance to the very poor is peculiarly acceptable.

FROM THE FAR NORTH-WEST.

DEAR SIR,—I would like to thank those kind friends who have by their donations of Christian literature put it into my power to disseminate the seed of Gospel truth through many households on these western prairies. Two days ago I had a letter from a lad of sixteen, hitherto utterly indifferent to the claims of Christ. He wrote to tell me that he had given himself to the Lord, and in spite of great natural diffidence, had openly confessed Christ. He says: "It was a hard struggle, but now I want to do something for his cause. Can you send me some tracts, telling about salvation? They may be the means of bringing some to Christ. Nearly a dozen others have been brought to Christ in our neighbourhood." This work of grace is going on in a little settlement in Manitoba, hitherto remarkable for its deadness to spiritual things. Some of God's people must have been quietly at work there, and great things may be the result.

A devoted Christian woman, who has given herself to the task of teaching those painted pagans, the North-west Indians, writes to me that she needs school furnishings and household items, such as soap, combs, and towels, a complete kitchen outfit, old bedding, clothing, &c. Her address is Miss J. M. Rose, Pi-a-pot Reserve, Farm 9, Regina, North-west Territory. Surely such work must have the smile of the loving Father, whose tender mercies are over all his works. Many of our Christian people are interesting themselves in this effort, but our churches are struggling with debt, and our resources are so heavily taxed in this new country, that the little we can do seems like a drop in the ocean of this vast enterprise—the sending of missions to these large tribes who have not as yet learned the civilised methods of gaining a living.

I noticed in your columns some letters mentioning these missions already established here. Any aid sent to any one of them would be acceptable to these missionaries, whose faithfulness had this remarkable testimony borne to it, that during the late rebellion none of the Indians belonging to the Protestant missions rose to join the insurrection. This proof of the efficiency of the Gospel teaching to quell the evil passions of the human heart has been given at every missionary convention held in our province since the war, and to those who know anything of the horrors of Indian warfare, it is a conclusive one.

Rev. George Flett, a half-breed missionary, addressed an audience on the subject once when I was present, and it was very touching to hear this veteran Presbyterian missionary, as in his broken sentences he told us of the need of his poor brethren, of their gradual change of attitude towards the messengers of Christ, and of their anxiety to get schools and teachers, and the necessary appliances, so that they might become Christianised, and in this way civilised. His simple story, full of love for the souls of his kindred, made me long for some way to help him in this Christ-like work.

Rev. Hugh McKay, the young man whose work is mentioned in a late CHRISTIAN, is also a devoted labourer amongst these needy creatures. The Methodists have two schools at Morley, Alberta, far west of us, and are in need of appliances of all kinds for their schools. Old school-books (primary grades), wall-maps, cards, and, indeed, every kind of furnishings that would suit the beginning of such an enterprise, would be acceptable.

Let me thank the donors of THE CHRISTIAN and other papers, whose constant arrival by mail cheers many a lonely worker in these scattered settlements; all are widely read and distributed.

Brandon, Manitoba. (MRS.) A. DAVIDSON.

The American Missions in Natal, Africa, have just celebrated their fiftieth anniversary, at the oldest mission station, named after its revered and beloved founder, Dr. Adams. The chief interest of the proceedings centred around the opening of "Jubilee Hall," a new seminary for boys.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

AT the monthly meeting for workers at the Home of Industry, on Wednesday week, a band of bright, healthy-looking boys were present, who are about to sail for Canada, under the charge of Miss Macpherson's nephew, Mr. W. Merry. It was cheering to hear from Miss Macpherson that tidings have been received from Mr. and Mrs. Merry in Canada, saying that applications are coming in rapidly for lads, so this party will find homes waiting for them. Miss Macpherson told of a very solemn and happy time she had spent with the boys on the previous Sunday at the Hackney Training Home, when she felt the Spirit of God was working in their young hearts, and not a few yielded to his gracious power. The children occupied half-an-hour in reciting some of their Band of Hope pieces, showing how the principles of total abstinence have been instilled into them. Several friends present commended the party to God in prayer.

Dr. Eccles presided at the meeting, and four young ladies, about to leave shortly for North Africa, were also commended to the Lord in prayer. Two of these were present, and spoke a few words as to how the Lord had led them to undertake this service, and had cleared every difficulty out of the way.

M. J. J. Scroggie spoke some helpful words on "The Sun: an Illustration of what Christians ought to be." The sun gives light and heat. Some Christians seem to have light without heat, always seeking to set people right, but without much of the drawing power. In Ps. xix. 6 we have, "There is nothing hid from the heat thereof." If we would be soul-winners, we must have more heat. We can shut out the light by drawing the blinds down, but cannot shut the heat out. The sun shines with a progressive light—so it should be with the Christian. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

THE FREEDMEN OF THE SOUTH.

THE worthy evangelist, Mr. J. Wharton, from Barrow-in-Furness, and his good wife, came to our country near the close of 1885, and have been labouring continuously in Gospel work They came first to Sedalia, a city in the State of Missouri, where their labours were blest in the conversion of many souls. They then came to our city, New Orleans, La., to labour among the coloured people. They have been holding meetings since the opening of the new year at Straight University, for the coloured students, and at Central Church, also for coloured people. More than seventy souls have professed faith in Christ since these meetings began. The work still goes forward.

Meanwhile Rev. W. Hay Aitken has been holding meetings for the white people which have also been very successful. During the past ten days Mr. Moody and his co-labourer, Mr. Sankey, have been holding meetings in the city, some for the coloured people, and many for the white people. As a result of all these efforts, the city has been stirred to an interest in Gospel work, which has never been before witnessed in its history.

This is Mr. Wharton's third visit to this city, and, if the Lord spare him, we have reason to hope it will not be his last. He is now conducting revival meetings for the Baptists (coloured) where many souls are given him for his hire. Race prejudice is strong in this portion of our country, hence the necessity for holding separate meetings for the white and coloured races. The coloured people are really making great progress in our country. There is now great demand for educated ministers, and for education among them. They have built and own many very good church buildings. In one of these Mr. Wharton is now preaching. He has been distributing freely much helpful evangelistic literature among them. We shall all be sorry when called upon to part with Mr. and Mrs. Wharton.

Your missionary societies and Gospel associations are really doing a much-needed work in sending missionary workers among our coloured people, many of whom are very destitute. They have not yet learned those practical economies which help a people over times of distress. The work is too great for us, and all our missionary societies. We appreciate your efforts, and thank God that He has put it into the hearts of your workers to come to America.

DEATH OF DR. CHARLES STANFORD.

IT is with a very deep feeling of sorrow, and an unusual sense of personal loss, that we announce the somewhat sudden decease of Dr. Charles Stanford, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Denmark-place, Camberwell. The brief biographical sketch that is appended will be read with interest, even by those who have never had the happiness of seeing and hearing him in the flesh. With all his other great gifts our departed friend had a strong, almost extreme, sensitiveness to anything like ultra publicity. But for this we might have been able to present our readers to-day with a portrait, in addition to the outline of a blessed and beneficent life:—

CHARLES STANFORD was born at Northampton, rather more than sixty years ago. He was, we believe, the only child of parents who were in a humble position in life, but of great respectability and high Christian character. The writer well remembers his father, an old man, full of quaint and pithy sayings, decidedly original, with a touch of the genius which so signally marked the son. Both father and mother were members of the church which once had Dr. Doddridge for its pastor, then under the care of Rev. Mr. Bennett; the son in early life joined the same fellowship. He was placed, when quite young, with a printer and bookseller in the town. In this position he enjoyed a privilege he much valued—that of access to books, many of which he eagerly read.

After he was twenty-one, he was led to enter the Baptist College at Bristol, for the purpose of preparing for the ministry in that denomination; for, though he and his parents were members of a Pædobaptist church, they were themselves Baptists. At college his health was generally feeble, and his regular attention to the classes and studies of the college often interrupted; but he was a quick thinker, a great, if somewhat desultory, reader, and was soon noticed and admired for the chaste, refined, and original style of his preaching. He was a great favourite with his tutors and fellow-students, and especially beloved by the latter for his gentle loving spirit, and the racy but delicate wit and humour which were so perfectly natural to him. His fellow-students (of whom the writer was one) well remember his great artistic power; for, in a few seconds, with a few simple strokes of the pencil, he could produce a picture, generally some caricature, which all were eager to possess. This gift might have made his fortune in after life on the staff of Punch, or some similar serial. It is, perhaps, remarkable that the power he thus displayed with the pencil he also possessed in dealing with words, as his sermons and writings amply testify, for, with a few simple, well-directed strokes of language, he could put a perfect picture before his hearers or readers.

While at college, on the occasion of a visit to the writer, he became acquainted with a young lady, whom he afterwards married—Miss Johnson, of Newtown Linford, near Leicester, daughter of a plain but worthy Christian farmer in the village, and herself a person of much strong sense and natural refinement. This connection was partly the inducement to accept an invitation to the pastorate of a church in the neighbouring town of Loughborough, where he remained but a short time, and then removed to Devizes, where he found a very happy and congenial sphere amongst a number of friends possessed of much cultivated intelligence, who were able to appreciate his genius and character. It was while at Devizes that he experienced the great sorrow of the loss of his wife, and here also that, after a period of sad widowhood, he was led in the kind Providence of God to repair the loss, and to marry his second wife, who survives him—Miss Anstie, of Devizes, who has been for more than thirty years his devoted and efficient helpmeet in domestic life, and not less in literary and pastoral work.

After several years of most useful service at Devizes, he was led, much to the regret of his friends there, to remove to Camberwell, where he was at first co-pastor with the late Dr. Steane, and afterwards, till very recently, sole pastor of the Baptist Church at Denmark-place. Here his ministry has been carried on for a quarter of a century or more amidst growing bodily weakness, often with much pain, and at last under the affliction of nearly total blindness, but with great mental and spiritual light and power. For several years past he has been known far beyond the limits of his own congregation both as a preacher and writer, and both his name and works are valued and honoured by Christians of all denominations. It is the charm of his style that he is always simply evangelical, richly spiritual, full of illustration and word-painting, always fresh and original, while here and there sparkles some delightful quaintness or fine gleam of humour.

A disease of long standing, which has often threatened his life, has, we understand, at last proved fatal; but the wonder is that, with his delicacy of constitution and sensitive mind, he has lived so long and accomplished so much—so much of true service to the denomination of which he was an ornament, and to the Christian Church at large.

On Thursday morning last he passed away, quietly and without pain. The intelligence of his sudden death has come with a great shock to many of his friends, who remember him as a loved teacher, or a delightful companion of earlier days. But the books he has left behind him, all so characteristic of the man, will now be increasingly valued by them; the study of these may be specially commended to others who have not yet enjoyed this privilege, all the more as the sympathetic tones of his living voice can no longer be heard.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

IT is expected that the International Conference on the North Sea Liquor Traffic will shortly assemble.

A GOOD TEMPLAR LODGE, in Toronto, lately refused to admit a Mr. G. N. Smith, solely because he was a man of colour.

THE Sunday-school Union has requested Mr. Conybeare, M.P., to draft a Bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to children.

IN the House of Commons it was recently announced, that the Revenue Board discountenance the collection of taxes in public-houses.

MR. JOHN HILTON, formerly the London electoral agent, has been appointed Parliamentary Agent of the United Kingdom Alliance.

THE Birmingham School Board have rescinded the rule prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in their schools when let for entertainments.

IN an interesting article on "Old London and the Liquor Trade," The Temperance Record shows that the traffic has been a nuisance for centuries.

The Church of England Temperance Chronicle announces that a son of Archdeacon Farrar recently made his maiden speech on total abstinence, at Cambridge. He was much applauded.

THE American National Temperance Union held memorial services for Mr. J. B. Gough, March 7, in Chickering Hall, New York. Distinguished ministers and laymen took part.

IN Manchester, a strong feeling is being developed against the "tipplers" who attend auction sales for the sake of the free drink given. Some are aiming at having sales on unlicensed premises.

THE anniversary services of the Scottish Band of Hope Union were held recently at Glasgow. The affiliated Unions have had a good year, and there has been an increase of twenty-six Bands of Hope.

THE SANTHALS have a tradition about Adam and Eve in the garden, with this variation, that Satan's temptation consisted in showing them how to make intoxicating drink—a very plausible theory of the origin of evil.

MR. SALA, in his latest letter from "The Land of the Golden Fleece," declares that the Blue Ribbonites, the Rechabites, the Good Templars, and similar Associations have done, and are doing, an immensity of good among the bush-people in Australia.

The British Medical Journal has a significant article on "The Truth about Alcohol." Admitting that it may be a luxury, and that it has value as a medicine, it insists that the interests of truth and of national morality require that the medical profession should, in the plainest and strongest terms, declare that it is in no sense a necessity. It says, further, "the Temperance movement has a powerful claim on the sympathy and respect of the profession."

Cherbourg, France.—DEAR SIR,—On the 12th inst I opened a Gospel hall in this place, which was filled with attentive listeners. The subsequent meetings have also been well attended. Mr. and Mrs. Sinel came for the opening, and are still here; I trust the Lord may dispose them to remain and help in the work. I purpose continuing preaching to English and Scandinavian sailors coming to this port.—Yours in Christ, 119, Rue du Val de Savie, Cherbourg. A. H. DARLING.

A NOTE OF PRAISE.

DEAR SIR,—I desire to praise the Lord for much blessing at the Conference Hall in Eccleston-street. During the last three years we have heard of hundreds who have got blessing. The meetings have generally been small, and the results have not always been known at the time; but there has been a stream of blessing which has been uninterruptedly coming to light.

I think it well to mention this for the encouragement of other labourers who may be serving God without seeing much result at the time, but whom the Master loves, and whom He will one day acknowledge before all with the "Well done, good and faithful servant." Let us seek to work not for outward success, but on principles which will produce results that will be "approved of Him" in "that day."

GIFFORD HALL MISSION.

CALEDONIAN ROAD, ISLINGTON, N.

VERY successful anniversary services have been held this year in connection with this excellent mission. On Thursday evening at Gifford Hall, after tea, Sir Harry Verney, Bart., presided, and addressed a large meeting of parents, workers, teachers, and others. During the evening no less then fourteen speakers made speeches, acknowledging the blessing of God in all their efforts. The reports were full of interest. The rent of rooms for seven aged pilgrims (costing the mission twelve shillings and sixpence per week) is paid. The Church members number upwards of 160. The Sunday-school has nearly 1000 scholars. The mothers' meeting, with clothing, boot, and coal clubs, numbers 124. The International Bible-reading Association, 156. There is also in connection with the mission a penny bank, sick club, gymnasium, Gospel Temperance Society, senior and junior Band of Hope, Young Women's Christian Union, men and women's week evening Bible-classes, infants' play room, &c.

At Christmas 350 substantial dinners were distributed at the hall, and taken away by the grateful recipients to be eaten at their own homes. During the recent bitter cold weather 120 quarts of soup per week have been distributed, From January to December of last year, 39,041 penny dinners and 20,000 free breakfasts were supplied to poor children, besides many pairs of boots and numerous suits of old clothes. Fifty blankets have been loaned to the needy, and the sick and dying visited.

In the summer 240 convalescent scholars were sent to the country for a fortnight or three weeks. Many entertainments have been given, and a flower show and industrial exhibition held. To continue such a work as this, monetary help is much needed. Donations should be sent to the Superintendent of the Mission, Mr. Benjamin Clarke, Hampden House, Crouch End.

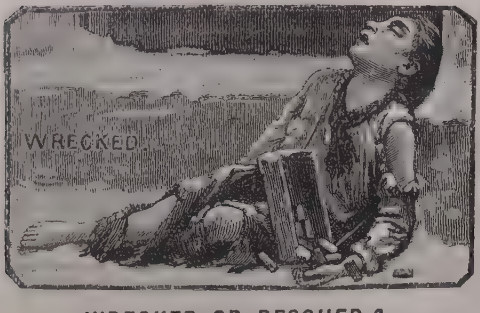
DEPTFORD RAGGED SCHOOLS.

THE plebeian borough of Deptford was en fête the other day, when H.R.H. Princess Louise and her husband, the Marquis of Lorne, attended to grace the opening of the new building of the Ragged and Industrial School. Everybody was delighted to see the Queen's daughter, who declared the building open, while the Marquis made a hearty and sympathetic speech. We doubt not his words as to the importance of the religious training of the young will be remembered and acted out under the new rooftree.

This school has been in operation for the last forty years, and has done good service; we hope the remaining debt of £200 will speedily be cleared off, so that the friends may direct their undivided energies to the proper work of the institution.

Y.W.C.A., St. John's Wood South.—In January. 1885, a Bible-class, with thirteen members, was started at this Branch. During the year fifty-one joined it; and it was found necessary to take larger rooms. Two, in a specially good position, have been secured. Mr. Denham Smith opened them on 11th inst., when the Holy Spirit was manifested with power. Two left rejoicing in having then "accepted Christ," and others were so stirred that, after Mr. Smith had left, prayer with them was continued. The rooms will be open every week evening from 7 to 10 p.m. On Sundays, 4 to 6.30, when tea is provided. On Thursday, a Bible-class, at 8.30. On Saturdays, a friendly evening. Other engagements will be provided as they are called for.



WRECKED OR RESCUED?

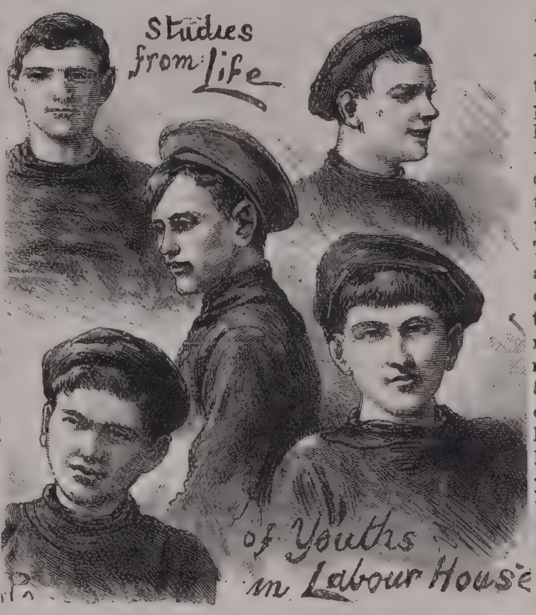
OUR little vignette is a parable without words—one of the saddest that could engage the artist's pencil. "Too late" is its message, and "Rescue the Perishing" its moral. Who has not seen the wan and fleshless counterparts of this little pariah of civilisation in the streets of our great city, the tony-hearted stepmother of so many a homeless wanderer? It is no mere artist's allegory; there as much truth in it as must make its appeal a hreat of judgment to the Church and to Christianity. But, happily, it is for the purpose of showng a glimpse of the obverse of the medal that we reproduce it to-day.

Anyone entering the lecture hall at 186, Aldersgate-street, last Monday at noon, would have found himself in full view of 200 healthy-looking, well-clad boys and youths arrayed in front of the platform. In the course of the week all these fine fellows would be tossing on the Atlantic billows on their way to Canada. They were the first party of emigrants for the present year from Dr. Barnardo's Homes in East London, and in accordance with the excellent custom of these institutions, they had come to this place, where prayer is wont to be made, for the purpose of being presented to the Lord in the requests of his people, and being commended, ere setting forth on the great unknown future that awaited them under new skies, to Him who keeps the winds and waves in the hollow of his fist.

Dr. Barnardo devoted his brief address to a most interesting resumé of his emigration work, and specially to a glance at the life histories of the boys before him. It is designed this year, he said, to emigrate 600 children, boys and girls, from the affiliated Institutions under his care; 1734 had already passed over to the Canadian Land of Promise, and it was stated with justifiable pride, that not one girl and only some five boys out of the whole number had lapsed from the path of virtue and rectitude. The address was tinged with a more personal tone as the speaker turned to his boys and passed them in review. At the back was a row of stalwart youths, dressed in a natty white sailor's costume, the rest of the party displaying the usual uniform of the Home—dark cloth, cut in military type, and with red facings. The plump little fellows in front, with the clear eye of health and cheeks of rosy hues, that spoke volumes for Stepney sanitation, ranged in age from eleven to twelve; their big brothers behind were of maturer years, from seventeen to nineteen. It was explained that all in the sailor garb were youths from the Labour House—a unique Institution in connection with rescue work for the young. Too old for refuges and reformatories, these youths are too weak to fight with their elders the terrible battle of competition.

It is for such that this Labour House was established. Young fellows willing to work, but unable to find situations, are taken in from the demoralising streets, and set to the use of their powers in honest labour. A few months of such a testing time weed out the lazy and the worthless; and the result is a body of strapping young fellows with thews and sinews fit for anything, and ready to front any world that will give them a chance to fight its difficulties.

What of the others? "The very flower of our flock," said Dr. Barnardo. Who would have supposed that these sturdy youngsters had been saved by direct rescue from constituting, probably, a real danger to society? "Are they then the mere waifs and strays of the streets?" asks someone; "if so, are they proper material for colonial citizens?" This supposed objection Dr. Barnardo spent a few minutes in demolishing. "Very many of these lads were, no doubt," said he, "originally homeless and orphan, and, as such, unless he or others like him, had taken care of them, they must have remained a reproach to our civilisation. But between what they were on admission, and what they were now, a busy period had intervened. None had been in the Homes for less than six months; the great majority had been much longer, and a few had been as many years. Discipline, education, and religion had taken hold of them immediately on their admission, when they were at the most ductile period of their lives, and now they came forward for emigration after a series of tests, such as afforded a real guarantee as to character. Their training consisted first in a thorough grounding in the three R's. Habits of industry, order, and cleanliness had been also inculcated. "There is not, I hope, a lazy bone," said the Doctor, "in the whole body of even the youngest." Best of all, they were surrounded from the outset by the gracious and all-powerful influences of religion, as taught in its simplicity in the Gospel of Christ, and brought before the boys in the daily examples of their guides and instructors. "In the Labour House particularly," said the Doctor, "there had been this year wonderful evidences of the working of the Spirit of God. Many real conversions to God have taken place, and not a few of these dear young fellows have shown in their daily life every mark of the true Christian. To hear them at their own prayer meetings seeking for grace to guide them, and for blessings to attend their friends and mates, is one of the most affecting things that our Homes could offer to gladden the hearts of their Christian supporters." Out of these 200 present, Dr. Barnardo stated, he had good reason to hope that at least seventy to be true followers of the Master.



Studies from Life of Youths in Labour House

Further evidence in favour of their aptitude for a Colonial life followed. Their industrial training was insisted on, and a few graphic glimpses given of all the shops where the boys learned, not merely to make shoes and brushes, carpenter's work, aerated waters, packing-cases, and firewood, but also to mould themselves into a genuine type of manhood.

A very interesting series of statistics closed an address that overflowed with interesting matter. It appeared that the boys were gathered from the east, west, north and south. Not a county of England was unrepresented, and Ireland and Scotland sent their quota. Several were of French and German descent, and one or two of them represented even more remote nationalities. If a boy came from Kamschatka, with destitution written in clothing or countenance, he had undeniable claims for admission at Stepney. It was added that the total cost of emigration, including outfit, was only £8 10s. for each youngster.

At the close of Dr. Barnardo's address, Mr. Henry Varley briefly addressed some appropriate words to the boys. Donning the prophet's mantle, he predicted that in, say 15 or 20 years, when the locks of their friend Mr. Burn were beginning to whiten, he would probably have the duty of introducing to that same Noonday Meeting some one of these very boys who should have made his mark in the land of his adoption, as the "Honourable William Thompson." His own experiences in Canada enabled him to state confidently that the prime lack of that country was a godly, industrious population. Its five provinces could support a thousand millions, and there were only at present five millions! Their large cities, for instance, were 500, 1000, and even 1500 miles apart. But, for each and for all, it was a country where a resident had to work, and work hard. "Quit yourselves like men!" exclaimed the speaker. A request to the pledged total abstainers among the boys to stand up was at once responded to by nearly the entire number. A bit of practical advice, he continued, which he would give them was to leave the Canadian cities alone, and fill the large demand which existed for workers of all kinds in the immense tracts of country waiting to be cultivated. Mr. Varley reminded his young audience that the fear of the Lord was the beginning of wisdom, and with this word of deeper significance his address was brought to a close. A few earnest words followed from General R. M. Lowery, of Canada.

As the meeting slowly dispersed, the "God-speeds" to the young voyageurs were both deep and fervent.

"The children of to-day are the Society, the Church, and the Nation of to-morrow. . . . . The boy with his whip, and the girl with her doll, will before long rule real factors in Church and State, and train real lives for the weal or woe of the nation. See the coming mother in that little old-fashioned darling, rocking her doll to sleep, and humming the lullaby tunes which so recently sounded in her own ears! See the voter, the orator, the merchant, the banker, the editor, the senator, in the stout youngster with bootlegs outside his trousers, and uncombed head crowned with torn and twisted cap. Music and oratory, enterprise and money, railroad schemes and political devices, power—social, religious, commercial, and educational, lie all unfashioned and undirected in the little brains and muscles and hearts of the children around you."—Extract from Introduction by J. Notes and Comments.

WE congratulate the Bishop of London on his choice of Rev. J. F. Kitto, Rector of Stepney, for the important West-end charge of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields. The long and faithful service of Mr. Kitto as an East-end pastor ought to form an additional link in the lengthening chain of sympathy between "Belgravia and Bethnal Green."

Anything which increases the secularisation of the Day of Rest is much to be deplored. Whether this will be the result of last week's vote in the Upper House, sanctioning the opening of London museums and picture galleries, experience alone can show. We should be far more reconciled to such a step if the legislature would at the same time restrict the hours of opening for public-houses on Sundays. Lovers of a true Sabbath ought to bend all their energies in that direction.

Many persons will be greatly disappointed at the refusal of the Prime Minister to recommend the appointment of a day of national humiliation and prayer, in view of the distressed condition of our people generally. We have a strong consolation, however, in the assurance that God is ready to be entreated by the faithful few, as well as by the many. We would sound a note of earnest thanksgiving for the gift of mild weather, which must tend greatly to the amelioration of the lot of the poor and needy.

Amid the many discouraging signs of these times, we are thankful to see a ray of hope in the sweeping, though tardy, condemnation of the Contagious Diseases Acts, implied in the acceptance of Mr. Stansfeld's resolution by the House of Commons last week. We should have felt more thankful still if the Government had undertaken to press through a formal measure of repeal, but we trust they will afford all possible facility to Mr. Stansfeld in passing the Bill he would have already introduced but for the characteristic opposition of Mr. Cavendish Bentinck.

This crusade must now be directed to the purification of the law in all the Crown colonies abroad; and we are glad to observe that the Ladies' National Association, which has done such noble service in the past, is fully alive to the fresh calls on its devotion. The important conference last week of the National Vigilance Association also shows that no pains will be spared in applying and enforcing the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, so as to punish the inhuman ghouls who trade in the virtue of the young.

Milan, it is reported, went into delirium during the late Carnival. Costumes for 2000 maskers were supplied by one costumier. Harlequins and masqueraders went from Venice, Bergamo, and Turin. By night and by day the city was in a mad whirl of pleasure; by this stratagem, and under the sanction of the priesthood, a half-ignorant and starving population was kept amused before Lent. Respecting the Carnival in Paris, a correspondent of The Daily Post of Birmingham thus writes:—

> The illustrations of the various journals of the hour, supposed to furnish forth due representation of the very age and manners of the time, its form and pressure, give proof of the complete prise de possession of the city by the cocottes. The display of the licentiousness and wickedness which seem to have swamped all the honour and decency of the place is hideous in its cynical publicity. If the cartoons of the Journal Amusant and the Vie Parisienne, which are considered to give the most faithful representations of Parisian life, can be relied upon, then may Paris be indeed described as the most hateful city in the world. The half-naked Bacchante . . . takes possession of the ball-room floor. The Carnival amusements of Paris are truly worthy of its municipal government, by whom all religious instruction in the public schools is strictly forbidden, and orders given that the name of God should be obliterated from all the books furnished to the children.

With the coming of the spring, the flower-girl becomes a familiar sight in our streets, and a pleasant object she is with her burden of daffodils or violets, or primroses. Through the summer months her basket grows richer and richer, as roses, pale and red, take the place of the more modest wildings of the spring. Many are the buyers of a "button-hole" or a "posy," and we have then no anxiety with regard to her, for she seems to be doing fairly well.

It is not always summer, however, and the winter brings its burden of care to the flower-girl as to myriads of other toilers. With the goods scarce, with prices abnormally high, and with the probabilities of sale reduced, extreme hardship is her lot between the autumn and the spring. Ill clad, and poorly fed and lodged, in many cases consumption claims her for its own. Thoughtful people—may God bless them and their work—are labouring to save her, to soften somewhat a lot that must necessarily, even at its best, be a hard one, and to protect her from those who would tempt and destroy. The "Flower-girls' and Watercress girls' Mission" is by no means the least deserving, or the least noble, of the movements which from time to time it is our privilege in these pages to commend to the kindly practical sympathy of our readers. The inclement winter from which we are so slowly emerging, has greatly taxed the capabilities of the Mission; the mere fact that such is the case is evidence that much excellent work has been done, that the sick and the weary have been comforted, the destitute fed, and the sorely-tempted saved for a life of purity.

There may be good and weighty objections against women coming to the front in the rough-and-tumble arena of general political life, but it seems to us that their presence on Boards of Guardians is for many reasons much to be desired. It is a fact, we believe, that women and children constitute the large proportion of our State paupers, and it is eminently proper that Christian women should in every district take a share in controlling the local machinery by which the lives and comfort of their poor sisters are regulated. We should rejoice if, at the annual elections of these Boards of Guardians, women with shrewd heads and warm hearts could be oftener induced to give themselves to this service.

In reading the able and comprehensive Life of John Bunyan, by Rev. J. Brown (Isbister), the impression is very deep of the spiritual power of the Church life of that period. Christian fellowship was then a reality. Brethren to whom the Lord may have given a gift, were urged to speak for mutual edification. We continually come across records of the body of believers setting apart days for prayer. Is not this the primitive usage, and the primitive revelation of Christ? A genuine development of Church fellowship, heart touching heart as living coals, is a great need of the times.

In the same work we are told of the three degrees that Bunyan had received from a heavenly university. These were—Union with Christ, the experience of the temptations of Satan, and the anointing of the Spirit. According to the godly men of Bunyan's days, without these three degrees no man was fitted for the mighty work of preaching the Gospel; many are of the same mind in this day.

A correspondent who has been affected by recent comments in The Christian, with regard to low wages, urges with much reason that one of the causes that tend to make insufficient renumeration almost inevitable is the credit system which necessarily injures the small employer of labour. It is not difficult to comprehend how hampered the business-man, who is not either a capitalist or a middleman, must be when he is not promptly paid for that which has been promptly manufactured or supplied; and that a portion of the hardship should reach the workmen is to be expected. Much evil is wrought simply by want of thought, and we are certain that after a little reflection upon this aspect of a question, which to-day is receiving much prayerful consideration from Christian people, many of those who have means and who are careless with regard to payments, simply because they themselves never experience what it is to want money, will gladly follow the Apostolic injunction to "owe no man anything."

Mr. A. J. Arnold, Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, has left London on a visit to the Riviera and Italian cities, in response to a cordial invitation from the Roman Committee of the Alliance, and influential representatives of the Waldensian, the Free, and other Churches. During five or six weeks, meetings for promoting Christian union and the defence of the persecuted in many lands (in accordance with the aims of the Alliance) will be held in the principal cities.

Those who have had practical experience of the Boards of Nomination, under which clerical appointments are now made in the Church of Ireland, are more than satisfied with the results. In hundreds of cases men have been selected simply because they were well known for their faithful service as curates, and for their ability in preaching; and there are crowded churches where before three-fourths of the seats were empty. As we write we have before us a recent case in which the system worked admirably, and it is only one of many equally striking. The parish church of a large district was almost unattended for reasons to which it would be painful to refer; upon the death of the incumbent the Board of Nomination elected a well-known clergyman, a convert under Mr. Moody, whose love of his Master fills his whole life. Already the large church has been found to be too small; the prayer meetings are crowded, and the place has become a centre of spiritual activity. It may safely be assumed that when the congregations have a share in the important duty of selecting a pastor, the choice will be based upon motives of a worthy and creditable kind.

In the continued and severe depression of trade there is no more anxious problem than that of relieving unobtrusive poverty without encouraging the habitually indolent. The Nemesis of our drinking customs is upon us. The tavern temptations we have multiplied have fostered an invincible dislike to work of all kinds, so that the President of the Local Government Board lately said that out of 135 unemployed men who were offered 15s. a week for sweeping streets in London, only 13 offered to do it, and only five stuck to it. This lamentable state of things is widespread. These lazy men prefer living on the charities of the benevolent. They get more money thereby, but at the same time they check benevolence towards the really deserving, and spread a chronic dependence that will last longer than our present distress.

What is urgently needed is more union of action among those whose hearts have been touched, and whose purses have been opened by the present destitution. Many are seeking to relieve it, but independent action may pauperise families instead of benefiting them. Is there no method, by conference or otherwise, of securing a common ground of action? The subject is a very grave one, and needs for its solution the combined wisdom and effort of all.

The columns of The Daily Telegraph have for several days been largely occupied by letters on the subject of "Kissing Games," said to be common at Sunday-school and Band of Hope entertainments. Some teachers indignantly deny that such games are common; others maintain as strenuously that they are the rule, not the exception. One writer, who claims ten years' experience in six counties, says:—

> The half has not been told. . . . The same evils more or less prevail in all these places. I can testify that the most disastrous results have been the practical outcome of these games, and several persons who have come under my own notice trace their moral ruin to their pernicious influence.

Some writers justify the indulgence in these games. One says that were they not practised many Sunday-schools could not exist. Another attributes the falling-off in the attendance at Sunday-schools to its "becoming the rule to taboo all such innocent amusements as kissing," and adds:—

> If stern moralists imagine they will be doing great service by purging Sunday-school parties of this form of amusement I, for one, think they will be greatly mistaken.

While we are not in a position to gainsay such positive evidence as the foregoing, it is at the same time our earnest hope and belief that the evils referred to are by no means prevalent. The discussion that has arisen may serve to prevent their growth, and in this there will be much reason to rejoice. We notice that the Sunday-school Union are taking steps to ascertain the true state of matters in Sunday-schools throughout the country. If any of our readers have any light, gained from personal knowledge, to throw on the subject, we shall be glad to hear from them.

Another abuse that seems to require the assiduous attention of the instructors of youth is the practice of betting in our public schools. A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette asserts that it is far more common than is generally believed, and cites the case of a young aristocrat who is insolvent at the age of twenty-six through "turf" operations. If the life blood of England is thus to be poisoned at its very fountain head, woe be to us as a nation.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Radcliffe is finding many opportunities, during his sojourn in the sunny South, to press the question of foreign evangelisation on the attention of Christians residing in the South of France and Italy. He has had meetings at Cannes, San Remo, and other places, when a deep interest was aroused in this all-important subject. Colonel Paschkoff and Lady Sebright have been among those who assisted on these occasions.

The Editor of The Record recently addressed a communication to the 740 beneficed clergymen of the Church of Ireland in the three Provinces of Munster, Leinster, and Connaught, Ulster having been excluded from the inquiry. They were asked to state whether the condition of the Church of Ireland is worse or better than it was five years ago, and how it has been affected materially and spiritually by the Land agitation. It will not surprise our readers to learn that the writers of some 460 replies are almost unanimous in asserting that the "material condition" of the Irish Church has deteriorated in many parishes, and that not a few of them agree in anticipating "the ruin of the Church" if the landlords are expropriated. Making every allowance for the circumstances under which many clergymen must have responded to the circular letter—circumstances well calculated to lead to exaggeration—there can be no doubt that the prospect as regards the material condition in the country districts is gloomy in the extreme. There is good ground for the fear that with the withdrawal of the Protestant gentry from Ireland there must necessarily be much loss of property and income on the part of the clergy.

That fear is intensified, too, by the fact that the Representative Body of the Church sixteen years ago invested nearly four millions in mortgages upon Irish estates, lending large sums at four per cent. to landlords who could not get the money at so low a rate elsewhere, and who to-day are unable either to repay the sums or to pay the interest. Even if the "No Rent" cry were to cease, it is evident that these investments must be greatly depreciated owing to the general depreciation in the value of land, a fall which must be recognised, even if the Prime Minister's proposed purchase scheme be adopted. Should the Land question be deputed, as seems likely to be the case, to a College Green Parliament, it is reasonable to anticipate that investments of this kind, made out of the funds of an alien State Church, and regarded by the great majority of the people as having been helpful in bolstering up a hated system of landlordism, will meet with but little consideration; and the lot of those who are dependent upon that portion of the Sustentation Fund will undoubtedly be a hard one. That many churches would have to be closed must be admitted, for in numbers of districts the Protestants are too few to maintain a minister, and in all probability they will become fewer and fewer, as their surroundings become more and more uncongenial.

Whether in such circumstances the Church of Ireland—a missionary church from the beginning, however she may have failed to act up to her privileges—will rise to the occasion, and adopt a system of meeting the spiritual needs of these scattered flocks, can as yet scarcely be surmised, but the opportunity will be there; and as Methodism has been a great evangelising power without having millions invested in landed securities, there is probably no reason why the Church of Ireland should not be equally successful, even when the surroundings are of a more antagonistic nature than has hitherto been the case. Dark as the outlook seems, there are not wanting to-day noble-hearted men in the ranks of her clergy who fail to see that disestablishment has injured her spiritual interests, and who are able in strong faith to leave the unknown future to God.

ASLEEP, YET AWAKE.

"She is not dead, but sleepeth; I go to awaken her out of sleep."

SADLY we watched her through those weary hours,
  Trembling upon the borderland of death;
  Divided only by her soft-drawn breath—
Each moment feebler grown, with failing powers—
Till all was still; and we, in awe, held ours;
  Alone supported by one common faith:
  A shining lamp along a lonely path;
A plant which, 'midst the desert winds, still flowers.
Oh, glad uplifting of the solemn veil;
  Revealing to the longing eyes of men
Some glimpses of the ransomed soul's entail,
  Whose "weight of glory" 'twere impossible to pen;
Transfused with light; emerged from death's dark vale,
  Asleep to earth alone; alive to heaven!

THE SALVATION ARMY.

THE fifth anniversary meeting of the work in France and Switzerland was held on Monday week in Exeter-hall, which was well filled with a sympathetic audience.

Miss Booth presided. Mrs. Booth was also present, though she looked weak after her recent illness. Representatives of the foreign work, some of them in the national costumes of provincial France and Switzerland, occupied prominent places on the platform. After fervid addresses by a French and a German female Captain, Colonel Clibborn said the war there was very different to that in England. Here there was, so to speak, a fulcrum on which to rest the lever. There, the population was ignorant, indifferent, and entirely irreligious. All the more gloriously had God manifested his saving power. They had during the year almost doubled the number of their stations and officers. They had opened a large hall at Lyons, the head-quarters of infidelity and revolution. People thought they had been driven out of Switzerland, but they had established a second corps in Geneva, and in Neuchatel, from which, in defiance of treaties, nine British officers had been expelled.

Miss Booth said they had been brought through many a Red Sea of persecution. After speaking of several notorious persecutors who had been converted, she said they had made great progress in arresting the attention of infidel France. She had more hope of an out-and-out infidel than of a man with the Bible in his hand, who avowed his belief in the most extraordinary doctrines in the world, but whose life did not correspond with his creed. She proceeded to give a deeply-interesting account of her visits to cafés, and to the doors of theatres, and spoke with gratitude of the remarks of the political journals with regard to the work of the Army. The Training Homes had been very successful in turning out warriors prepared to risk, not merely their reputations, but their lives, in the service of the Lord.

Other addresses followed from French and Swiss representatives.

A GOOD WORK IN BILLINGSGATE.

IT was encouraging to see so goodly a number of men assembled at Billingsgate Market on Thursday last at midday to hear an address from Mr. Henry Varley. His address, from the words, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy," was listened to with manifest interest and approval. Referring to the Temperance question, Mr. Varley said he had just received a letter from a wine merchant in America, thanking him for having been the means, in God's hands, of inducing him to relinquish the business. "I have lost," said he, "seven thousand dollars a year, but I have gained immeasurably more through the peace and joy I have experienced."

Mr. Walters added a personal testimony to the power of the Gospel. He warmly thanked the men for coming, and begged their acceptance of a little book setting forth the way of salvation.

The Female Strangers' Lodging House (105b, Piccadilly, Manchester), has, as the ninth annual report reminds us, been the means of extending most timely help to many young women who otherwise might have become the victims of the harpies who, in our great cities, are ever on the look out to snare simple and unprotected females. Established "to prevent mischief," and on the self-supporting principle, the beds being let at from 6d. a night, it has done a very considerable and beneficial work. Last year 822 women and girls found a safe abiding-place, either as regular lodgers or for a night or two, many of these latter having missed their trains at night. In view of the dangers to which young women are exposed in strange places, we cannot be too thankful for such work.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

MR. AITKEN IN CAMBRIDGE.

THE most conspicuous religious event of the past week has been Mr. Aitken's "Mission" to the University. It began on Sunday night, at 8.15. St. Mary's was crowded, except the galleries. Fully a thousand men were there. Very large attendances followed, on Monday and Tuesday, and I hear of true spiritual results in individual cases. Great power marks the preacher's message. There were afternoon services in St. Mary's daily, at 2.30, for a general congregation. At these the addresses were on the spiritual life. Mr. Aitken preached to a very large congregation at Trinity Church, on Sunday morning, on True Happiness, and will preach there again next Sunday morning. He gives each Sunday a special afternoon address to men of the working class; he is engaged the whole of each morning in personal interviews at his rooms (I hear that many intellectual unbelievers have sought these interviews); and he was to give two addresses, before the close of the week, to lady students.—Record.

MESSRS. PENTECOST AND STEBBINS.

The Sunday afternoon Gospel services conducted by Dr. George F. Pentecost in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, says the New York Independent, has developed, probably, a greater degree of religious interest than has ever been known in that city. The series commenced in October, and will close in April, making the services of six months' duration. Since the opening Sunday there has not been one service that has not been attended by an overwhelming audience, and enough people have been turned away many Sundays to make an average Brooklyn church congregation. To step into the Academy any Sunday afternoon while these services are in progress would go a great way to dispel the notion from the mind of the average thinker that Christianity is on the wane, and that its place is being filled by agnosticism and infidelity. The Academy services are made doubly interesting by the musical portion of the exercises. Mr. George C. Stebbins leads the singing, which receives substantial support from a large chorus of mixed voices, seated on the stage. Mrs. Stebbins is also a valuable aid to the music, contributing much to it by the charming duets in which she is heard with her husband. Dr. Pentecost is preaching a course of eight sermons on "Fundamental Truths."

MR. HAMMOND AT RICHMOND.

The meetings have day by day deepened in interest and power. The numerous drawing-room meetings have been a special feature of this mission. Very many who would not have attended an ordinary evangelistic service have been drawn to these gatherings of the upper classes, and not a few young ladies as well as children have been led to give their hearts to Christ.

In one of the afternoon meetings, held in the College Hall, we noticed a gentleman with his four children, in the second meeting, bathed in tears. He had brought them all the way from the West-end of London that they might receive a blessing in these meetings. His prayers were answered before the meeting closed. On Sunday evening he was again present with three of his servants, who were weeping bitterly in the inquiry-meeting, and before they left they thought they were able to trust in Christ for salvation. Many clergymen and Christian laymen from other places have been present, and have taken part in the meetings. On Monday evening Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke and Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice both addressed the meeting; Rev. E. H. Hopkins spoke especially to the young converts. On Tuesday evening, Rev. H. C. Sturdy, from Dorking, and Mr. Powel, from Clapham, took part. The short testimony and praise meetings with which the last few evenings have concluded have been seasons of great rejoicing to the workers, as one after another has risen to thank God for special blessings received. At one of the meetings a young woman was spoken to who seemed deeply anxious about her soul. After conversation and prayer she gave herself to the Lord, and, as she realised that Jesus had received her as a poor lost sinner, her face was lit up with a new-found joy. She had been brought by a Christian gentleman with his two little boys, from a village in Kent, to be present at that meeting, with the one desire that they might be saved; we believe that all three gave their hearts to the Lord.

Very many will have cause to thank God throughout eternity for sending Mr. Hammond and Mr. Spiers to Richmond, and our prayers will follow the former to Cardiff, where he commences united services on March 27. C. H.

MR. HENRY LAKIN IN DUBLIN.

Much blessing has attended the services held by Mr. Lakin, in the Mission Building Townsend-street, Dublin, from February 28 to March 10. At one service there were as many as 200 Roman Catholics amongst the congregation. The power of the Lord was present. A Christian woman, once a Roman Catholic, stopped at home one night to lend her clothes to a friend, who had none fit to appear in, that she might hear the good news.

In the inquiry-room many strange cases were dealt with. One poor Roman Catholic man when told the simple plan of salvation said, "I ask your pardon, sir, but are ye humbuggin' me?" He thought it too good to be true. When shown John iii. 16, and Rom. x. 9, 10, he was enabled to trust the Word of the eternal God, and went on his way rejoicing. The children of the various Mission Homes have shared in the blessing, many of the boys and girls having given their hearts to the Lord. Mr. Lakin has won the affectionate regard of all who worked with him in this mission. Many prayers follow him, that he may have a yet more abundant harvest of souls at Tunbridge Wells, whither he is now gone.

At a praise meeting, held on Monday, March 15, many who had been converted during the mission openly thanked God for his saving grace, as manifested to them. Amongst those who returned thanks was a Roman Catholic priest. May this be but the beginning of greater blessing to follow.

H. F.

THE WEST HIGHLANDS.

A work of grace has been going on for some time past at Bonawe, Loch Etive, near Oban. An evangelist went there last Christmas, and commenced work in the School-house, with such good results that it was found necessary to remove to larger premises. Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, of the Free Church there, kindly gave the use of his church, as well as his hearty co-operation in the work. The meetings were continued there for seven weeks. The church was crowded every night, some of the people coming three and four miles through heavy snow-covered roads, all of them more or less evincing a great thirst for the Word. A special feature of the work has been the quiet, earnest spirit manifest among the people. Personal visitations during the day revealed many cases of anxious ones who were pointed to the Lamb of God, when not a few entered into peace through believing. The after-meetings in the church were quite a new departure in this quarter. The public testimony and the singing of the hymns were used to the conversion of many.

The work was much encouraged and helped by a band of young believers from the granite quarries, on the other side of the Loch, coming over in their boats to the meetings, and giving testimony to what the grace of God had done for them. It is rather more than twelve months since the Lord visited the workers in the quarries, and by the instrumentality of the same evangelist so shook the place that souls dead in trespasses and sins were raised to life, and are monuments of God's grace to the present day. Whole families were converted to the Lord on that occasion.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

The present visit of the evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, to New Orleans, will mark an epoch in the religious history of this Southern metropolis. It is universally conceded that nothing like such public enthusiasm was ever seen or known here. Aggressive movements of the Gospel in this city have been very slow. With the great mass of the population intensely Roman Catholic and largely French, spiritual religion has won its way against "a sea of difficulties." But now there is an advanced movement along the whole line, with all the stir of a storm. Every Protestant denomination is strongly represented, and the most delightful unity prevails.

Among the prime factors in this happy consummation must be mentioned the recent "mission" of Rev. Wm. Hay Aitken. His labours in the Episcopal churches were greatly blessed of God, and have borne much fruit. During Mr. Aitken's labours, a vestryman was converted, who for years had held a lucrative clerkship of 3,600 dollars a year in the office of the Louisiana Lottery Company. He at once resigned his position, though, it is said, he was urged to remain at a salary of six thousand dollars per annum. Such an instance indicates the depth and power of that mission. At the close of his mission Mr. Aitken referred to the coming of "Brother Moody," as he called him, commended his work, as he had observed it in England and America, and urged Episcopalians to co-operate heartily in his meetings.

Mr. Sankey has been in fine voice, and shares with Mr. Moody the sympathy of these great congregations. It is doubted if he has ever sung more effectively. The almost breathless silence of three thousand people during the rendering of one of his favourite solos is a magnificent tribute to the power of the human voice. His marvellously clear enunciation, and his striking interpretation of the rhythmic soul of the hymn, make his singing profoundly impressive to those people who hear so much voice performance in an unknown tongue. And Mr. Sankey is in labours abundant. He sings in the great hall at the beginning of each service, attends the overflow-meetings at the Carondelet-street Methodist Church, and then gives an hour or more to a large congregation in a coloured church. Thus all classes are sought to be reached.

A correspondent in Galveston, Texas, writes to the New York Independent:—

One of the most profitable and delightful series of religious services ever held in this city has closed. Messrs. Moody and Sankey began their Texas work in Galveston, Sunday 21st, closing on the 23rd. All the Protestant churches joined cordially and heartily in these services except our Episcopal brethren. The largest building in the city was secured and fitted up—the Rink, with a seating capacity of 3200. It was, indeed, a remarkable sight in a city whose masses are largely unreached by the Protestant churches, to see such crowds attending these services and taking such an evident and deep interest in them all. It is hard to form an estimate of the good done. It was a perfect feast to Christian people, and a great revival of the spiritual life of the Churches. The revival had already begun in the hearts of God's people before our brethren came to us, and their earnest work has deepened and intensified it. Mr. Sankey's Gospel as sung was greatly enjoyed, and he won all our hearts by his warm Christian spirit. Mr. Moody's preaching was earnest, practical, full of the Gospel, and very convincing. He commanded and held from the first the attention of all classes of his hearers Mr. Moody's strength seems to me to lie largely in his deep and full knowledge of the Word, and his abiding faith in its saving power. Between two and three hundred men were led to give expression to their concern for salvation, and many of them are rejoicing in Christ. All our hearts are filled with gladness and hope. The services are to be continued, with the help of Mr. George C. Needham.

Mr. E. W. Bliss follows up the work at New Orleans, and Mr. Thos. Needham is busy in North Carolina.

Rev. H. Price Hughes has been conducting a most successful evangelistic mission in Aberdeen, in connection with the Y.M.C.A.

Major Penn and Mr. Cairns, from Texas, have been conducting evangelistic services in the London Cabmen's Mission Hall, King's-cross, with much profit to those who flock to hear them.

Brechin, N.B.—A correspondent writes: "We have had Mr. J. Cleworth in our town for two weeks past. Notwithstanding the severe weather, the meetings have been well attended, and the faithful seed-sowing of the evangelist must bear good fruit."

Rev. James Caughey.—It is several years since Rev. James Caughey has been able to preach, owing to physical prostration, but now, at about eighty years of age, his health is so far restored as to be able again to preach that glorious Gospel, by which, in his ministry, thousands were saved.

Mr. C. King gave a lecture on Social Purity, to men only, in the Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, on Thursday, March 18. About one thousand men were present. Mr. King warned young men to avoid music-halls and dens of iniquity. At the close of the meeting two hundred White Cross pledge cards were taken.

Rev. Edward Smith has begun operations at St. John's-square, Clerkenwell. Rev. T. Champness, in Joyful News, says, "We have very little doubt that the gifted man who has Clerkenwell to evangelise, will now meet with the success of his life, and that useful as he has been, the future will be more remarkable still."

Mr. D. Wright, of Dunedin, sends to The New Zealand Christian Advocate a hearty note of praise for the great blessing that has been given in connection with his evangelistic labours during 1885. He says: "Through God's goodness I have travelled extensively, seen much to interest, instruct, and encourage; come into contact with many earnest workers for Christ, addressed thousands, conversed with inquirers after salvation, and enjoyed the work most thoroughly."

Richard Weaver, the evangelist, commenced a series of evangelistic meetings in the Clark Town Hall, Paisley, on Sunday, March 14. Although he was suffering from a very bad cold, he presented the grand old Gospel with a vigour and clearness admired by all. At the close of his address there were tokens of real blessing, as shown by those who came forward to be spoken with. At his subsequent meetings during the week many manifested deep soul concern. Not for a long time have we seen so many cases of real anxiety about salvation. George Ross.

YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.

BURLINGTON HALL, W.

THE anniversary meetings of this West-end branch of the Y.M.C.A. are always of a quiet and homely type, but full of genuine interest withal. At the meeting last week we were glad to see such an excellent muster of fine, hearty-looking young men, not to speak of the sprinkling of the fair sex that graced the occasion.

In his report Mr. Pearce made graceful reference to the recent testimonial presented to him on the completion of a quarter of a century of service as secretary—the silver wedding, as Mr. George Williams happily expressed it. The report spoke also of not a few who are now in the foremost ranks of the fight, both at home and abroad, who received their training at this branch. The Bible-classes have ever been a special feature under Mr. Pearce's régime, and the encouraging fruits of these are constantly appearing.

The young men at Burlington-hall are always lavishly provided for in the matter of speeches at these annual reviews; but they are generally good. The Chairman last week, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, was most hearty and unstinted in his commendation of the work of the Y.M.C.A., and the great need for it in these days of multiplied temptation. Sir R. N. Fowler was equally warm and loud in his praise, but we were sorry he drew such a forbidding picture of the lot of the foreign missionary. We hope none of his hearers will be discouraged by the worthy alderman's remarks from choosing that most glorious of callings for our Christian youth Of course Mr. George Williams was there; a Y.M.C.A. meeting in London would be very incomplete without him. His beaming face and words of cheer never fail to awaken enthusiasm, or to afford matter for profitable reflection.

As a set-off against Alderman Fowler's speech, there was a stirring story of Gospel triumphs in India, by Mr. Bauman, who would have left a splendid impression if he had stopped before the Chairman had to pull him up. Still, it was truly refreshing to listen to the rolling, sonorous periods in which he appealed to his young brethren to be "All for Christ." Rev. T. Eynon Davies gained "touch" of his sympathetic audience at once, and kept it throughout, while he urged them with Celtic fire and force to cultivate all the heroic virtues, and show to a sceptical generation that the Christian is the highest style of man. Last of all came Dr. Donald Fraser, who arrived late, having, as he apologetically remarked, already attended two meetings that evening. However, his store of sound and stimulating advice had been by no means exhausted, and no previous speaker met with a more hushed attention or received heartier applause.

We cordially re-echo the fervent hope uttered by Mr. Williams, that the next quarter of a century at the West-end branch may even outstrip the glories of the past.

THE PRIORY, ISLINGTON.

The friends—and they are many—of this branch of the Y.M.C.A., which has its home in the historic grounds of the Priory, had their annual meeting on Monday evening last week at Mydleton Hall, Upper-street, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams.

Mr. J. J. Atkinson's report was a most encouraging statement of work and workers; of work amongst young men in Islington; of workers who, animated with that zeal and love with which they have become inspired in the Sabbath morning fellowship meetings, in the afternoon Bible-class, and in evangelistic meetings of various kinds, have gone forth into all sorts of mission fields—both at home and abroad—some to labour and to die; in the wilds of distant Winnipeg, where Arthur Groom succumbed to disease and drooped, "to rise in a newer and perhaps to some a nearer world than we imagine of light and usefulness;" amongst the mountains of Pennsylvania, where one is preaching to a coloured congregation; at two distant stations of the China Inland Missions, echoes of the truths first learnt and practised at the Priory have been heard. Thus far from this favoured spot have the rays of Divine light penetrated. In closing, the secretary said that new branches in connection with the North Metropolitan district had recently been opened at Wood Green, Southgate, North Finchley, and Highgate. The treasurer's report showed for the first time a deficit amounting to £160.

In a very cordial address, the Chairman said that "Come with us to the Y.M.C.A." was a very different invitation to "Come with us to the music-hall." Some appalling instances of how young men were led astray in this way had recently come before him.

Rev. Marmaduke Washington lamented the fact that in the city there were so many public-houses up quiet courts, where young men went, not to get necessary refreshment, but a glass of wine or spirits.

Rev. Dr. Edmond referred to the associations connected with that hall, where the first two years of his ministerial work was carried on, and to the fact that for now twenty-five years he had laboured in Islington, having witnessed a change of pastors, by death or otherwise, in every pulpit in the parish, with the exception of two—that of the venerable Prebendary of Islington and Dr. Allon. He enlarged on the benefit of such Associations—first to young men, and then to society generally. Here that companionship which young men so yearned after was afforded them, and here by precept and example they were kept from those evil associations which ruined so many.

Rev. T. Eynon Davies and Mr. W. E. Shipton having spoken, Mr. Williams said he would take twenty-five shares (£25) in the effort towards the payment of the debt. He earnestly hoped that the coming year, being the semi-jubilee year of their Secretary's labours, might be a very happy and prosperous one.

Missionary Work is progressing in the islands of the Pacific. The number of adults baptised last year was larger than usual, the greatest increase being on Solomon Island, where the people came in a body to receive Christian teaching.

Union Hall Mission.—Mr. R. Bilke (18, Greenhill-park Villas, Harlesden, N.W.) states that he has been distributing soup at Union Hall three times a week to 200 poor families, besides free teas, bread, clothing, &c. He desires to continue this relief.

Irish Stew Soup Dinners.—Mr. W. J. Orsman, of the Golden-lane and Hoxton Mission, writes "to thank our readers for their generous help in time of need. Many hearts have been gladdened, especially among the Lord's poor, by the bestowal of timely and suitable aid."

Working Men's Mission, New Cut.—The Brothers Young, 16, Queen-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E., writes: "We are very anxious to continue feeding the hungry poor for another month. During the last few weeks we have supplied dinners to about 2000 men, women, and children."

Ben Jonson Mission, Stepney, E., is doing a much needed work just now—feeding and clothing the destitute poor. Left-off clothing, food, and fuel, with donations for soup and dinners for children, will be thankfully received by the Superintendent, Mr. James Taylor, 28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green, E.

The Army and Navy Prayer Union Meeting, at the Cannon-street Hotel, on Saturday week, was a great success. Probably between three and four hundred were present, and there was a general heartiness in the proceedings. Special prayer was offered for the work of the Misses Robinson, Daniell, and Weston. Captain Key, R.N., Major Owen Hay, Captain Poulden, General Halliday, General Graydon, Captain L. Fawkes, R.A., and General Field, C.B., took part.

The Deaths are recorded of Mrs. Laura M. Wright, who spent fifty-three years of active missionary service among the Seneca tribe of American Indians; of Rev. William Taylor, Edinburgh, formerly editor of The British Messenger; of Mr. John Maynard, of the Baptist Congo Mission; of Rev. H. Townsend, one of the Church Missionary Society's veterans, and founder of the Yoruba Mission; of the Earl of Chichester, the venerable President of the Church Missionary Society; and of Mr. Brown, Hon. Sec. of the Twickenham Y.M.C.A.

Surrey Chapel.—The seventh anniversary of the appointment of Rev. B. Senior, to the pastorate of "Old Surrey," was lately held. There was a numerous attendance. Mr. Senior said that during the last seven years some 550 members had been received into Church fellowship. Every week as many as twenty meetings were held in connection with the work of the church, which extends over a large area. In reference to the project of a new Surrey Chapel, the site of which had been secured in the Blackfriars-road, he said that £4,600 had been obtained in cash and promises; and it was intended to hold a meeting next month at Exeter Hall in support of the scheme. The cost of the new edifice, including purchase of freehold, &c., would amount to between £10,000 and £12,000.

"Hard Times in East London."—In a little book just published under this title, Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, minister of Harley-street Chapel, Bow, gives a picture that is simply appalling. It makes the heart bleed to think of the misery of these poor people—foodless, fireless, in such bitter weather as we have been passing through. Amongst this mass of poverty Mr. Hurndall has constantly at work six missionaries. In one case we read of a man and his children who had been without food three days out of five. Another case is mentioned in which a mother sold her petticoat for five farthings to buy bread for the children. These are stray samples of the work which Mr. Hurndall and his missionaries are accomplishing, and if those who can help will try to realise what the lives of the people amongst whom he labours must be, the work will not flag for want of funds. His address is

SOLDIERS IN IRELAND.

NO provision is made by the authorities for the British soldiers who from time to time pass through Dublin "on furlough," the result being that they are cast upon the streets, and, unable, as a rule, to find respectable shelter. The Soldiers' Institute for some time, to a limited extent, has supplied their need, and is still doing so; but the demand for sleeping room has been found so much greater than could be supplied them an extra "wing" to the premises was decided upon, to include also a lecture hall. The building was commenced last autumn. As far as the funds collected would allow the work has progressed, and the shell of the building has been erected; it now remains, however, in an unfinished and useless condition, as the funds are exhausted, and we cannot proceed further without money. Nearly £1000 is required to complete this new wing, and to start it in working order, after which it will be nearly self-supporting, as the soldiers gladly pay 6d. a night for their beds.

Great inconvenience is occasioned by the unfinished condition of the building, and the work of the Home is much hindered in consequence. Numbers of soldiers are continually turned away from our doors for want of room. We earnestly hope that soon the necessary funds may be forthcoming to complete the building. We are truly thankful that this "Home" has proved such a boon to the soldiers of this town and country, and has been so fully appreciated by them during the few years it has been established. Specially do we rejoice to know that it has been the spiritual "birthplace" of not a few who have come under its roof, and that many who have from time to time attended the meetings and classes have received blessing in their souls from God.

EVANGELISTS FOR CEYLON.

DEAR SIR,—Many Christians in this island have been led to feel the need of special effort being made, and much desire that evangelistic services should be held throughout the country on undenominational lines. We have many nominal Christians in the land, and there are white as well as black heathen out here—about 2,400,000 of them. So there is work to be done. This letter is written in the hope that some brethren or sisters, filled with faith and the Holy Ghost, may be led, under God's guidance, to come out and take up this work for Christ's sake.

There are a few Christians here, thank God, ready to hold out the right hand of fellowship to any coming in Christ's name, and help in whatever way they can. But we cannot promise to pay expenses, &c., from England. The whole island has been passing through a terrible depression of late years, and under the circumstances raising subscriptions would be out of the question. As Colombo is a port of call for most steamers going or returning from Calcutta, China, &c., anyone going or coming from these countries might easily arrange with the agents of the steamer to break the journey and go on by the following boat, occupying the time here on the Master's service. In the towns English-speaking congregations could be procured, and interpretors are to be had whenever needed.

As we are unable to offer anyone money to defray expenses, some fear that on this account the much-needed services cannot be held, but, may be, the Lord will touch someone's heart. In case any may wish for further information, I enclose you my card, with address, to give to any one requiring it.—Yours faithfully,

A CEYLON COFFEE PLANTER.

Scripture Union portions for the ensuing week.—March 28, Psa. xcvi. 1—13; March 29, xcvii. 1—12 March 30, xcviii. 1—9; March 31, xcix. 1—9; Apri 1, c. 1—5; April 2, John xi. 1—16; April 3, xi. 17—31.

Correction.—Two unfortunate printers' errors in the Note in our last issue with respect to "Anxiou Thought" seriously altered the sense. In quoting from Rev. John Milne, of Perth, the expression, "I really know no care" was made to read, "I really know no ease," a very different thing. In an earlier part of the same note, "We wonder how large a proportion of the Christian Church read this with incredulity," wa transmogrified into, "No wonder so large a proportion," &c.

The Book World.

'Twixt Promise and Vow; and other Stories. By Ruth Elliott. Woolmer. These touching stories from a gifted pen and heart, read like transcripts from real, every-day life. Short as they are, they are weighty with solemn truths, and full of sweet, tender scenes.

The Spiritual Life. 1s. Bemrose & Sons. A collection of papers and speeches read and delivered at the Church Congress, held at Portsmouth, in October last. Many valuable suggestions on the trials, difficulties, and aids, incident to the life of faith, are given by such writers as Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Dr. Weldon, and others.

Siam and the Siamese, as described by American missionaries. T. Woolmer. A book most interesting in its details, and graphic in its descriptions. Many of those who write are ladies, and, as one after another takes her turn at mission work reporting, our desire to see this wonderful people and land greatly increases. The map and many plates add to the attractiveness and value of a pleasant missionary record.

Saving Faith. Ninth edition. By James Morison, D.D. 1s. 6d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. This small book, of 150 pages, first issued in 1842, proves its worth by its vitality and self-multiplication. On the precious words "faith," "believe," &c., Dr. Morison dilates with the precision of a ripe classic scholar, and the profundity of a spiritual Christian. While his arguing is close, and his thoughts clear, his language is very simple, and his occasional illustrations strictly illustrative.

Scientific Sophisms. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Wainwright is a bold man, but his boldness springs from belief in the righteousness of his cause, not from rashness. He enters the lists with a firm seat, a clear eye, and a strong hand to fight against those knights of science who have done so much to unsettle the minds of thinking men in our day. He shows a wide acquaintance with current theories concerning apes, atoms, and men, and exposes with great skill the fallacies in these theories. His chapters on evolution and protoplasm are particularly happy. In this book he renders a service which makes the lover of truth his debtor.

Sunrise on the Soul. A Series of Suggestions. By Hugh Smith Carpenter. 5s. Funk & Wagnalls. Readers of a speculative turn of mind will find much to interest them in this volume. They will not agree with everything in it, but they will be greatly helped by its new way of looking at old truths, and the light it throws on dark problems. Its tone is generally reverential. Its aim is to lead those for whom "the copy-books of standards, creeds, and systems" have lost their meaning back to what the Holy Ghost teaches in nature and in life. It advocates the truth that disciples of Christ will best learn by living with the Master in daily communion; and it abounds in thoughts of great beauty and keen insight.

Christianity, Science, and Infidelity. By Rev. W. Hillier, Mus. Doc. 2s. Nisbet & Co. This volume consists of a series of letters which formerly appeared in a local journal at the time of the election of Mr. Bradlaugh as M.P. for Nottingham. They cover much of the ground traversed by infidel arguments against the truth, and though not intended for critical readers, but rather for popular use, will be found to contain much sound, cogent reasoning, pleasantly and strikingly put. The book is specially adapted for working men, both young and old. An introduction is furnished by Mr. Henry Varley, and a long array of commendatory notices from Mr. Spurgeon and other well-known men, is appended.

The Trinity of Evil. By Rev. Canon Wilberforce, M.A. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The publication of this volume is timely, and its circulation cannot be too widely promoted. Infidelity, Impurity, and Intemperance are the three evil spirits which the Canon deals with, and that in terms at once strong, manly, and vigorous. If we could place a copy in the hands of every reader capable of following the author's lucid exposition of his themes, we would gladly do so; such teaching is needed in every social sphere in these days. Written from the emphatically Christian standpoint, the book strikes at the root of political and social evils that many Christian men and women are sadly slow to rebuke and withstand. Long may the writer be spared to lift up his clarion voice and powerful pen in the cause of righteousness and truth as he has done in these sparkling and inspiriting pages.

The Acts of the Church, 1531—1885. The Church of England her own Reformer, as testified by the Records of her own Convocations. By James Wayland Joyce, M.A., Rector of Burford, Salop, and Prebendary of Hereford. J. Whitaker. This handsome volume will chiefly interest English Churchmen, and will only satisfy Churchmen of a High Anglican type. Most useful are the documents placed in sequence by the learned compiler, and well worth the attention of Christian statesmen in the present state of public opinion. Dr. Joyce's sympathies are easily gathered from his remarks, on "Clerical Lawbreaking," the term "Protestant," and the "Public Worship Regulation Act." That the English Church has often aided in self-reformation may be true enough, but to say she has always originated such reforms is a sweeping statement, and needs more evidence than is here produced.

Body and Soul: A Practical View of the Relations of Physical and Spiritual Life. By Rev. Mercer Davies. 6d. Elliot Stock. An important lesson in morals, apart from its worth as a mentor in physical and spiritual life. The theory of the author may be summed up thus: Keep a clear conscience, and take care of your brain.

The Expositor for April will contain a very elaborate criticism and commentary by Canon Driver, of Oxford, of the two rival Hebrew versions of the New Testament, issued by the Bible Society and the Trinitarian Bible Society respectively. The former, it is well known, is by Dr Delitzsch; the latter is by Mr. Salkinson—revised and completed by Dr. Ginsburg.

John Styles among the Freethinkers By E. L. D 12s. per 100. Religious Tract Society. A 48-page tract, written in a conversational and attractive style. It embodies much solid, clever argument, dressed in homely guise, against "the negation of God" known under the various names of freethought, agnosticism, infidelity, &c. Very suitable for distribution.

Italy.—There has lately appeared in Naples, under the title The Pearl of Days, an illustrated Italian journal in favour of the sanctification of the Lord's Day.

Auckland, N.Z.—In the end of January last the foundation stone of the new building for the Y.M.C.A. of this place was laid by Bishop Barry, amid much rejoicing.

Rotherhithe.—Dear Sir,—We heartily thank those who have sent us help for our poverty-stricken dock labourers. The docks are not likely to have many ships in them for another month, so we desire to continue free meat teas for that period.

Gratefully yours, S. Trevor Francis.

Services for Germans.—Under the presidency of Count Bismarck-Bohlen, an association has just been formed to organise Protestant religious services at the different watering-places or baths not already provided with such. The committee has more especially in view stations in the South of France, Italy, Austria, as also in Germany and German-speaking Switzerland. It is thus proposed to do for Germans what has long been done for English in these placas.—Journal Religieux.

Labour Aid Society.—It is proposed by the Labour Aid Society to purchase sewing machines, and to let seamstresses have them in their own houses at 6d. per week. In three years the machine will become their own property. This will give the workers from 1d. to 2d. more for trousers making, and 2d. to 3d. more per dozen for shirts, and will add about 4s. a week to their income. About £1000 is required, and help will be received by Rev. James Munro, 16, Victoria-street, King Edward-road, E.

Paris City Mission.—The Comité Auxiliaire d'Evangélisation de Paris (Paris City Mission) lately held its fifth annual meeting. The report is full of most interesting and encouraging facts. Five years ago the Mission started with six agents; for a while it was able to employ thirteen; for want of sufficient resources it has come back to six, with a yearly expenditure of 18,000 francs. One of the missionaries is placed under the direction of reformed pastors, one of a Baptist, one of Mr. McAll, another of Miss de Broen. Mr. Lockie, Secretary of the Mission, deals more especially with his English countrymen.—The Record.

It has been computed that every eighth verse in the Bible is related to the Second Coming of Christ. If this be so, how is it that so little interest is given to this question? How can any Christian bring himself to say it is a subject that does not interest him? It is a blessed thing to have a living interest in his first coming, and the work He wrought for us then, and to have a living interest in his sitting at the right hand of God, where He now lives to make intercession for us; but how shall we reconcile such an interest in Him and the statement that we can find no interest in the study of his Second Coming, when He is to complete his redemption work and bring all his people into his glory?—Words and Weapons.

Y.M.C.A., Bath.—Mr. H. Varley has been conducting Gospel services in various chapels in Bath, and many have been brought to the Lord. He also gave Bible-readings in the Assembly Rooms, to large audiences, on the "Lord's Second Coming," with much profit. We are expecting these services will be greatly blessed to our Association. At our Bible-class, on Sunday afternoons, the attendance has doubled. It is in contemplation to commence a "Y.M.C.A. Open-air Mission" for the summer season, and I should be glad if any of your readers could present us with a tricyle for village tract distribution, &c. Our rooms here are unsuitable for aggressive work. We are waiting upon the Lord to stir someone up to place a suitable building at our disposal. J. A. Stooke, Gen. Sec.
Quiet-street, Bath.

Requests for Prayer.

A WIDOWED mother asks the prayers of God's people for a son who is gone astray.——For a son, that grace may be given him to overcome the evil habit of intemperance.——For a ten-days' mission at Cainscross, near Stroud, from March 26 to April 6, to be conducted by Rev. J. Shaw, of Chelsea.——For a fifteen-days' mission at Exeter, to be conducted by Mr. S. Bryant of the Evangelisation Society, commencing March 21.——That God may guide and bless the efforts to get the sale of intoxicating liquors stopped in England during the whole of Sunday; and that our legislators may be led to pass Mr. Stevenson's Bill for this object during the present session of Parliament.

Mr. W. J. Gladwin, Girgaum, Bombay, India, would be glad to receive a copy of The Christian weekly from any reader.

Miss Whitley, Barrow House, Long Ditton, Surrey, will be glad to forward her copy of The Christian to any Christian friend living in a remote place, who would gather the neighbours weekly and read to them its accounts of work at home and abroad.

Grocers' Licences.—Miss V. M. Skinner, of Bath, has written a "friendly letter" addressed to grocers, in which she strongly refers to the evils caused in many households by the grocers' licence.

House of Rest, Weston-super-Mare.—In the notice of this Institution, in last week's issue, it was stated that during the past year eight to nine ladies had been received. It should have been eighty-nine.

The Dark Continent.—On March 20, from fifteen to twenty missionaries were to sail from New York to Africa, to reinforce Bishop William Taylor's consecrated host in that field on the self-supporting plan.

A "Drunkery" shut up.—Sir,—We can confirm the statements of A. F. R. respecting "London Drunkeries," so far as our acquaintance with them goes, i.e., as haunts for the propagation of Atheism and Secularism. The agents of the Christian Evidence Society were instrumental in shutting one up last year, and in preventing the opening of another.—Yours faithfully,

Our Policemen.—A good work is being done among this class of our community, in connection with the Christian Policemen's Association, of which the monthly organ is On and Off Duty (1d. Marshall, Brothers, 3, Amen-corner, E.C.). There are many branches in different parts of the country, and in Scotland, and Ireland. Friends who desire to extend the work should procure and circulate copies of On and Off Duty, which gives interesting reports and contains much matter that will be generally instructive to our blue-coated protectors.

Homes for Working Girls in London.—The great advantages conferred upon young workwomen by the establishment of these Homes, of which there are now seven in various parts of London, are well known to our readers. The very precarious character of the employment in which thousands of young girls and women are engaged makes their lot one of extreme hardship and difficulty; it is quite a common occurrence for a number to be discharged at a moment's notice, and without any fault on their part. When it is remembered that the majority, even at the best of times, earn but a subsistence, many so little that the only meals they can afford are breakfast and tea, the necessity for stretching out a helping hand to them is obvious enough. Those who are inmates of these Homes are, indeed, fortunate, for here, where everything is bright and cheerful, there is also an atmosphere of love. In the seven Homes already opened, there is accommodation for 345 inmates, and full board is provided at 4s. 6d. per week. The Hon. Director is Mr. John Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 28.—DEUT. XI.

2.—And know ye this day . . . the chastisement of the Lord.—"The word 'chastisement' is evidently the accusative governed by the verb at the beginning of the verse. The colon placed after 'day' should therefore be removed, and the words between the verb and its accusative placed in a parenthesis. The 'chastisement' consisted in the many mighty acts, both of punishment and of mercy, through which God had guided them from Egypt to the borders of the promised land."—Sp. Com. The word rendered "chastisement" is properly "discipline," and combines the thought of instruction with correction; it is almost equivalent in its scope to our word "education." In the Book of Proverbs, where it occurs thirty times, it is rendered twenty-four times "instruction," and only six times "correction" or "chastening."

"The accusatives which follow, show what we are to understand by 'the chastisement of the Lord,' viz., the mighty acts of the Lord to Egypt and to Israel in the desert. The object of them all was to educate Israel in the fear and love of God."—Keil.

6.—What He did unto Dathan and Abiram.—"Here Moses only mentions Dathan and Abiram, the followers of Korah, and not Korah himself, probably from regard to his sons, who were not swallowed up along with their father (Num. xxvi. 11), but had lived to perpetuate the family of Korah."—Keil.

10.—Wateredst it with thy foot.—An allusion to the tread-wheels working sets of pumps, which are used to this day in Egypt.

12.—A land which the Lord careth for (margin, R.V., seeketh after).—A land which was to be the dwelling-place of the Son of God on earth, and where the great battle was to be fought, and the victory won over the prince of this world, could not but be a place upon which the eyes of the Lord should be "always upon it."

29.—The blessing upon Mount Gerizim.—"It was probably selected as the hill of benediction because it was the southernmost of the two; the south being the region, according to Hebrew ideas, of light, and so of life and blessing."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, MARCH 29.—DEUT. XII.

4.—Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God.—Taken in connection with the two preceding verses, this seems to mean that not only were they to "overthrow their altars," &c., but they were not to imitate the heathen custom of building altars wherever they chose, even to the true God. There was to be but one place of worship, and one altar in Israel. Apostate Christendom, having introduced the so-called "altar" into Christian worship, borrowed from Judaism, has further borrowed from heathenism the multiplication of such "altars" wherever there are "places of worship." The Jew knew but of one altar, and was not allowed to erect another. The Christian has but one likewise (Heb. xiii. 10).

14.—In the place which the Lord shall choose.—This does not refer necessarily to Jerusalem, or to Solomon's Temple therein, but to the different places where at different times God chose "to put his name there." Shiloh was at first chosen, and is spoken of in Jer. vii. 12 as the place "where I set my name at the first," but the Lord adds, "See what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel." Next came Mount Zion, whither David brought up the ark, whilst the tabernacle remained at Gibeon (1 Chron. xvi. 39). Lastly, Mount Moriah, the site of Solomon's Temple, became the chosen spot, and remained such until He came who is both Temple (John ii. 21), Altar (Heb. xiii. 10), Sacrifice (Eph. v. 2), and Priest (Heb. viii. 1) in his most blessed person and work fulfilling all.

18.—Thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God in all that thou puttest thy hand unto.—So little was the religion of Jehovah intended to be one of ascetic gloom or one of doubts and fears. The New Testament counterpart is given in Phil. iv. 4, "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice."

30.—How did these nations serve their gods?—"The whole heathen world was animated with the conviction that to neglect the gods of a land would be sure to bring misfortune (see 2 Kings xvii. 26)."—Keil.

TUESDAY, MARCH 30.—DEUT. XIII.

"Warnings against the authors and abettors of false modes and forms of worship. Such tempters are not to be spared, even though (1—5) their teaching be confirmed by miracles; or (6—12) they be nearly allied by kindred or friendships; or (12—19) be supported in their apostasy by a whole city."—Sp. Com.

5.—He hath spoken to turn you away from the Lord your God.—This is rendered by R.V., "He hath spoken rebellion against the Lord your God." This verse is appealed to by Roman Catholics as justifying the capital punishment of heretics; but first of all, if heretics are to be so treated, it is not those who turn to the Word of God, but those that "turn away from" it, who are the heretics. But heretics should not be so treated, for it is not only contrary to the whole spirit of the Gospel (see Luke ix. 55), but "such obligation attached to the Jewish magistrate, because he had to administer the law of a theocracy. To bring in the worship of another god was not merely to lead God's people into error, it was to seduce them from their loyalty to their rightful prince and ruler. It was, in a word, high treason, and had to be punished accordingly."—Sp. Com.

13.—Certain men, the children of Belial.—In thirteen out of sixteen other places where this word "Belial" occurs in the Old Testament, it is rendered as a proper name in A.V., and St. Paul's use of it (2 Cor. vi. 15) as an equivalent for Satan seems to confirm the correctness of this. If so it is an important testimony to the truth, more clearly revealed in the New Testament, of Satan being the great source of evil, "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2). The LXX. and most ancient versions render it by the word "wicked," which may be parallel to our Lord's use of "the wicked one" for Satan. Modern critics generally explain it to mean "worthlessness," and reject the personal reference. R V. (it is to be regretted) adopts this view.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31.—DEUT. XIV.

1.—Ye are the children of the Lord your God.—This is a near approach to the New Testament privilege of "adoption," but it differs from it in being not personal but national (see Rom. ix. 4: "to whom pertaineth the adoption"), and as such resting upon natural birth, not upon the new birth as taught in the New Testament, "as many as received Him (Christ), to them gave He power to become the sons of God . . . who were born, not of blood . . . but of God" (John i. 12, 13). "The words, 'ye are the children of the Lord your God,' which introduce this chapter, suggest the principle which underlies its precepts. It was unbeseeming their dignity and privileges to disfigure themselves in mourning (1, 2) as the heathen 'which have no hope,' or to defile themselves by eating any abominable thing (3—22); on the contrary, they were to honour God, and act worthily of their special relationship to Him by holy meals at the sanctuary—meals associated with charity to the needy" (23—29).—Sp. Com.

3.—Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing.—The directions which follow as to meats clean and unclean are, with very few and unimportant variations, the same as those already given in Lev. xi.

28.—At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase.—"This regulation as to the time was founded upon the observance of the Sabbatical year, as we may see (xv. 1), where the seventh year is no other than the Sabbatical year. Twice, therefore, within the period of a Sabbatical year, namely, in the third and sixth years, the tithe set apart for a sacrificial meal was not to be eaten at the sanctuary, but to be used in the different towns of the land in providing festal meals for those who had no possessions, viz., the Levites, strangers, widows, and orphans."—Keil.

THURSDAY, APRIL 1.—DEUT. XV.

1.—Thou shalt make a release.—"The year of release is, no doubt, identical with the Sabbatical year (Exod. xxiii. 10; Lev. xxv. 2); the word 'release' of this passage being, indeed, fundamentally the same word as is used in reference to the land (Exod. xxiii. 11). Not only is the land to have its 'release' or 'rest' for the year, but the debt also. The obvious reference of this passage to that of Exodus seems to render it most probable, as some of the best German commentators hold, in spite of a consensus of Jewish authorities to the contrary, that the release in question must have been for the year—not total and final. As the land was during this year to keep Sabbath, so the debt was to stand over. It seems further clear that the release had reference only to loans (see especially ver. 2), and to loans lent because of poverty (vers. 4 and 7). Apparently, therefore, a debt contracted by purchase of goods would not come under this law."—Sp. Com.

6.—Thou shalt lend unto many nations.—It is interesting to observe how even in the present days of Israel's dispersion this promise of influence or rule ("reign") over the nations has been fulfilled. The immense growth of this monetary influence within the last century is one of the many signs of returning blessing to Israel.

9.—Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart.—In the Hebrew, "thought" is literally "word," and "wicked" is "Belial," which belongs grammatically to "word," so that it is properly "that there be not a word of Belial in thy heart" (comp. Matt. xvi. 23; Acts v. 3).

FRIDAY, APRIL 2.—DEUT. XVI.

"The cardinal point on which the whole of the prescriptions here before us (as to the three great Jewish festivals) turn, is evidently the same as has been so often insisted upon in the previous chapters, viz., the concentration of the religious services of the people round one common sanctuary. The prohibition against observing these great feasts (Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles), the three annual epochs in the sacred year of the Jew, at home and in private, is reiterated in a variety of words no less than six times in the first sixteen verses of this chapter (2, 6, 7, 11, 15, 16)."—Sp. Com.

9.—Begin to number the seven weeks from such time as thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn.—The Hebrew is literally "from the beginning of the sickle in the standing corn," or in other words the presentation of the sheaf of first fruits (Lev. xxiii. 14, 15) of the new harvest before God on the sixteenth of Nisan, the day on which Christ was raised from the dead, "the first fruits of them that slept." This link between Passover and Pentecost is important. We shall never arrive at true Pentecost experience, if we do not "begin to number," or base our expectation of it from the Lord's resurrection. The connection (seven by seven weeks) is one of perfect and Divine arrangement. The Holy Spirit is not given independently, but as "the Spirit of Christ," which "if any man have not" "he is none of his."

21.—Thou shalt not plant thee a grove of any trees.—This is rendered by R.V., "an Asherah of any kind of tree," the word "asherah" being the Hebrew word used. It means an image of Astarte or Ashteroth, the Phenician goddess. The idol consisted of a wooden column, and was generally found by the altars of Baal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3.—DEUT. XVII.

4.—Inquired diligently, and, behold, it be true.—When the Jews took up stones to stone Jesus (John viii. 59, x. 31), and afterwards when Stephen was stoned (Acts vii. 59), they no doubt thought that they were justified by this passage in doing so; but in both cases there lacked, what is here enjoined, a diligent inquiry into the matter, to know if it were true.

8.—If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, &c.—Recourse was to be had under these circumstances "to the priests, the Levites, and unto the judge;" but "this superior court was not a court of appeal; for it did not adjudicate after the local court had already given a verdict, but in cases in which the latter would not trust itself to give a verdict at all."—Oehler.

14.—I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me.—The desire for a king which afterwards manifested itself (1 Sam. viii. 5) is here dealt with by anticipation, and provided for without its being approved of. The very spirit of conformity to the world, to which the desire is here traced, is that which showed itself in the appeal of Israel to Samuel, "make us a king to judge us like all the nations."

17.—Neither shall he multiply wives to himself.—Disobedience to this command brought evil on Solomon's later days, and eventually led, through the idolatry which his wives introduced, to the breaking up of the kingdom into two parts (1 Kings xi. 31).

18.—He shall write him a copy of this law in a book . . . and he shall read therein all the days of his life . . . that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren.—Mark the contrast between God's ideal king and the wilful king (Dan. xi. 3), who "shall exalt himself and magnify himself." St. Paul's reference to him as "the lawless one" (2 Thess. ii. 8, R.V.) possibly refers to his rejection of God's law (i.e., his written Word), in the sense above given.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

EAST-END MISSION WORK.

TO make provision for continuing the Evangelistic work so successfully carried on by the Rev. Thomas Jackson during the past eighteen months, at the Clapton Park Theatre, the Mission-hall (known as the Clapton Park Tabernacle) has been purchased, and is being enlarged at a total cost of £2500. The building will provide sittings for 550 persons, and the school-room will accommodate 350 scholars. There will also be four rooms for caretaker, and needy servants' free registry office; six rooms for the use of mothers' meetings; working men's free library and reading room; free night school for adults, Band of Hope, Gospel Temperance, benevolent and tract societies, Good Samaritan union, soup kitchen, &c. The opening services will (God willing) be held on April 21. Many men and women who have been led to Christ at the Theatre services are giving out of their small earnings to the building fund, and in order to carry on, unfettered by any debt, our work among the poor, the perishing, and unsaved, we desire to raise the whole amount by Good Friday. Will friends, who are interested in Gospel work among the masses, kindly help us.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
BRONCHO-PHTHISIS.—CASE of a YOUNG LADY at OLDHAM.

In preparing these memoranda for publication (Dec. 5), I note that it is one year ago to the day that I received a statement of Miss Ada J. Hanson's case and a letter from her father, Mr. J. Hanson, of Beever-street, Oldham.

She had taken a severe cold at the preceding Christmas, and since then had had a constant troublesome cough, with much hoarseness; green expectoration with a little blood; pains in the back, chest, and side; palpitation; and this was soon followed by general loss of flesh, nervous twitchings, and sleeplessnes.

I advised her by letter. In a month her father reported her somewhat better. She continued the treatment for some months.

I have just received a letter from which the following is an extract:—I am happy to say that my daughter's health is quite restored. She is married now, and fully able to attend to her domestic duties."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge. Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"A clever little story, showing how for one week, instead of meeting together for prayer for certain objects each evening, the members of a church had a week of practice. At the expiration of this time they met, and the lot fell upon one, a deacon, to give his experience. It was not the best of records, as he said himself; but it was very instructive withal. LORD MOUNT TEMPLE.

THE subject of our present portrait and sketch fills a distinctive place in the Christian Church, and, if we may judge by the results of his quiet, unostentatious work, it is a very important place. Many of us are too apt to copy others in our work, forgetting that the true service of each lies in doing that which God has fitted him and no one else to do, and that there is need of the special differences of each, as well as the utmost energy of all. Canon Westcott has noticed somewhere that in judging of a vine-tree we cannot compare the relative value of the leaves, the tendrils, and the flowers. The vine is healthy and vigorous and fruitful because all are there. And so it is with the followers of Christ, who constitute his Body; all are different manifestations of the Lord, and all have their distinctive characteristics.

Those who have come near to Lord Mount Temple have always been impressed with two things. First, with the peculiar spirit of charity which he breathes—a spirit so gentle and kindly that it is continually uniting discordant elements into friendly bonds, and producing thereby a union of strength far greater than the parts could have separately attained. Secondly, with the generosity which is continually flowing from him, a generosity not only of money, but of interest, work and affection. One who knew him well said, "I never wanted anything from him but he immediately gave it to me with more added to it." We have here chiefly to do with his directly spiritual influence, but some record of his public life will not be out of place.

He was born at Brockett (one of Earl Cowper's country houses) in 1811. He began public life in the Household Brigade, but left the Blues to become Private Secretary to his uncle, Viscount Melbourne, then Prime Minister. He was elected Member of Parliament for Hertford in 1835, and represented, first that borough, and afterwards South Hampshire, till he was raised to the Peerage in 1880. He succeeded to the estate of Broadlands at the death of his mother, Lady Palmerston, in 1869. His first official post was that of lay Lord of the Admiralty. He was appointed First Commissioner of Works in 1860, and it is to him—then Mr. William Cowper—that we owe the laying-out of our parks with flower-beds and shrubs. He and Mrs. Cowper went to Paris to learn the French methods of planting, and ever since that time Victoria Park at the East-end, and Hyde and Regent's and the Green Parks at the West-end, have blossomed out in their season for the benefit of the thousands who have no other gardens to call their own. Mr. Cowper arranged that the plants should be distributed to the poor at the end of the season. It was to his influence at this time that we chiefly owe the preservation to the country of the New Forest.

(From Photograph by Mr. Samuel A. Walker, 230, Regent-street, W.)

He has been consistently a Broad Churchman, in the best sense of the term, at the same time engaging heartily in evangelistic work. Many will remember him during Mr. Moody's visits as an earnest helper, and he has always been ready for all Gospel work. The first annual meeting of the Church Army, which has since become so important a movement, was held at his house, and he has often preached at the Victoria Theatre, and at many other places. He was, with his brother-in-law, Lord Shaftesbury, one of the pioneers in the Ragged-school movement, and as early as 1850 he had himself established a ragged-school in Whitechapel. He became a total abstainer a few years ago, and his blue ribbon was, we believe, the first seen in the House of Commons, and afterwards in the House of Lords.

As President of the Board of Health he has done a great deal of important sanitary work. He has been foremost in the cause of animals, starting the "Band of Mercy" in Hampshire, and repeatedly having horse shows and donkey shows at Broadlands. He has also been a leading opponent of vivisection.

We have only space to touch on a few of his Parliamentary measures. His services in the matter of the Criminal Law Amendment are too well known to need comment. He has worked hard for poor, unhappy girls, and has heartily aided his friend, Mrs. Josephine Butler, in her work. In 1845 he proposed a Bill for enabling vestries and local authorities to acquire land for the purpose of letting it out to labourers in allotments. The measure was opposed by Mr.

Roebuck, Mr. Bright, Mr. Milner Gibson, and others who represented the "political economy" ideas of the day, but was carried through the House of Commons by the help of Sir James Graham and Sir Robert Peel. It, however, shared the fate of many private members' Bills, and did not get through the House of Lords. It was in principle the precursor of Mr. Jesse Collings's Act of last year. In 1846 Mr. Cowper was in office, and could not therefore again deal with the subject.

Another measure of his, the need of which has been since taught us, was a Bill enabling bishops to license laymen to preach in churches.

Another was a Parochial Councils Bill, well fought with the aid of Mr. Thomas Hughes, but defeated by the High Churchmen under the leadership of Mr. Beresford Hope. We may mention that Lord Mount Temple is a strong advocate for Church reform, but has been steadily opposed to Disestablishment. His name will be always associated with the liberty of conscience which he gained for Nonconformists by the so-called "Cowper-Temple clause," which, while dispensing with the obligatory teaching of the Church Catechism, emphasised the reading and teaching of the Bible in schools, issue being taken for or against the Bible instead of for or against formularies.

We must not close our sketch without reference to the eight Broadlands Conferences, which have been the germ from which many blessed results have sprung. It was a beautiful thought to open one of the finest of our historical country seats for the reception of a number of Christians who should meet simply for a few days' prayer and conference on the subject of holiness. The rule as to admission was a simple one—that "No" was to be said to none. The nobleman and the labourer received exactly the same gracious welcome from host and hostess. The voices of High, Low, and Broad Churchmen, and of many shades of Nonconformists, rose together to heaven from under the waving branches of the beech-trees. The spirit of love and grace pervaded all. In the intervals of speaking and singing the flowing river or the wood-pigeons made their voices heard with a new significance. Those present could not get over the surprise that such happiness could be tasted on earth. The power of the Holy Spirit was most markedly present, and many date a fresh spring from those meetings.

Among those present were the Bishops of Ripon (Boyd Carpenter) and Truro (Wilkinson), Lord Radstock, Canon Wilberforce, Pastor Monod (his first appearance in England), Rev. Andrew Jukes, Miss de Broen, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Gurney, Mr. Samuel Morley, Rev. Evan Hopkins, Rev. W. and Mrs. Boardman, Rev. E. W. Moore, Mr. Charrington, Canon Body, Mr. T. A. Denny, Dr. George MacDonald, Miss Smiley, Mr. J. W. Farquhar, Mrs. Amanda Smith (the coloured evangelist), Prof. Rendel Harris, Mr. Stanley P. Smith, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, &c. Everything seemed to unite in producing the effect desired. The beauty of the mansion, with its ancestral works of art, the perfection of the hospitality, and the willingness of the servants—all alike helped. But nothing helped more than the sweet and earnest prayers which Lord Mount Temple continually engaged in, and the Christlike spirit of generous love which has left its fragrance to this day in many grateful hearts.

At Coblenz, Prussia, 42 Roman Catholics were led to receive the Gospel last year, through the efforts of a devoted evangelical pastor.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—5.

ORAN.

A VERY marked difference is perceptible upon exchanging Morocco for Algeria. The former maintains its primitive simplicity, but fifty years of French rule have largely destroyed this in the latter. On reaching Oran by steamer from Tangier, we found ourselves amongst people belonging, as it were, to different worlds, European and Arab being strangely intermingled. Civilisation has made great strides here, and paved streets, terraces, tramcars and trains, have completely changed its character, so that the Arabs, as if feeling it no longer belonged to them, have formed themselves into a colony on the outskirts of the town.

They are an exceedingly fine race of men, and being, by their religion, forbidden the use of intoxicants, they are an abstemious and hardy people. But, alas! the example they receive from their "Christian" conquerors is of an evil type, and consequently, as a native declared to a local missionary, "For an Arab to become a Christian, is to become more vicious than he was before!" Missionary effort, therefore, meets with less opposition in uncivilised Morocco than in Algeria, where Christianity has a name to live, but is dead.

Pastor Eldin, who was for many years a missionary in Jamaica, ministers to the French Protestants in Oran, and in the surrounding villages. He receives occasional help from M. G. Mercadier, of the Kabyle and Berber Mission, who is studying Arabic prior to settling in the interior, meanwhile embracing every opportunity of presenting the Gospel to the natives around him. M. Mercadier is anxious, also, in conjunction with the Spanish pastor, to secure a hall for evangelistic meetings to be held in French and Spanish at different hours on Sunday, and on alternate nights in the week. About £50 will suffice for rent, seats, gas, &c., in aid of which contributions may be sent to the office of The Christian.

Accompanied by this genial, and in every way promising young evangelist, we went to the ancient Moorish capital, about ninety miles inland. The journey was accomplished in a day, partly by rail, and partly by diligence. The former passes a salt lake some miles in length, and a village, where there is a colony of Vaudois, to whom the French pastor ministers, his place being sometimes taken by our good friend M. Mercadier. Leaving the railway for a seven hours' ride by diligence, the more interesting part of the journey begins. The road ascends from one valley among the mountains to another; the air is bracing, the view extensive and continually changing. It was a beautiful day, and many an object of interest was passed—now a drove of camels, then an arab encampment, with black camel-hair tents, the little Ishmaels of both sexes running after us for pennies like their brothers and sisters in other lands. The dignified non-working Arab men, and the laborious women are a familiar sight. A stately man of six feet and upwards may be seen walking with the air of a king behind a laden donkey, his wife following, bent double under a load of wood. As we neared Tlemcen we passed through olive groves hundreds of years old, the orange-trees having been left in the vales below.

At Tlemcen the Kabyle and Berber Mission is represented by Mr. F. J. Liley, late of the Congo Mission; and Mr. and Mrs. Cheeseman, who were, until recently, connected with the Salvation Army. In the latter we were pleased to recognise our old friend "Happy Eliza," of whom we had lost sight for some years. She is in delicate health, the result of too great strain in her early days of warfare. Mr. Liley has within the last six months visited all the villages within a radius of 20 miles, distributing Arabic tracts and Gospels. Already, the presence of these missionaries has its effect, for they are spoken of, in the street, as "the followers of Sidna Issa" (the Lord Jesus).

M. Mercadier had resided here for eighteen months before removing to Oran, and made many friends amongst the Arabs, by whom he was warmly welcomed as he met them during this short visit. That these people, with their somewhat rough and formidable exterior are amenable to loving and gentle dealing, has been abundantly exemplified.

Since leaving Oran we have received a letter from M. Mercadier, from which the following extracts are made:—

> Latterly I have had an interesting incident at the Village Nègre, in Oran. I was praying for some time to have an opportunity to speak about the Gospel with some Arabs. I could only distribute a few tracts and Gospels, and afterwards have a few words there. I have been able to go into a Tolba, a sort of school for the readers of the Koran, and the teacher has shown a degree of friendship for me, and allows me to read the Bible in Arabic amongst his pupils. I do this as far as my knowledge of Arabic will permit, and God will bless my efforts I feel sure. Another fact has astonished me; an Arab took me to his house to converse upon religious subjects, and introduced me to his wife, which is quite contrary to native custom.
>
> These marks of sympathy encourage me much, and increase my activity. I am soon going to make a study of the parties which exist amongst the Arabs in North Africa. I hope to be able to consult ethnographical works to this end, for the missionary meets with two sects—the Malebites, who have adopted the principles of Iman Malebi, and the Mozabites, who have received their ideas from Iman Mozab. All this is very interesting, and to study it will enable me to understand the Arabs better. Twenty-five natives have asked me for Bibles, and, thanks to the liberality of Mrs. Robertson, I have been able to supply them. I commence generally by giving a good book, and then if I see they appreciate it I give them others, and I believe that all the Bibles which I have presented are read. I have distributed 3000 copies of tracts, leaflets, Bibles, and Testaments in the last three months in my work amongst children and adults.
>
> I should very much like to have the hall of which I spoke to you. A work amongst soldiers and Europeans would be very useful in Oran. I have lately gained admittance to the military prison, and it is very touching how these poor young fellows ask me for stamps and paper to write to their parents and others. I also give them New Testaments to read, and help them as far as my means allow. I have also access to the hospital, and have opportunity to leave Bibles with those who ask me to visit them.

There are many Arabs round about Oran. I should be very glad to be able to distribute tracts amongst them. I do not mind the fatigue and difficulties, but the journeys are very expensive, which hampers me; if I could receive help for this I should be able two or three times a month to visit the tribes within two or three days' journey, and speak to them of Christ. The Arabs in the country seem more religious than those in the town, and I don't think that work amongst them would be in vain. I am still studying Arabic as steadily as possible.

You cannot be too careful to send qualified persons here, because of the difficulties of evangelisation, and the contempt which our French Government has for it. Difficulties at times rapidly increase, and the position would be intolerable to an unwise person. G. E. M.

THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH.—2.

By Rev. JAMES GALL.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST.

BUT there is another reason why the Apostolic Church was able to accomplish such magnificent results: and that was that they had received and retained the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which endued them with evangelistic power; whereas we, as a Church, have lost it.

When Christ gave the commission to his disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, He charged them to remain in Jerusalem until they were endued with POWER from on high. Had they gone forth without it, they would have been no more unsuccessful than some of ourselves. What, then, was this power with which the baptism of the Holy Ghost endued them?

It was not conversion, because the hundred and twenty were already converted; neither was it a higher spiritual life, because it was not in regard to that that the Old Testament dispensation was defective. Who, under the new dispensation, has had a closer walk with God than Enoch, or a greater faith than Abraham? The only thing in which it was defective was evangelistic power. There were thousands of whom the world was not worthy, and yet who never were the means of converting a single soul. Noah preached for a hundred and twenty years without appearing to have made a single convert; and even our Lord Himself left only a comparatively small number of real disciples behind Him; whereas, when Pentecost was fully come, Peter, by one address gathered into the kingdom a richer harvest of souls than had been gathered during the whole of our Lord's ministry. This was what our Lord meant when he said to his disciples: "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to the Father." He could not mean that they should do greater miracles; because the stilling of the tempest, and the walking on the sea, were never surpassed; but the conversion of souls in multitudes was what Christ never did, and what could not be done until He went to the Father.

It appears from many passages of Scripture[*] that this baptism was the common property, not of the Apostles only, but of the Church generally, and that those who had it not were the exceptions.[†] The speaking with tongues and other miraculous gifts were no part of the baptism, although, as a sign (1 Cor. xiv. 22), they sometimes accompanied it. Its only essential and characteristic element was EVANGELISTIC POWER, without which they could not fulfil their mission.

By means of this baptism Christianity became propagative, so that it began to spread over the whole world. Those who received it spoke "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," because "it was not they that spake, but the Spirit of their Father which spake in them." When He spake, need we wonder that He convinced the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment, "casting down imaginations, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

This indwelling of the Holy Ghost is altogether different from the indwelling that takes place at conversion. The Third Person of the Trinity is peculiar in this, that He has no independent action. He neither acts nor speaks of Himself (John xvi. 13). When He proceeds from the Father (John xv. 26), He performs the functions of the Father (John xiv. 10, 11), and is called the Spirit of the Father (Matt. x. 20). When He proceeds from the Son, He performs the functions of the Son (Rom. viii. 10), and is called the Spirit of the Son (Gal. iv. 6), or the Spirit of Christ (Rom. viii. 9.)

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," and, therefore, as there is a begetting flesh, and a begotten flesh, so there is a begetting Spirit and a begotten Spirit. The begetting Spirit is the Spirit of the Father; the begotten Spirit is the Spirit of the Son.

In applying the work of Redemption, both the Father and the Son act through the Spirit, but their work is not the same. The Father's work is evangelistic, and deals with sinners only. The work of the Son is pastoral (John x. 11) and is confined entirely to the saints. The Father chooses the sinner (Matt. xi. 25), reveals Christ to him (Matt. xvi. 17), draws him (John vi. 44), and finally gives him to the Son (John vi. 37). The work of the Son begins where the Father's ends. He receives the sinner from the Father (John vi. 37), dwells in him (John vi. 56), gives him eternal life (John xvii. 2), and will raise him up at the last day (John vi. 39).

The way of salvation was the very same under the Old Testament that it is under the New. Abraham and Nicodemus had as much need to be born again as we have now. It is the same begetting Spirit that regenerated them that regenerates us, and it is the same begotten Spirit of the Son that dwelt in them that dwells in us. The only difference is, that, before Pentecost, the Father dealt with sinners directly (as He does still), but after Pentecost He not only deals directly, but also by the instrumentality of a human agency, which He did not do before. At, and after Pentecost, the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father came down upon the Church, and, dwelling in it, went forth upon the world through them, and thus multiplied his conquests. Hence the amazing rapidity of the triumphs of the Apostolic Church during the first three centuries.

But it is a law of the kingdom that every gift that is not put to use will be withdrawn, and so when the Romish clergy usurped both the name and the functions of the CHURCH, and silenced the testimony of the laity, the Spirit was first grieved and then quenched. But as our Lord promised that when the Comforter was come He would abide with us for ever, we find that in all ages there have been individuals who have received this baptism, such as Whitfield and Wesley, Finney and Moody, besides many others, although as regards the Church in general it has been withdrawn. Hosea v. 15. What will it be when the whole Church receives it again? It will be like life from the dead.

Were the whole Church to be again organised and brought into the field; and were the whole Church again to receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost, the world might be converted during the present century.

AN EBONY SAINT.

BEING in the habit of visiting a little coterie of the Lord's dusky children, and also being engaged in a little work for the Southern Freedmen, I generally write down their quaint words of philosophy and faith, and have found my own much strengthened while sitting at their feet. Poor, sick, lonely, and often despised and neglected by men, they seem to me to walk far nearer to Christ than some of us white folks, and I often think of the time to come, when "the last shall be first."

I spent two hours recently with a white-haired saint, whose face shines with the "beauty of holiness," and whose soft eyes seem and are but the windows where the soul-light looks through. She is eighty-six years old, paralysed, and terribly poor, wanting many of the common comforts of life; but never a murmur is heard from her lips. I give her words:

"No, chile, I never had any o' them visions myself, tho' Ise served the Lord over sixty year, an' He never leaves me without the witness in my soul; but I know our folks does have 'em w'en they need 'em, ef they live close to Jesus all the time. 'God is his own interpreter, an' He will make it plain,' the hymn says; and He does. He makes it plain jess accordin' as we trust Him; all depen's on our faith. He comes to us thro' the things we believe in. It's a voice in the heart our folks means, w'en they tell about the voice speakin' to 'em.

"You know I tole you about my bein' converted, stannin' up by the dresser, puttin' up dishes, an' in my heart Jesus said very strong—'Go tell the folks what I've done for you,' an' w'en I went to meetin' that night, ole Satan went along, an' all the time he talked, too. The class-leader he axed us to speak for Jesus, an' the Voice almos' called out loud to me, an' said, 'Get up an' tell 'em! Get up an' tell 'em!' An' Satan he said, 'Sho! you got nothin' to tell! you'd look gran' with the folks all alookin' at you, an' you couldn't say nothin' atter you got up!' An', you know, I went home again, an' went two more times, an' Satan went, too. I tell you the ole adversary is very reg'lar at meetin's. He don' miss none of 'em! But the third time I jess give him a settlin' down that he didn't come back no mo' atter me! Oh! how the Holy Spirit did fill my soul an' my mouth, an' I never had no trouble to speak for Jesus sence.

"I've spoke for Him sixty years, an' I will till this 'stammering tongue lies silent in the grave.' It begins to stammer some now, you see, chile; I can't talk so fas', an' can't move my side much now, an' I'm gettin' nearer the kingdom every day, an' all these signs make glory in my soul. Yes! my daughter gone up to the kingdom sence I see you. They carried her here on a lounge to see me, as I couldn't be carried to her, an' she said she come to say good-bye, an' she'd tell 'em all up there I was on the way, an' mos' thare, too. Oh! I could jess shout out in the night w'en I wake up, to think of all my chillen, an' chillen's chillen, an' my ole man, an' father an' mother, an' sisters an' brothers, an' that ole class-leader, all waitin' an' watchin' every one that comes thro' the do', to see ef it's me! My! how that ole class-leader was persecuted down South! But w'en he was dyin', he pulled the pillow out from under his own head, an' said he was going up to stan' by the golden gate, 'till all his family an' all his class come. An' he's thare! An' I'll see him among the fust! He went up through the south gate, an' I'm goin' through the north gate. I'm only waiting for Jesus to say, 'Now come!'"—New York Observer.

TOO MANY FRIENDS.

IS it possible to have too many friends? Certainly not, if they are of the right sort, and if we gain and use their friendship rightly. And yet the wise man says, in the book of Proverbs (xviii. 24), "He that maketh many friends doeth it to his own destruction" (R. V.). What can that statement mean?

We are not to accept the friendship of every man who offers himself to us, but to choose our friends wisely. In dealing with men we can be cautious, and yet not suspicious. Selfish motives, sometimes even base and wicked ones, may lead a man to offer me his friendship. In any market it is foolish to buy everything that is offered to us, without carefully considering the value of the commodity and the price we are asked to pay. Even in regard to friends and friendship, things are not always what they seem.

In choosing our friends, we should always shun a flatterer. "Of all wild beasts, preserve me from a tyrant; and of all tame, from a flatterer." Bunyan's description of the flatterer is worthy of careful study. A white robe covers a very black skin; and the robe only falls off, revealing the real colour of the man, when his net is over us, and escape is perhaps impossible. It is so pleasant to hear ourselves praised; but considering how weak and sinful we are, an honest friend is what we need, who will not be afraid to administer wholesome reproof, when such treatment is required.

In choosing our friends, it is well to seek out those whose character and conduct we should like to imitate. There is an older lad in my place of business, who throws himself constantly alongside of me, and wants me to go with him. He is a gay, pleasant fellow, jolly, attractive, popular. I feel rather honoured that he should seek to cultivate my friendship. But, as I come closer to him, I hear doubtful jests passing his lips; I see that he carries a betting-book in his pocket; and the smell of strong drink is often on his breath. Those who know him best count him a fast fellow. Now, do I desire to be like him? Ruskin says: "What we like determines what we are, and is the sign of what we are; and to teach taste is to inevitably form character." If I allow myself to get a taste for such a friend as that, I shall be like him soon. Solomon was not so far wrong when he said, "He that maketh many friends," not choosing wisely among those who offer themselves, "doeth it to his own destruction."

Many are betrayed into habits of extravagance in their efforts to make many friends. From mere goodnature, from the desire to please and to be popular, they throw their money away. They sign bills freely for those who call themselves their friends, or lend them money, without thought or inquiry. They are ready to "treat" everyone. They give great and costly entertainments. They waste their living for the sake of getting a smile of recognition from those above them, or, like the old Roman patron, of having a crowd of eager clients gathering round their door. Good nature and the desire to please are very beautiful traits of character, if they are backed by strong convictions and by the determination to say and do the truth at any cost. But without that backing, they leave a man's life at the mercy of any one who chooses to trade on his weakness, of any one who will take the trouble to deceive and ruin him. Such a man makes many friends, and he does it to his own destruction.

Friends are often made and kept at the cost of conscience. "I am sure it would be better for me to give up that young man's friendship, for I feel in my heart it is doing me harm, and turning me away from God; but I am afraid to fall out with him, he is so very clever and unscrupulous." And so, I go with him, when he asks me, to the theatre, or to worse places; and all because I am afraid of him, and have not courage to say, "No." My partner in business is cheating our customers; my companion is cheating his master; I know it, and yet from fear of turning my friend into a foe, I hold my tongue. A man seldom gains by such moral cowardice. If he escape one danger, he falls into a greater one. An old officer used to say, when he saw a younger man dodge his head at the whistle of a bullet on the battlefield, "Why, you fool, you will dodge right into the way of the bullet." Even in this world, moral cowardice does not pay.

In all such cases, the danger lies in hesitation. "Two-thirds of life are spent in hesitating, and the other third in repenting." Without dallying with temptation, or listening to the voice of expediency, I will always refuse what I feel to be wrong; I will always do the right. I may lose my friend; if so, I cannot help it; but I will not run the risk of turning my own conscience from a friend into a foe. Very often a man who acts in this straightforward, manly way does not lose his friend; he gains his respect and confidence, and is able to do him good. It is possible for a man to get the wrong set of friends about him. It is possible to buy the friendship of the world at too high a rate, at the cost of self-respect, of conscience, and of the fear and favour of God. With the example of Absalom and of the prodigal son before us, we must confess that the wise man was not far astray when he said: "He that maketh many friends doeth it to his own destruction."

The best way to escape from the danger of making bad friends—and it is a real danger in the path of many young men and women—is to secure good friendships. There are few of us to whom God hath not already given friends who really deserve the name. They do not ask us to sacrifice conscience, nor to turn our back on God and duty, as the price of their friendship. They are only drawn nearer to us by misfortune. They are friends who stick closer than a brother. We may well thank God for them, as one of the chiefest blessings he hath given us; and we should cultivate their friendship carefully.

It is true, however, that no earthly companionship can fully satisfy the heart. There are sorrows too deep for any earthly friend to fathom, and no friend can be always at our side. Faber writes:—

> Oh, that they would not comfort me!
> Deep grief cannot be reached.
> Wisdom, to cure a broken heart,
> Must not be wisdom preached.
>
> . . . .
>
> But am I comfortless? Oh, no!
> Jesus this pathway trod.
> And deeper in my soul than grief
> Art thou, my dearest God.

Faber is right. There is one Friend in whose love the human heart can find perfect rest. If only we have our blessed Lord and Saviour as our Friend, we can be happy anywhere, even though we be unbefriended or hated by the world.

There is a verse in the beginning of the book of Revelation, which brings this great Friend before us in all his glory, in the fulness of his power to satisfy all our need. It runs thus: "Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth." A WITNESS is one who tells what he knows with regard to the case before the court, and that only. Christ does not teach us science nor philosophy; He seldom lifts the veil which hides the future. He could have told us all we desire to know, but He was not sent for that end. He came from God to bear witness to the truths which we, as sinful, suffering men and women, need to learn. It is of sin and salvation that Christ speaks, of God and of God's attitude towards us, of the way of deliverance from sin, and of the great principles which should regulate our life and conduct. And in his love and care he has left those words of his on record for us. This blessed Book, written by men inspired by the Spirit of Christ, contains all we need to know to reach the fulness of spiritual life; it is a gift to each of us from our best Friend. In these days, there are so many books to read that there is a danger that even Christians may neglect the daily study of the Word of Christ. No gain can compensate for the loss which the soul must sustain, in thus cutting itself off from the supplies of guidance and comfort so carefully provided for it by the love of Christ.

> We search the world for truth: we cull
> The good, the pure, the beautiful
> From graven stone and written scroll,
> From all old flower-fields of the soul;
> And weary seekers of the best,
> We come back laden from our quest
> To find that all the sages said
> Is in the book our mothers read.

This Friend of ours is not a prophet only, but a priest. He is "the FIRST-BEGOTTEN OF THE DEAD." He died, because He loved us, and would wash us from our sins in his blood. With his cross in view, can I doubt that He is my true Friend? But his power to help does not end with his death. He rose again, and is alive for evermore. By his earthly life and death I have pardon and acceptance; and by his rising from the dead He has made my resurrection and eternal glory sure. Sin, in its condemning power, is gone the moment I trust Him; and if sin be gone, death can do me little harm. I have a friend in Christ, whose power reaches into the dark region of death itself, and who has pledged his word to all who trust Him, that his power will be used for their full redemption.

> Here rests in God. 'Tis all we read;
> The smouldering stone reveals no more.
> "In God." Of other words what need?
> These span the broad, eternal shore.

I need not vex myself much about death; it is under the control of my gracious Friend. "Because I live, ye shall live also."

This Friend of ours is a King; yea, He is the PRINCE OF THE KINGS OF THE EARTH. He wears my nature up yonder, as He sits on the throne of the universe, and governs all things. And He never ceases to think of me. In fact, He is ruling all the world with an eye to my good. He is head over all things to the Church. He is a Priest and King, and He makes us priests and kings to God. He calls us to rule over our own hearts in his name. He bids us to win victories "o'er self-indulgent lust;" He summons us to "the triumph of a brave resolve that treads a vice in dust." And if sometimes it seem hard to fight these unseen battles, and meet our spiritual foes, the love of this great Friend, if we will only let it come in and fill our hearts, will brighten all our path. The happy thought, I am doing it all for Him who loved me and gave Himself for me, will carry me over every obstacle, making crooked places straight and rough places smooth, and turning even this earthly life, with all its pains and troubles, into a foretaste of the life of heaven.

JESUS IS MY FRIEND! He teaches me, He saves me, He rules over me. He guides my life, and makes all things work for my good. Jesus is my Friend! Then all earthly friends may leave me; but I have Him, and He is all in all to me. And to bring men to Him, that they may share his love, will be the one ambition of my life. Jesus is my Friend! Then life is joyful, and death is stripped of terror, since that Friend is always near. "You talk to me of death," said a dying Christian; "but I do not see it. It is not death I see, but life."

What is life? 'tis sitting,
Jesus, at thy feet;
All things gladly quitting
For that loved retreat!
Where in blessed union,
Earth and heaven meet.

What is death? 'tis springing,
Jesus, to thy breast;
'Tis the freed bird winging
To her glory nest;
Life and death with Jesus,
Heritage how blest!

PENIEL—THE FACE OF GOD.

It was at Peniel that the mysterious stranger wrestled all night with Jacob in a crisis of peculiar danger and peculiar interest in his history. He was there by the ford alone in the darkness, to plan, in his own strength, how he could meet his brother Esau and his armed men. But the time had now come for the Mighty One to subdue him. His craft, and diplomacy, and self-sufficiency must receive a death-blow from the hand of God. So Jehovah, in human form, comes in the darkness and lays hold of Jacob, and seeks to throw him—wrestles with him. But Jacob, strong in himself, stouts it out against this unknown One. In this is represented all the past time of darkness in his life, during which, in self-strength, he, all unwittingly, was resisting God. Here, too, we may see ourselves. How has God sought, by gentle drawings and ordinary afflictions, to lead us to humble ourselves beneath his mighty hand! In resisting some unaccountable dispensation, do we know we are resisting God Himself?

But the night wore away, and the day (Jacob's day of a new experience of himself and of God) is about breaking. Light is coming in which he shall look upon "the face of God." He is to learn with whom he had been in conflict. But how? He had not humbled himself. Hence God must humble him. He only touches with his finger the hollow of Jacob's thigh, and all his wrestling—that is, his resistance—is for ever at an end. He hangs in utter powerlessness, and yet with a new strange might, on Him with whom he has to do. Now with the breaking morning dawns the thought, the question, "Is not this to whom I cling the Angel of the Covenant?" Now he prays. How passing strange that his resistance to God's wrestling—his wrestling against God—should have passed into a very proverb for prayer!

Let us not miss this lesson. Have we had our Peniel? We know about Bethel, with its tent and altar and ladder to heaven—the place of pilgrimage, and worship, and communion. But Peniel, where self-strength goes out, and God's might comes in, where the earthen pitcher is broken, and the light shines out, have we yet been there? There is power at Peniel, but there is deepest humiliation before there is power. Oh, may we ever be broken before God, so that we may not have to be broken by God! That is dreadful, though blessed as well. Jacob received power—"As a prince hast thou power with God and with men"—but yet went on halting upon his thigh. How many of God's dear ones He has had to smite, in order to get their hearts, so that thereafter they went limping through life, unutterably blessed, indeed, in spirit, and yet, perhaps, with a spotted reputation, or broken health, or haunting memories of sin, or in loneliness because of bereavement! When crippled and helpless, Jacob prayed and prevailed. Oh, the power of hanging in utter helplessness on God.

How God can reveal! What is thy name? Jacob's own heart gave the quick answer, and he stood self-revealed. It was "Jacob," "the supplanter," the trickster, the deceiver, the man of nature. So Christ said to Peter, "Simon, thou son of Jonas, lovest thou Me?"—not Peter then, rock-man.

Jacob says, "Tell me, I pray Thee, thy name." Note God's answer: "Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name?" Am I not revealed to thee yet? "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip?" Do we yet know God? May "the God of Jacob" bless us and show us Himself! E. F. Baldwin,

LORD BRAMWELL AND THE SABBATH.

When Lord Bramwell, one of Her Majesty's judges, speaking of the Sabbath Law, ventures to say, "The Jews, to whom the command was given," it is time to repeat again to men at large, truths which children are supposed to know. The origin of the Sabbath is not to be found in Sinai, but in Eden. "And on the seventh day God ended his work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all his work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." So much for the Divine ordination—the solemn setting apart by God—of one day in seven.

But we have more: we see it actually existing as a Divine institution before the law of Moses had been given. We allude to the giving of the manna, as told in Exod. xvi. Lastly, the Sabbath Law, which was first given in Eden, and is older even than the law of marriage, which was most solemnly enforced both by miracle and Divine commandment, previous to the giving of the law of Moses, is re-enacted at Sinai. But observe how it is re-issued. It was not given merely as a part of the Levitical economy, which was but for a time, and only for the Jews. It stood in the Moral Law, which was for all time and for all men, side by side with the fundamental commandments: "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me;" "Honour thy father and thy mother," and "Thou shalt not kill." We should be just as wise (or foolish) in saying that "Thou shalt not kill" was given to Jews only, as to say that the obligation of keeping one day in seven rests only upon them.

Lord Bramwell goes still further. He is reported (vide Standard, 20th March) to have said:—"Let there be, not only abstinence from work, but from meetings for religious worship. It was a day for recreation and enjoyment." We thank him for speaking out so plainly, for now we know, what we suspected before, that a very great deal of the opposition to the stricter observance of the Lord's Day is really opposition to religion itself. By all means keep a day of rest, says the noble lord and judge, but don't oppress people with your religion and your worship. His words: "Let there be abstinence . . . from meetings for religious worship," mean, Let God be shut out—his worship is a weariness, and the tired people need rest. What is this but the concentrated essence of ungodliness! As though the worship of our glorious Creator, our blessed Father in heaven, were antagonistic to man's best interests! As though it were not the most restful, the most re-creative, of all employments!

The deep-rooted ungodliness of our time is rapidly perverting our Lord's words: "The Sabbath was made for man," into: "The Sabbath was made for man, to be enjoyed without reference to God." We are astounded that an educated man, not to say a judge, should have been so blind to the facts of human nature, we say nothing of revelation, as to oppose the public worship of the Lord's Day. Does he know nothing of the tremendous necessities of the religious nature of man, or of its dominant power for good when awakened and satisfied? Is he so far sunken in the refined heathenism of modern culture as to forget that the power of knowing God, of trusting, loving, and worshipping Him, is man's noblest inheritance?

It is refreshing to turn from the heathen speech of the noble lord to the inspiring words of Isaiah:—"If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable; and shalt honour Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

OUR HOMES IN PARIS.

Many friends will care to know that we are very greatly needing help for our various Homes in Paris at this time. Some of our most liberal subscribers were taken away by death last year, and our branch associations in England and Scotland have only sent in, some but one-third, others none of their usual collections. Added to this, our expenses have been unusually great, owing to the prevailing distress and want of employment in Paris.

In answer to many inquirers, may we state that the terms for board, &c., in our Governesses' Home are twelve shillings per week for those able to pay, and that it is open alike to Armenians, Presbyterians, as well as Roman Catholics, each being free to attend their own place of worship.

May I add a word of warning to our young friends, to whom our Free Registry is always open, that there never was a time in our experience when acquiring French in Paris was fraught with such difficulty and danger. Too many of those who come out would do well to wait until a reliable position can be obtained for them. By taking a premature step, they come, or are found by us, entirely without resources, until we can assist them to return to England. Ada M. Leigh.

Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.—The new report states that in reviewing the work of the Society for the past year (the forty-fourth of its existence) there is abundant cause for thankfulness to God that the Divine blessing continues so manifestly to rest upon the Medical Mission enterprise. The total number of patients was nearly 10,000, and, including those visited at their own homes, more than 21,000. These not only receive medicine, but other help, where needed, in the form of clothing, food, coals, &c.; above all, the offer of healing for their sin-sick souls. Seventeen students were in the Training Institution, three of whom finished their studies and received their diplomas. Since 1875 thirty-six young men have gone forth from the Institute fully qualified medical missionaries, and are now at work in all parts of the world. There are also twenty-three students preparing for similar work. The pamphlet concludes with notes about "Our Foreign Work," and will be read with interest by any who apply for it to the Secretary, Rev. John Lowe, 56, George-square, Edinburgh. The Quarterly Paper is offered post free for 1s. per annum.

THE LAMB for the BURNT OFFERING.

MR. THOMAS NEWBERRY'S TEMPLE MODEL.

PERHAPS the greatest interest awakened in connection with the recent Advent Conference, at Mildmay, was that caused by the exhibition of Mr. Thomas Newberry's beautiful model of Solomon's Temple, with his suggestive and deeply instructive explanations. The only drawback (in addition to the smallness of the room in which the model was placed) was that Mr. Newberry's mind is so saturated with the subject that he seemed to find it extremely difficult to compress his explanations; as a consequence, these explanations were fragmentary on each occasion, and the hearer failed to get any broad, comprehensive view of the wonderful subject. We understand that Mr. Newberry has some thirty distinct lectures, based on this model; it was, therefore, little wonder that he scarcely knew where to begin or where to leave off. The most remarkable and impressive of all the "explanations" we heard from him was that given on the afternoon of the third day of the Conference at the close of the Communion service. He said:—

I feel I cannot get away from the contemplation of the wondrous and glorious scene—the sacrifice on Calvary. I do not think it will be unprofitable if we should linger a little around the Cross. I feel like the sacrifice—bound with cords to the altar, so that I cannot get away from it just at present. Suppose, then, we look at the altar of burnt offering. (This altar, as represented in the model, occupies a prominent place in the centre of the court). This altar is the shadow of the Cross. The cross of Calvary threw its shadow back through the long ages. We may trace it in the Garden of Eden. See that innocent victim whose skin formed a covering for the nakedness of our first parents. It was one skin—for the word is in the singular—with which our first parents were arrayed by the hand of God in substitution for the fig-leaf covering which they had themselves devised. I see in that victim the first shadow of the Cross. The firstling of the flock that was Abel's offering was another part of the same shadow of Calvary's Cross. The altar erected by the Patriarchs formed part of that shadow.

The altar erected by Abraham on Mount Moriah, one of the mountains which God told him of, is a wondrous shadow of the Cross of Calvary. If we wanted a proof of the inspiration of Scripture, that twenty-second chapter of Genesis would furnish it. We see there an unmistakable shadow of the Cross, clear in all its outlines, sharply cut, accurate and true in every detail. Let us connect this altar in the centre of Solomon's court, with that erected, as pointed out by the finger of God, on Mount Moriah. It may be that Solomon's altar stood on the very self-same spot of earth once covered by the altar that Abraham erected on Mount Moriah. At the present day, on the crest of that mountain, there is a remarkable projection of limestone half a foot above the surface of the surrounding platform of marble, on which the Dome of the Rock now stands. That irregular limestone projection is regarded by the Mohamedans to the present day as the sacred spot where their father Abraham built an altar on which offer up his son Isaac. The Dome of the Rock is, so to speak, a monument erected over that sacred spot.

What a wondrous shadow of the Cross of Calvary is this twenty-second chapter of Genesis, which describes the sacrifice that Abraham offered. We are told that God did tempt Abraham—that is, put him to the test. Satan's temptations are actions upon the evil of our nature to bring out the evil. God's testings are rather the actions of his own grace to bring out that grace to the full. God tried Abraham in the most severe manner. He put the gold into a crucible at white heat. He tried him at the tenderest point. How it reminds us of that wondrous fact; "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

Abraham takes the wood and lays it on his son Isaac. How that brings Isa. liii. to our remembrance—another wondrous shadow of Calvary's Cross. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Abraham and Isaac, we read, "went both of them together." How instructive and how full of deep meaning is this expression. It was the grace of God that caused Him to give his only begotten Son; it was the grace of the Son that led Him to give Himself to the fulfilment of the Father's will—"they went both of them together." Isaac said, "Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" "God will provide Himself a lamb for a burnt offering." How pathetic was Abraham's reply. Did Isaac understand it? Perhaps he did. If there was the spirit of the father's surrender in Abraham, there was also the spirit of the son's surrender to the father's will in Isaac. "So they went both of them together."

Let us transfer the question of Isaac to the altar of burnt offering. In the centre of Israel's camp in the wilderness was this altar of burnt offering—nine cubits square and three cubits high. At the dedication of the Tabernacle, the fire of God descended and consumed upon the altar the sacrifice. The command of God was that the fire should ever be burning upon the altar; it should never go out. And so, when Solomon's Temple was dedicated, the fire again descended and consumed the sacrifice upon the altar, that a standing ordinance might be again asserted—The fire is ever to be burning on my altar; it shall never go out; it shall never be put out.

What is the fire that came from God that consumed the victim, and caused it to ascend as a sweet savour—that fire which, when the rebels presented strange fire, came forth and consumed them. What is that fire? "Behold the fire." It was the very centre of Israel's encampment; there was the smoke ever ascending, the fire ever burning. What was it the emblem of? "Our God is a consuming fire." The fire is the emblem of God's righteousness and holiness. It was never to be put out. God never ceases to be the righteous and holy God, of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and who cannot look upon sin. Never for one single moment or twinkling of an eye, in time, or for one single moment throughout eternity, will that fire cease to burn. It shall never go out. In the glory above, God will be ever righteous and holy; and in the bottomless pit, the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, that holiness shall continue. That fire shall never cease to burn; it shall never go out. There the fire is unquenched, and there the worm dieth not. "For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the King it is prepared; He hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it" (Isa. xxx. 33). All the sin of a guilty world, when the lake of fire is open to receive the damned, will be cast into it as fuel for the everlasting burnings. It shall never go out. "Behold the fire."

"Behold the wood." It was the occupation of the Gibeonites to be hewers of wood for God's altar. Daily the priests were to lay the wood upon the fire. What is the wood? The wood is the emblem of sin. "Thou hast set our iniquities before Thee; our secret sins in the light of thy countenance." The wood was daily set in order upon the fire. God is righteous: behold the fire. Man is a sinner: behold the wood. Look round upon the world. Look at London: behold the wood. Oh! what heavy fagots will be carried down to the everlasting burnings. Their sins will follow them; every sin that a man has committed, and that goes unconfessed and unpardoned, unwashed in Emanuel's blood, will be a fagot for the burning. Behold the holiness and righteousness of God, who is a consuming fire.

"But where is the lamb for the burnt offering?" "Behold the wood!" From all parts of the world the echo comes back: Behold the wood! From heathendom, Popedom, Christendom, comes the echo: Behold the wood! "But where is the lamb for the burnt offering?" Let us send up the challenge to the heavens above: "Where is the Lamb?" Angels, where is the Lamb? Gabriel, will you step forward? The echo comes back: Where is the Lamb? Where? Where? Ah! beloved friends, that was the cry for ages and ages, till one day John the Baptist pointed with his finger to a man walking along, and said: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." "My son, God will prepare Himself a lamb for the burnt offering." That is He. [As Mr. Newberry came to this part of his deeply solemn subject, his face, worn and wrinkled with the furrows of age, was lit up with a glow of rare animation; his eyes sparkled as with the very light of heaven; his hand was raised in dramatic and triumphant gesture. The whole scene, with the wonderful surroundings, was one never to be forgotten.] See the carpenter's Son, despised and rejected of men, led as a lamb to the slaughter, and dumb before its shearers—behold the Lamb that God has provided. "None other can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him" (Ps. xlix. 7). God could see none amongst the ranks of the angels mighty enough, and worthy enough, to be laid on his altar—wood of God's fire. But God has Himself provided a Lamb. He looked round upon the world; God is holy: behold the fire. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men: behold the wood. Oh, blessed thought: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" The fire ever burning; the wood ever consuming; the sweet savour of the Lamb ever ascending. God always holy; man ever a transgressor; but the sweet savour of the Lamb of God ever ascending from God's altar.

I look down now to the cave below, and I see in Tophet the fire and the wood. People want to know what the brimstone is; that is it—the wrath of God, the breath of Jehovah is a stream of brimstone, the fierceness of which adds intensity to the flames. I look down, and I say: Behold the fire, and behold the wood, but where is the lamb? And these caves of darkness utter back the sorrowful echo: WHERE? Where? Where? Behold, the fire; it shall never go out. Behold the wood; but no lamb for a burnt offering there.

I look up to the regions of light above, and I say, Behold the fire. Yes, He who sits upon the throne of the universe—God the Judge of all—is a God of infinite justice, infinite holiness, infinite purity: behold the fire. Where is the lamb? Behold in the midst of the throne, "a Lamb as it had been slain." But where is the wood? From those regions of light and from the midst of the throne there comes the echo back. WHERE? Where? Where? There is no evil there, no wood there, no sin there.

The lamb on the altar was God's centre for Israel's camp; the lamb on the altar was God's centre of Israel's kingdom under Solomon; the lamb on the altar—not the evening lamb, but the morning lamb—will be God's centre for Israel and for the earth in the millennial period. But God's centre for heaven, for the universe and for eternity, will be "the Lamb as it had been slain," in the midst of the throne of God—no longer led as a lamb to the slaughter, but reigning for ever and ever.

The Leamington Y.W.C.A., and Young Dressmakers' Home, continues to provide a comfortable Christian abode for young girls employed in houses of business, as day-workers, and who have no friends in the town. Last year sixty-four were accommodated. The evangelistic work includes several Sunday afternoon Bible-classes, which have resulted in individual blessing to not a few. Meetings for prayer have been most cheering and helpful; the Scripture Union has numbered sixty members; visits to the sick and tried ones have been paid, and correspondence kept up with former inmates. The eleventh report expresses much praise to God that the expenses have all been met. Communications may be addressed to Miss Bagster, Regent-grove, Leamington.

FAITHFUL AND TRUE.—4.

LESS than two months ago a thief stood up in the meeting at the Adelphi Theatre Mission, Chicago, and shouted, "Mr. Kirkland, this religion is no good. Why don't Jesus save me? I tell you it's no good. There is no God." Then raising his hand to heaven, he continued, "Now, if there's a God in heaven I want Him to kill me right here and prove that He lives. I defy Him; kill me now if you can!" Then addressing the platform, he continued, "I tell you, your God is no good."

Mr. Kirkland arose and said, "Now, friends, you have heard this challenge. I want you all to take a good look at this man, so that you may remember him. I want you to mark this, we are going to pray for him, and if he is not converted and witnessing for Christ in a little while, you may conclude that God does not answer prayer in this place."

Prayer was then offered for him, and all present requested to look for the answer. Many would say that it was decidedly wrong to be so positive about the answer coming. But not so; "We know in whom we believe." Our God delights to prove Himself to his people. Nearly two months passed away. The man did not attend the meetings until the evening of January 21. When the testimonies were called for on that evening, he was one of the first to arise and declare that "he was saved and on the Lord's side." He told also of his life of sin; how he had been the "blackest of sinners—a criminal of the worst sort." But God had followed him since the time prayer was made for him, and he is now rejoicing in Christ.—Chicago Mission Worker.

A BAD TEMPER CURED.

"I SHOULD like to tell you my case," said a tall, fine-looking, gentlemanly man, with a bright, beaming countenance. I had been speaking at a meeting in a large provincial town, on the mighty power of Divine grace, as all-sufficient to save and deliver from the habit of besetting sins. At the close of the meeting this gentleman accosted me, as above, and added, "I keep a school, and for years my temper was sadly tried by my boys. Being, as I trust I am, a converted man, and a professing follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, I felt that by giving way to my temper I was dishonouring my Lord and Master. This was a sad grief to me. It was a bad example for my boys, and I knew it must mar my influence with them.

"I struggled against it. I made it a subject of earnest prayer. Night after night I confessed my sin, and sought strength to overcome it, but all in vain. I then wrote down and kept on my desk a memorandum of my transgressions, hoping that the constant sight of the reminder of my sins might serve as a check and cure, but still in vain. The outbursts of temper broke over all such barriers. Again and again I confessed, and wept over my sad and sinful habit. I was injuring my own soul, and dishonouring my Lord in the presence of the whole school. This state of things went on for weeks and months. I knew not what to do. All my efforts were fruitless; all my good resolutions were broken. I was at length so driven to utter self-despair as regarded this matter, that one night I fell upon my knees, and cried unto the Lord and said: "It is no use, Lord; I give it up; undertake for me."

It is now five years ago since this happened. The Lord did undertake for me; He did for me what I could not do for myself. Since that time I have never once been out of temper with my boys, nor have I once felt the inclination to be so. I thought you would like to have your words confirmed by this account of my experience." Such was in substance the language of the speaker.—The Helmet.

FRESH AIR FOR CITY TOILERS.

OUR warmest thanks are due to those whose generous kindness enabled us last summer to send over 150 tired workers for several weeks to the country or seaside, some of whom had not been out of town for years. Their grateful letters testify to the very happy days they enjoyed, and to the loving care and kindly influence by which they were surrounded. As the number of holiday applicants will probably be doubled next summer, we trust many new helpers will be forthcoming. To encourage thrift, and to secure what payment is possible from the girls themselves, holiday clubs have been organised in London, Liverpool, Nottingham, and other manufacturing centres. The wages, however, of many do not amount to more than 7s. or 8s. per week, two-thirds of which are frequently claimed by parents or relatives. These girls, of course, find it impossible to save enough, either for their journeys or for the cheapest holidays and it is for such, and for others who can pay nothing, that we now plead.

One reason we seek cottage lodgings, &c., is because the Convalescent Homes are so crowded in summer that immediate admission is rarely possible, and thus they do not meet the need of those who are often not told by their employers when their holiday will begin till the very week arrives. We earnestly ask all who can to assist us in one or more of the following directions:—

(1) By sending contributions to enable us to take advantage of excellent Cottage Homes already offered, to Secretary and Treasurer of Y.W.C.A., Holiday Department, 4, Inverness-terrace, London, W. Sixteen to eighteen shillings will procure a fortnight in the country; £1 to £1 6s., two or three weeks by the sea; but smaller sums will be gratefully received.

(2) By providing us, free of charge, or weekly expenses partially paid, with carefully selected seaside lodgings, or with rooms in cottages, lodges, farms, coffee-houses, &c., owned by quiet Christian people, in pleasant country neighbourhoods. These should be within cheap journeys or short distances of the towns above mentioned. As sea-breezes are so often of incalculable benefit, friends would lessen the difficulty of the heavier fares to the seaside by kindly sharing railway expenses (third-class fares from London, usually 5s. each way).

(3) By informing us of, or even starting, cheap holiday-homes in the vicinity of London and other towns, suited especially for work-room and factory hands. Also by telling us of free or inexpensive "Homes of Rest" for ladies engaged in teaching and in Christian work; and for young ladies engaged in business, whose own homes may be too distant to visit.

The young women we endeavour to assist belong to all classes, discretion being used in assigning the cottages, &c., suitably, and only those are sent whom the lady-workers know to be quiet and steady.

N.B.—In every case where those responding to the above are unknown to us, we beg that a reference (with address) to a clergyman or minister or "Y.W.C A, worker," be given in the first letter sent, or, better still, a note of reference enclosed; no arrangements can be entered into till this is kindly furnished. BOURNEMOUTH Y.W.C.A.

A SERIES of addresses on the Tabernacle, illustrated with admirable diagrams, have been given by Mr. G. Soltau, and have drawn larger audiences than the very limited space of the Y.W.C.A. Institute would hold. A more commodious building for the work of the Association in this place is sadly needed.

Addresses have also been given on various subjects in other buildings, attended by most marked blessing. Many thank God for the message that has reached them through Mr. Soltau's thrilling, forcible words, and the bright delineation of Old Testament type into New Testament grace and power. Souls have been brought out of darkness into light, and Christians quickened and instructed.

PASTOR CHINIQUY'S LOSS.

WE have received from Pastor Frank H. White, 80, Kensington Gardens Square, W., copy of a letter received by him from Pastor Chiniquy, informing him of the loss by fire of his books—"Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," and "The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional." We received a similar communication some weeks ago, and stated the purport of it in our issue of March 18. Mr. White says:—

I was privileged, during my recent stay in the United States, to pay a visit with my wife and son to the town of St. Anne (about 80 miles from Chicago), where the good man has so long laboured, and where, as far back as 1852, he founded a Roman Catholic colony of French Canadians. We went that our faith and love might be stirred, by seeing with our own eyes the scene of that wonderful revival when nearly 2000 Roman Catholics were converted, and who are now, with many others, the fruit of our brother's evangelistic labours in other places, scattered throughout the towns and cities of America, bearing the light of the Gospel. We went also in the hope that by our presence at that particular time we might cheer the Pastor. It was just after his printing house had been burned to the ground, and all the plates, with a large number of the copies, bound and unbound, of his last work, "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," destroyed. Thus our visit seemed most opportune.

Our hearts were deeply touched with all that we saw and heard, both of his successes and sufferings. Twenty times has he been stoned (some of these ancient arguments of the Church of Rome we saw preserved in our friend's library), a token alike of her hatred of Christ's Gospel and of the Master's care for his servant. He has often been beaten with sticks and whips. Once he was stabbed with a poignard. Over thirty times his name has been called before the civil and criminal courts among the vilest of men. No less than seventy-two false witnesses were brought forward by the Church of Rome to support an accusation of having set fire to a church. Yet out of all these afflictions has the Lord delivered him. The priest who invented this calumny, and induced these false witnesses to accuse him, was found guilty of perjury, and sentenced to a fine of 2500 dollars, or to imprisonment for fourteen years.

Now, whilst still bearing in his body "the marks of the Lord Jesus," our brother is poor, and sadly tried; his little property is mortgaged to the last cent. This second recent burning of his books and plates has utterly impoverished him. I am writing in the earnest hope that all lovers of the truth among your readers, who are able, will send him some help, and especially those whose eyes have been opened to see the true character of Rome and her teachings. I will gladly receive and forward contributions to a Chiniquy Relief Fund.

UNION HALL MISSION.

THE annual gatherings of this mission were held on Wednesday, last week, at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road. The afternoon meeting was largely attended by sympathising friends and fellow-workers. Mr. Robert Paton, Mr. John Jackson, Mr. Charles Little, Mr. E. W. Berrill, Mr. A. M. Hewson, and Mr. James E. Hawkins took part. Much praise and prayer were offered. Over three hundred friends took tea together in the large hall.

The meeting in the evening was of a very cheering character. Mr. Bilke gave an encouraging statement of work carried on in the five districts where the halls are situated, particularly mentioning those efforts which had been especially owned of God during the year. These appeared to consist in Gospel preaching, tent work, open-air preaching, mothers' meetings, meetings for men, Bible-readings, prayer-meetings, work among the young, and house-to-house visitation among the masses. The year closes free from debt, which is a cause for thanksgiving.

Messrs. McVicker, Miller, Herbert W. Taylor, Hawkins, and Dr. McKilliam, gave most helpful words of counsel and encouragement. This was the twenty-sixth anniversary of this Mission. We would commend the work to the prayerful and practical sympathy of our readers.

An International Congress of the Salvation Army is to be held in London from May 28 to June 4. Representatives will be present from the Australian colonies, the United States of America, Canada, India, and Ceylon, South Africa, Sweden, France, and Switzerland.

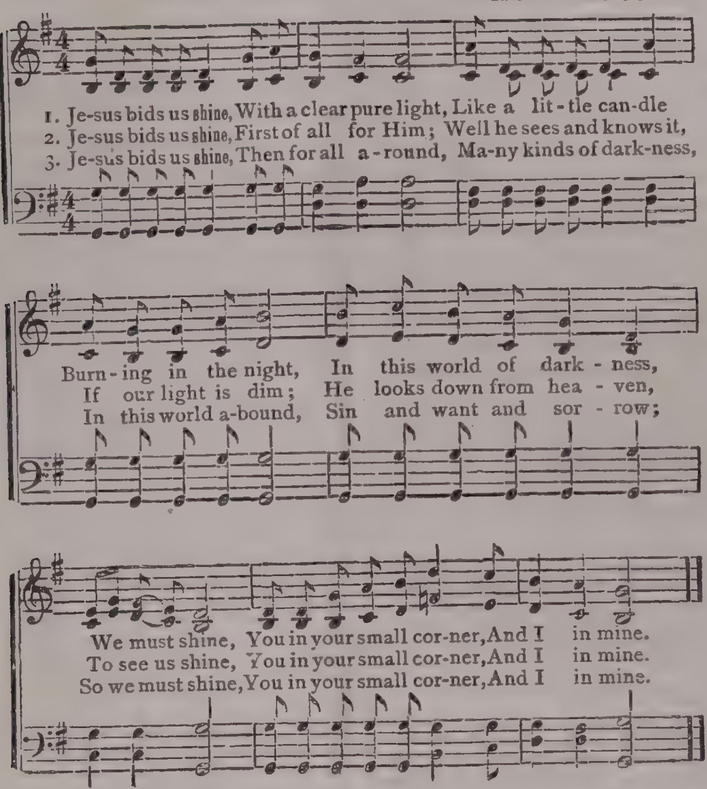
JESUS BIDS US SHINE.

E. O. Excell, by per.



1. Je-sus bids us shine, With a clear pure light, Like a lit-tle can-dle
2. Je-sus bids us shine, First of all for Him; Well he sees and knows it,
3. Je-sus bids us shine, Then for all a-round, Ma-ny kinds of dark-ness,
Burn-ing in the night, In this world of dark-ness,
If our light is dim; He looks down from hea-ven,
In this world a-bound, Sin and want and sor-row;
We must shine, You in your small cor-ner, And I in mine.
To see us shine, You in your small cor-ner, And I in mine.
So we must shine, You in your small cor-ner, And I in mine.

THE WEATHER *

BY REV. J. G. MERRILL.

"Who can stay the bottles of heaven?"—Job xxxviii. 37.

IN Bible lands water was often very scarce, and hence very precious; whenever it was necessary to save it to use on a long journey, or for any other reason, it was generally kept in bottles. These bottles, so-called, were made of the skins of animals, especially of the goat, and usually were, when filled, just the shape of the live animal with the head and feet cut off. When the people wished to empty the skins they laid them on their sides and let the water run out.

It was this custom which led him who spoke the words of the text to ask, "Who can keep the water in the bottles of the heavens?" as often in poetry such comparisons are made. Children do not like rainy weather; and hence I have thought it a good plan to find an answer to the question asked in our text; then, perhaps, we may learn that it is not best to complain of the weather.

How does rain come? I will tell you one way, for there are many. When the wind blows from the south-east it comes from a warmer country than ours, and is often filled with moisture. As long as the wind is warm it can carry this moisture through the sky, and no one can see it at all; but if, in its journey north, it meets some colder air, and begins to get cold, it cannot hold the moisture as well, and so it forms clouds. Then, after a little, as the air grows still colder, the wind is less able to hold the moisture, the bottles are opened, and down comes the rain.

Now, who made the moist wind come from the south? Was it not God? And He made it to meet the cold wind, which squeezed the clouds as you would squeeze a wet sponge. So He made the rain to fall. When, therefore, we have stormy weather, we will remember :—

First. God makes it rain. He knows when it is needed, and sends it to keep the ground wet enough to make the trees, plants, and flowers grow. So that one who complains of the weather is finding fault with God.

Second. We do not know when it ought to begin or to stop raining. Two years ago if you had watched men digging post holes or cellars you would have seen that the ground, three or four feet down, was dry as ashes, and if you had gone out into the country you would have learned that the springs were dry, and there was very little water in the wells; and yet there was rain enough to make the corn grow, and the roads were very nice, and we were glad that it rained so little. But because there was no more rain the trees had nothing for their leaves and roots to drink, and very many of them died. Then, last year it rained a great deal, and everybody grumbled at the mud, and the clouds, and all the while God was getting the ground ready to give us such a fruitful season this year as we have not had for a long time. And now, if this autumn it rains again remember that God knows better than you and I do how much the trees need to drink, and how much rain it will take to keep the springs full, and keep the wells from drying up.

Third. We should remember that, if the rain comes when we are not ready for it, our plans are of very little account. You don't like to put on your rubbers and old clothes to go to school; you wish it would not rain while school keeps. Surely, you would not want it to rain Saturday, nor all vacation; and your father, if he keeps a store, don't want it to rain Saturday, either, for that is the best day for people to come in from the country to trade. Then I come in and say: "I think it is bad to have it rain Sundays, for there are so many men and women who seem to feel that a Sunday rain is the wettest of all rains, and that it will wash them away if they go out in it." So all the time it can rain and suit everybody is nights, and then, how muddy the roads would be every day; that would displease everybody, and by the time you had everybody suited before the rain should come, it would not come at all.

Suppose there should be a vote taken: the minister votes against Sunday; the wash-woman, Monday; the hay-makers, Tuesday; a picnic, Wednesday; those who want to go to prayer meeting, Thursday; the temperance celebration, Friday; the merchant, Saturday. I rather think, children, that we had better let the rain bottles alone, and when God sees fit to have the rain come, feel that He knows best, that it is better to have his great plans carried out than our little ones; and more than all, we should not allow a little mud, or the trouble of drying clothes, or a bad feeling in our hearts, when it is cloudy or stormy, to lead us to find fault with Him who is so kind as to send this rain on the unthankful as well as the thankful.

"THE FRIEND FOR ME."

Little one treading, with heart so gay,
The first few miles of life's highway;
Stay a moment, and listen to me,
I have a message from God to thee.

Unknown the road that before thee lies,
Dangers will take thee by surprise;
Enemies by the pathway may hide,
What wilt thou do without a guide?

One is now waiting to take thy hand,
Who knows full well this dangerous land;
His voice is speaking even now to thee,
Tenderly saying, "O come to Me."

Turn not away from this loving Friend,
His is a love that knows no end;
He wishes that thou shouldst happy be,
Then say not "He is no friend for me,"

O give Him thyself, and let Him lead,
His grace supplying all thy need;
Then will thy happy confession be,
"Yes, Jesus Christ is the Friend for me."

VOLUNTEERS for the MISSION FIELD.

SINCE the Conference in Manchester on the Evangelisation of the World, an increasing interest has been taken in mission work generally. One of the most interesting features has been a number of young people offering themselves for the work. In connection with the Band of Kindness, an organisation of young people, a gathering recently took place of Christian boys and girls, for mutual encouragement, prayer, and testimony. In simple language they told how they were led first to Christ and then into service for Him. Several had previously offered themselves for mission work abroad, and at this meeting their number was increased.

Mr. Gilbert Kirlew stated, in the course of the meeting, that several young men of the Band of Kindness had offered to go abroad to take God's message to the heathen. Two would sail in April for Mr. D. L. Moody's Training Home, Northfield, to be trained as missionaries.

Among the many who testified was Miss Pascoe, who gave a very striking illustration of what can be done among the children. She began her work by a Bible-class with three or four children. The numbers increased each week, and one night preparations were made for forty. "We had no particular reason for expecting that number," said Miss Pascoe, "but we prayed for forty, and forty came." The number of children still increased, and two nights a week were devoted to this labour of love. Ill-health compelled Miss Pascoe to give up one meeting, but it did not lapse. Miss Silvey volunteered and took up the work, and now they have had 1000 children under their combined influence.

In sending in an account of this meeting, Mr. G. R. Kirlew, of the Refuges and Homes, Strangeways, Manchester, says:—"I wish to add my earnest hope that doors of service may be opened for my young friends; they are intensely anxious to get out to work. There are some six or eight youths, ages ranging from fourteen to eighteen, and young sisters of about the same ages, who, with a little training, would make most useful workers. I shall be glad to give any further information to those who may be able to help them to attain the object of their prayers and hope."

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

DEAR FRIENDS,—On every hand we hear the cry of distress, though it may be the needs of the poor in our villages are not made so prominent as in London and other large towns. We have endeavoured to disuade the poor from migrating to the towns, and specially to London. We have rather sought to get them to emigrate to the colonies. All who have left the Hills for America or the colonies have done well. Most of those we assisted some years since to the United States are now living on their own land.

We have been made sad to find so much real distress, as we have visited place after place. Mills are closed that used to give employment to hundreds; various industries which provided employment for hundreds of mothers and children are now a thing of the past. Large tracts of land that used to wave with corn are now fast going out of cultivation, because it does not pay the farmer to till the soil. These are among the causes of the distress. Yet God is using this time of trouble to the opening of the ears of many to the message of salvation, and many receive the Word with joy. I have not made known the needs of the poor of this Mission, because of the bitter cry of London, but I trust that the country will not be forgotten in this time of trial. G. Brealey.

THE CITY HARVEST FIELD.

A LITTLE report has been issued, entitled "Golden Sheaves from the City Harvest Field," full of interesting details of the last year's work in the City in connection with the mission carried on by Mrs. Fisher. She will be glad to forward a copy to any of her many kind friends in the country and abroad. Last year was one of considerable trial, though there was continued blessing on the work in all its departments. This year there is much cause for praise to God, who has inclined the hearts of many friends to help during a time of great trade depression. Many poor women were suffering intensely, especially the aged ones, and widows with children.

"Through the kindness of a few friends," says Mrs. Fisher, "we have been enabled to give dinners to aged ones, still working in the city; we had one party, most of those present being over seventy years old, and one eighty. We have had Gospel services, and a little temporal help has been given to many when work has been slack. All the meetings in the workrooms and 'The Welcome' have been greatly blessed, and many hearts are rejoicing in a Saviour's love. We thank the kind friends who not only send money help, but gifts of flowers, cards, books, warm clothing, &c. We should be glad if more ladies would come once a week and give a little reading in the workrooms."

Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Fisher, care of Hallkeeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

TRAINING FOR SERVANTS.

THE Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants has lately been able to set on foot a Training School for Laundry-maids. It is situated at Battersea, and called the Hampden House Laundry. The Association which has to do with young and friendless girls of the servant class, and especially those coming from the Workhouse Schools, finds that their want of success in life depends often upon the absence of training. Being unskilled in work, undisciplined in temper, the girls lose place after place, lose heart first, and eventually too often, in the worst sense, lose character.

Lately an offer was made to us by the Battersea Steam Laundry Company of which we have availed ourselves. By means of it we are able to train twenty girls each year in laundry work, and to send out into the world those who would otherwise have fallen into the lower ranks of the labour market, provided with employment. This new Home is at once a Home and a school, where all the best influences which can be brought to bear on the girls, are exerted to raise their moral and religious tone, and where all that can be done to put them in the way of earning their livelihood, is done. Will any of your readers assist us in raising some £50 still needed to relieve us of financial difficulty. We plead in the name of the friendless girls, for help, which may be sent to Hon. Mrs. Fraser, 18, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Brooke Lambert, Chairman M.A.B.Y.S.

BISHOP TAYLOR AND AFRICA.

THIS missionary bishop has addressed to the Christian people in America who believe in his scheme of self-supporting missions, an open letter. We quote a few sentences:—

I am depending upon the King and upon you, his faithful stewards, to provide for the passage of our outgoing missionaries to assist in laying the foundations for freehold self-supporting mission stations. We shall require for Africa alone over twenty new missionary workers this year. The passage of such as go to opened fields near the coast, will not exceed £40 each. Those going into unopened regions in the heart of the Continent will probably require £60 for transit, making a probable average of £50 per missionary.

Then to help us build houses, without too much loss of my valuable time, and to furnish for our industrial schools farming and gardening implements, carpenters' and cabinetmakers' and shoemakers' tools, tanyard materials, portable mills for making meal and flour, sugar-cane crushing machinery and evaporating kettles, bread and molasses, providing live stock for our school farms, we shall need an average of £50 per missionary additional. All this £100 per missionary to put them into the foreign field and on to a basis of self-support in perpetuity, is less than the salary of one "foreign missionary" for one year. Your accustomed liberality continued, with the new streams God is opening for us, we shall rapidly plant missionary stations fifty miles apart, as lighthouses amid the dense shades of the Dark Continent.

This for me will be a year of great peril and toil, and while I depend on God and my fellow-workers at home for the needed funds without distrust or anxiety, I especially need and ask your prayers and the prayers of your children.

THE AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

AUSTRALIA presents a glorious field for evangelistic work in the future; but at present though "sin abounds," little in the opposite direction (in comparison, I mean) seems to be going on. In the bush the homesteads are scattered, and places of worship far more so. The people are, therefore, very much left to themselves. A clergyman may visit the chief house in a district and hold a service about once a month, but baptismal regeneration is often taught at the expense of the simple and full Gospel message being delivered, and thereby opportunities are lost.

The shearers are a very interesting class. Of course the aim of the squatter is to get rid of them as soon as possible, and little regard is paid to their spiritual welfare. Nevertheless, I have been permitted each year to invite them about three times a week to a room where, having a piano or harmonium we sang Songs and Solos together, interspersed with anecdotes, or a few verses of the Bible read and talked about. About the latter I was doubtful at first, as I knew not who amongst them might be Roman Catholics; but a voice one night to a query of mine, "I think they all like your reading, ma'am," reassured me upon that subject. They much enjoyed coming, a very few remaining behind; they would sometimes ask to have some singing upon an extra evening in the week. This year they gladly accepted the hymn-books to take away with them, and from one since I have received a touching letter of thanks, saying "He had spent such a very happy month." Though I hear they are habitually great swearers and gamblers, in my presence they were all that could be desired. All books lent to them were carefully returned, showing that they could appreciate kindness. Although the general impression seems to be that they are a class of men to be avoided as much as possible, sure I am that a good work might be done in their midst.

Kentucky, New South Wales. J. S. P.

Commercial Travellers' Christian Association.—In the thirteenth report the present position of the Association is briefly reviewed. The new members for the past year numbered 34; the number of Bibles sent to hotels was 263, making altogether 11,000; the new libraries in hotels number 13, each one averaging 74 volumes; and the Beneficent Fund has assisted 29 persons. The Provident Society has been duly registered for the entire kingdom. The receipts amounted to the sum of one thousand pounds, the highest ever reached. The objects of the Association are the promotion of intercourse among Christian commercial men, and the advancement, by all suitable means, of the moral and spiritual character of the entire body. The headquarters of the office and library are at 186 Aldersgate-street, E.C. Mr. Leonard Courtney is the new General Secretary.

REV. F. VON SCHLUEMBACH.

THE Lord has opened unto me a blessed field of labour among the tens of thousands of Germans and their offspring in Texas, who live isolated, under no Christian influences, and whose spiritual condition is therefore indeed pitiful. To reach out after them, needs thoroughly consecrated labourers for the Lord and they must not only be properly trained for the work, but become used to the climate to be able to continue.

My personal friends in Germany have placed in my hands about £500 towards organising a training-school at my home, near Waco, Texas, in the very centre of the State and of the railroads. Young men have offered their services, coming forth from the Y.M.C.A. mission field, but to make the work self-supporting and secure I still need the sum of £1000.

As the Book says, "There is neither Jew nor Greek," I allow myself to add, "neither English nor German," and therefore appeal to my friends in England to aid me before I sail for home on April 22, by sending me a donation at the rooms of the German Y.M.C.A., 28, Finsbury-square, London, E.C. F. von Schluembach, German Evangelist.

PRAYER FOR SERVIA.

DEAR SIR,—I wrote to you before on the then approaching Bucharest Peace Conference, asking prayer for the Lord's mercy, and a favourable issue to the negotiations, and you were good enough to find a place for my request in your issue of January 21.

The result seemed in suspense until almost the last day, and the treaty of peace at length signed—expunging, after discussion, the word "friendship," and leaving every question untouched about which the war arose—was so little satisfactory as to require the lapse of a short time to see whether it would be carried out. Now demobilisation is taking place, and for the present the war has come to an end, for which the Lord be greatly praised.

Those who have sought the Lord's mercy by prayer, will already have given thanks, yet I would ask them while continuing to do so ("forget not all his benefits") to remember the existing terrible elements for a fresh conflagration, and, above all, to supplicate for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, that here the Gospel may be widely preached, and repentance unto life be given from above from evils deeply rooted, but which the love of Christ is sufficient to expel, and to replace with every virtue to the praise and glory of God.

Francis H. Mackenzie.

NEW YORK MEDICAL MISSION.

THE fifth annual public meeting of the Society was held at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Tuesday, March 2. Dr. C. R. Agnew strongly commended the work of the Society. Dr. Dowkontt, the Medical Superintendent, spoke of the great joy experienced in not only relieving physical pain and suffering, but in seeing many turn from their sins to the Saviour. For the four and a half years of the Society's work, 11,074 cases were treated, 25,012 dispensary attendances being given, and 5270 visits paid to the sick at home—total, 30,282. The Secretary, Dr. Edward Jones, made a strong appeal for increased support of the work. No less than 56 young men and women had offered themselves as students, but with its limited accommodation the Society could only take one-fourth of the men, and no women.

Rev. Dr. Happer, M.D., D.D., who has served forty years in China, spoke of the great value of this agency in opening the way for the Gospel to the hearts and homes of the heathen, and told of cases where missionaries had tried in vain to enter into provinces for twenty years, until at last a lady physician came and opened the way. Rev. Jacob Chamberlain, M.D., D.D., nearly thirty years in India, instanced some very striking cases of success as the result of the giving of medical aid. In one case a whole village was converted, and threw away all their idols, being moved thereto by the healing of two men.

An important feature of this work is the establishing of a course of lectures for theological missionary students, extending over ten months, from September to June, consisting of twenty lectures on different subjects. The lectures are free to students of theology.

Notes and Comments.

WE trust there will be a hearty response to the appeal on another page from our earnest evangelistic friend, Rev. F. von Schluembach.

Mr. Thomas Newberry has arranged to deliver his deeply interesting lectures on Solomon's Temple, illustrated by a large, detailed model, in the Lecture-hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on three successive evenings, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, April 5, 6, and 7, at eight o'clock. All friends are heartily invited to attend.

It is not many years since a recognised order of missioners and evangelists was all but unknown in the Established Church. Now, after a remarkable training of many of them by the Lord, they have been thrust into a new service, for which some of them are eminently fitted. Into many parishes they have, through God's mercy, brought awakening and clear Gospel preaching, while their labours and unofficial influence have been signally adapted to this day of preparation.

In nothing has the Divine wisdom been more apparent than in the stimulus this new order of preachers has given to the deeper and connected study of the Scriptures. Habitual preaching upon single texts has been the cause of disjointed and exaggerated views of truth, and omissions both of doctrine and practical obligations. The bringing out of the conjoined meaning of Scripture, and the discovery of the very mind of the Spirit in a comprehensive manner, has been the restoration of primitive methods, and is leading not a few to read their Bibles with an altogether new interest and profit.

A correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent draws attention to the subject of village preaching. Few topics are more important, now that the emigration of villagers to large towns is becoming a very serious problem, and that labourers form so large a portion of the national constituency. The writer candidly admits that in the training of the city and country clergy there has been no distinction. But on all sides the question of adequate provision for Gospel preaching and teaching in rural parishes is becoming very urgent. We are glad to see that the Congregationalists, in Lancashire and Yorkshire, propose to raise £2000 extra for home mission work, and that Mr. Morley gives an extra £1000 in the same way. More, however, than money is needed.

A promising movement in the way of Christian union is announced. Hitherto, the Spring Assemblies of the Congregationalists and Baptists have been held in different weeks. This year they both fall on the second week in May, and by the proposal of the Baptists it has been cordially agreed that on one morning there shall be a combined meeting of the two Unions. The occasion will doubtless be one of considerable interest. In the presence of vice and unbelief, whose forces, if discordant, are united in antagonism against Christ's cause, greater combination among Christ's followers is an urgent need of the time.

It appears that some earnest Christian ministers, under the impression of the low spiritual state of religion in many Congregational churches, have appealed to the Committee of their Union to devote the forthcoming May meetings entirely to prayer. The proposal does not commend itself to The Congregationalist. It is an historic truth that revival has usually come through the prayer and effort of little bands of fearless men. The death-chill of Moderatism in the Scotch Church was driven away, not by the action of the General Assembly, but by the holy concert of prayer and preaching on the part of men like William Burns, Robert McCheyne, the two Bonars, and others.

The Devon and Somerset Weekly News has reported a piteous case in which justice does not appear to have been tempered by mercy. A poor woman, thirty-four years of age, was charged at Dulverton with stealing from a field turnips worth fourpence, and the magistrate sentenced her to twelve months imprisonment with hard labour—surely an outrageous punishment for such an offence. A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette states that the poor woman was ruined by a well-to-do man, when she was only sixteen, and that since then she has frequently failed to obtain employment. Assuming the truth of these statements, the case seems to be one for the attention of the Home Secretary, as it is well calculated to bring the administration of justice into contempt. It is to be regretted, too, that "the well-to-do man" has not met with his deserts, for, after all, he is the person responsible for the ruin of this unhappy woman's life.

A well-known clergyman in the City of London has stated that in a City house of business, the head of which "posed as a philanthropist," the employés were required to work, on Monday, 13 hours; Tuesday, $16\frac{1}{2}$; Wednesday, $16\frac{1}{2}$; Thursday, $16\frac{3}{4}$; Friday, $16\frac{1}{2}$; and Saturday, 11; or, in other words, an average of over 15 hours per day. The reverend speaker asserted that the figures were taken from the books, and represented only a fairly average week's work.

We are not surprised that the statement "caused considerable sensation." As charity proverbially should begin at home, perhaps the philanthropist whose servants are condemned to such wearisome toil, many of them being mere lads, to whom the loss of rest and exercise must necessarily imply injury to the constitution, might employ some of his own leisure time (doubtless ample enough) in looking after the moral and physical well-being of those in his employ.

The terrible accounts from Achill and the neighbouring islands with regard to the utter destitution of thousands of the peasantry point to a painful possibility which has not been taken into account in considering the prominent Irish question. With a famine and its attendant epidemics looming in the near future, the difficulties in dealing with Ireland must necessarily be largely increased, and an early solution of the problem rendered less likely. Through the gloom, however, some cheering rifts are seen. It is pleasant to be able to record that the constabulary force in Ireland have contributed largely to the fund for the relief of the distress, and that the example set by these men is being largely followed. Much help will be needed; for the poverty, and destitution, and sickness are widespread. In the desolate and lonely districts myriads of people will die of hunger and disease, unless they are reached by prompt charity. We trust that the appeals which recently have been made in these columns on their behalf will be responded to; the need is of a pressing nature, and the unfortunate sufferers are truly deserving.

"News of revivals and conversions by the score and hundred come to us," says The (New York) Independent, "from all parts of the country. Many of our exchanges give several columns weekly to revival items."

We would remind those of our readers living in or near London of the two days' Conference on the Evangelisation of the World, to be held at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 13 and 14. A very full and interesting programme has been prepared, and we hope to see a great muster of the friends of Missions. We shall print the programme in our next issue.

Additional Conferences in London have been arranged for as follows:—

May 18 and 19.—The Great Assembly-hall, Mile-end-road, E.
June 8 and 9.—Conference-hall, Eccleston-street, Belgravia, S.W.
October 5 and 6.—Conference-hall, Mildmay-park, N.
October 27 and 28.—Conference-hall, Clapham-road, S.W.
November 23 and 24.—Exeter-hall, Strand, W.C.

Similar Conferences are meanwhile being arranged in many provincial centres. Prayer is earnestly requested that the blessing of God may abundantly rest upon all these gatherings.

What is the Society for the Suppression of Vice about, that no notice is being taken of the flood of pestilential literature, in the shape of translations, which has of late been let loose upon our youth? We have more than once called attention to the matter, and, as the publishers and booksellers who are engaged in disseminating the vile volumes seem to be insensible to ordinary comment, the time appears to have come for stronger measures. It is bad enough to have the books accessible in the language in which they were written, and to which they are a disgrace; but it is much worse to have them translated into English, illustrated, and sent out broadcast to corrupt and ruin.

When we meditate upon our sins and shortcomings, do we give sufficient prominence to those of omission? In many cases it is not difficult to trace out the results of sins of commission, results widening as do the circles when a stone is thrown into a pool; but our omissions are not less potent in evil effects, and in some instances they are even more so. Christ's strongest condemnations were for those who "did it not," or who, after hearing the Divine command, simply "went away sorrowful." The parable of the talents was spoken for all time, and its lesson was intended for those who to-day, abstaining from outward sin, also keep aloof from the performance of duties which it ought to be incumbent upon them to discharge. Asking, "Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered?" we may easily overlook "the least of these," of whom Jesus said that they were his representatives; and it becomes each of us, when at the close of the day we approach the Throne of Grace, to confess that we have indeed left undone those things which we ought to have done.

The Christian.

"Training is the great requirement of the present age. Every calling in life demands preparation; natural ability, and irregular, unguided development, are not enough. As soon as a person has chosen his life-work, he begins to prepare himself for it. So, when a person has decided to follow Christ, and become a 'fisher of men,' training should begin at once. It is not enough to have become a Christian—to have in view a life of work for God; but one should, even in childhood, be 'about his Father's business.' Therefore, as soon as a child is 'in the way he should go,' he should be 'trained up' in that way. We do not leave a child to himself in his physical and intellectual growth; neither should we disregard his need of help in spiritual development. Yet how little direct attention is paid to the child's spiritual needs after his conversion! . . . . We seem to expect the lambs to flourish if treated in the same way as we treat the sheep. . . . . A farmer's boy, whose business it was to tend sheep, contrived a plan by which his lambs should be in better condition than those of his neighbours. Instead of keeping all the flock together, he put the lambs in a smaller enclosure within the fold. His care was richly repaid. Equally successful are the special efforts put forth for young converts in the Church."—Pages 23, 24.

EAST-END MISSION WORK.

TO make provision for continuing the Evangelistic work so successfully carried on by the Rev. Thomas Jackson during the past eighteen months, at the Clapton Park Theatre, the Mission-hall (known as the Clapton Park Tabernacle) has been purchased, and is being enlarged at a total cost of £2500. The building will provide sittings for 550 persons, and the school-room will accommodate 350 scholars. There will also be four rooms for caretaker, and needy servants' free registry office; six rooms for the use of mothers' meetings; working men's free library and reading room; free night school for adults, Band of Hope, Gospel Temperance, benevolent and tract societies, Good Samaritan union, soup kitchen, &c. The opening services will (God willing) be held on April 21. Many men and women who have been led to Christ at the Theatre services are giving out of their small earnings to the building fund, and in order to carry on, unfettered by any debt, our work among the poor, the perishing, and unsaved we desire to raise the whole amount by Good Friday. Will friends, who are interested in Gospel work among the masses, kindly help us.

Donations will be thankfully acknowledged by Mr. B. Mooney, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E., Treasurer; Mr. W. Johnson, 124, Elderfield-road, Clapton Park, E., Secretary; or by Rev. T. Jackson, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E., Missionary.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

DISEASED LUNGS, with EXTREME NERVOUS PROSTRATION.—CASE of MR. C. W. GARRARD, late of BECCLES.

My attention has been recalled to this case by a letter from the patient's sister, dated November 18, 1885.

It is several years since he came to see me at Coombe Lodge. He was then in a very serious state. The subject of a little cough for years, he now found it telling upon him. All his symptoms were assuming an unfavourable character—loss of appetite, frequent faintings, flesh and strength failing, general debility, and nervous prostration; pains, oppressed breathing, &c. Tonics and quinine administered by two eminent physicians had failed to produce any effect.

Correspondence and advice extended over two years. The patient gradually improved; so much so that he prepared for and took his degree at the London University. He has since gone to Tasmania, where he now resides.

His sister, Mrs. Mayhew, of Southwold, Suffolk, in the letter above referred to, says:—"My brother found your treatment so beneficial. He has by its means been able to successfully combat the disease. He now is at the College in Tasmania as tutor. He is anxious to recommend your medicine to young men there who need it, and would be glad of one of your books."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

Dr. Parker and Dr. Maclaren.

THE Proprietors of the "CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH" have bought the "CHRISTIAN CHRONICLE," and in future the latter will be incorporated in the former, and Dr. PARKER'S verbatim SERMONS will appear weekly in the "Christian Commonwealth."

As DR. MACLAREN'S Sermons will also be continued, this will make a combination unequalled as far as Sermon literature is concerned. It will generally be conceded that these two Preachers stand at the head of the modern pulpit, and that their Sermons alone are worth much more than the price of the paper.

The "CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH" contains also the freshest and best religious news, with a general variety of matter unsurpassed by any other religious journal. Its Leading Articles form a special feature on account of their freshness and independence.

One of the outlying parishes of South London has been witnessing during the recent frost a very pleasing illustration of the "Whosoever will" of the Gospel. A certain Christian Baronet and his lady have given a ready welcome to any man out of work wanting a meal. No questions were asked. Every man who went for it got his bowl of soup and some bread. In this way about 2500 meals were given away. A very short religious service was held as the men stood waiting to be served. It seemed to be much appreciated by many of them. Twopence was given to each as he left, but not before he had been put on his honour not to spend it in the public-house. We cannot but think that such kindness personally administered, and such appeals to their honour, though abused, probably, in some cases, must do great good.

> The "obligation of nobility" extends over everything, when that nobility is oneness with Jesus Christ, the being a limb to that sacred Head, everywhere and always.

We quote this sentence from Rev. H. C. Moule's "Union with Christ," because it reminds us of the vast reservoir of moral power stored up in evangelical doctrines. In this age of action and bustle, we are apt to forget the importance of right doctrine, to go hurriedly to our work before we have learnt lessons that are essential to good service. The doctrine of the believer's oneness with Christ is slighted by some as doctrine too deep or too dry for common use by common men. We need not wonder if this is the case when it is taught as a doctrine, dryly, technically, and theologically, as it sometimes is. How different life would be to many an earnest, but ill-instructed Christian, if this truth were taught him as a simple fact, full of meaning to him, always and everywhere. If the stupendous thought that he is literally joined to Jesus Christ as closely, and vitally, as a limb is joined to a body, became a settled reality in his life, such knowledge, spiritually received, would bring untold peace, and strength, and gladness. But it would do far more: it would impart a grand self-respect. There is a sublime ennoblement in this personal union to the Lord. Never does "the obligation of nobility" urge so powerfully to duty, whether it be high or menial, as when it appeals to one who can say, "I am joined to Jesus Christ for ever and for ever." To realise this truth is to be liberated from self-seeking and meanness.

But, though we thus plead for more doctrinal teaching, we remember the danger of being satisfied with light without heat, and knowledge without love. A clear theology is a priceless boon. The ignorant or the thoughtless only will despise it. To be rooted in central truths, understanding the relations of one to the other, and their foundation in revelation, is an object to be sought with great desire. Still, if the truth we get is not "made life" to us by the Spirit, our knowledge may be a great hindrance to spiritual prosperity. It will be the knowledge that "puffeth up." Probably the best safeguard is seeking Jesus—setting the person of Christ, and our intercourse with Him as a Person, in the middle of all our thinking and doing. "I want Jesus to speak to me," said Miss Havergal, "to say many things to me that I may speak for Him to others with real spiritual power." It is not knowing doctrine, but being with Him, that will give this.

Several Suicides have recently been reported from Monte Carlo, owing to gambling losses.

Rev. E. P. HAMMOND and Mrs. HAMMOND.

Although somewhat tired and wearied with many months of continuous labours in the suburbs of London and elsewhere, these friends, at my solicitation, cheerfully consented to spend a day or two in the country, and to address children and parents. On the evening of last Thursday we had an excellent gathering from our sparsely populated neighbourhood in the Barn, Birchwood, Dedham. From the opening of the meeting, after the solemn invocation of the Holy Spirit by Mr. Hammond, the people seemed to be brought under the power of his beautiful illustrations and soul-stirring appeals; the impression was sustained until the very close. In the after-meeting Mr. Hammond, with two or three Christian friends, had the privilege of dealing with many of the young who were in deep concern about their souls, and of directing them to the loving Saviour who had been so touchingly set forth as crucified for them. I believe I am right in saying that there were very few unmoved hearts and consciences among the whole audience.

So delightfully cheering and encouraging had this meeting proved that Mr. Hammond was led to announce a second meeting for the following evening; and although the congregation was not so large, the results in blessing were in all respects similar to those of the preceding evening. Mrs. Hammond, assisted by a young lady, played and sang some of the beautiful hymns in "Gems of Praise," which are so full of Christ.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Washington Territory, United States, has adopted Local Option.

A Local Veto Bill for Ulster has been prepared by Mr. Johnston, M.P. for Belfast.

It is stated that on the Canadian Pacific Railway only total abstainers are employed.

A clergyman at Madras stated "the vice of intemperance threatens the native church."

The late Earl of Chichester was a warm friend of the Church of England Temperance Society.

Mr. S. A. Blackwood recently stated that the Young Abstainers' Union now numbers nearly 10,000 members.

The Committee of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute, Edinburgh, has decided not to allow the sale of intoxicants at the Home.

Mr. W. Forbes has conducted a mission at Radcliffe, near Manchester. Some notorious drunkards, men and women, took the pledge.

Mr. E. Grubb, of Harrogate, is the only surviving colleague of Joseph Livesey, of Preston. Though 78, he recently spoke at Redcar with great vigour.

An M.P. has taken up the case of Detective Williams, of the Poole case. It is intended to bring pressure to bear on the Home Office in favour of his release.

The House of Commons is being petitioned to cancel an exemption clause in the Truck Act which permits agricultural labourers to be paid partly in cider or beer.

In Cassell's Magazine (March), Mr. H. M. Stanley is cited as having given appalling instances of promising young men at the Congo suddenly cut off through drink.

A writer in The Church of England Temperance Chronicle shows, from his own experience, that "one night a week" given to Temperance work may be of great value.

Earl Granville has forwarded, "for the consideration of the Cape Government," a memorial against legalising the drink traffic in the Transkeian territories sent to him.

The Daily News thinks the restrictive legislation of the last few years is approved by the Canadian people, because either party, when in power, has proposed further restrictions.

A Committee of the Bible Temperance Association has been formed for London and neighbourhood. Its special work is to promote the use of unfermented wine for sacramental uses.

The Manchester Guardian considers the "drink clubs" at Cardiff have made Sunday closing there a failure. When the "publics" close the drink clubs begin, and serve night and day.

At the request of the bishop, Temperance sermons were preached recently in about one hundred churches of the diocese of Down and Connor, and Dromore. On the same day, Temperance sermons were preached in about two hundred and fifty churches in the diocese of Peterborough.

DEATH OF ARCHBISHOP TRENCH.

We regret to announce the death of Archbishop Trench, the late Archbishop of Dublin, which occurred last Sunday morning, at 23, Eaton-square, after a lingering illness. He passed away quietly, surrounded by his family.

Says The Times in a biographical notice: This distinguished divine, Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D., was the second son of Mr. Richard Trench, and was born on September 9, 1807. He graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1829, and was ordained to a curacy under Hugh James Rose, at Hadleigh, Suffolk. He subsequently became incumbent of Curdridge, a chapelry in the extensive parish of Bishop's Waltham, Hants. Dr. Trench was a man of many literary gifts, but it was as a poet, and not as a scholar or divine, that he first attracted attention. Some of his poems are of much beauty, "whose music lingers in the memory, and refuses to be forgotten." The work by which Dr. Trench is most widely known in literature is that entitled, "On the Study of Words," which consisted of five lectures addressed to the pupils of the Diocesan Training Schools, Winchester. It is, perhaps, not too much to say, however, that teachers of all grades have found the volume an invaluable aid both to their own private improvement and to the instruction of their scholars. In 1858, Dr. Trench took up the question of the proposed revision of the Authorised Version of the New Testament; and it may be mentioned that some years afterwards he was selected as one of the editors of the New Commentary on the Bible, proposed by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Upon the death of Dr. Whately, Archbishop of Dublin, in November, 1863, Dean Trench was appointed to the archiepiscopal see. He speedily won golden opinions from all classes of society. He had not long held his high appointment, however, before he was called upon to take a prominent part in the agitation caused by the proposal to disestablish the Irish Church. Mr. Gladstone's measure became law, and in the controversies that ensued in connection with the reconstruction of the Irish Church, the Archbishop took that leading part which naturally devolved upon him as the result of his authority and position. In consequence of ill-health Dr. Trench resigned the Archbishopric in November, 1884.

Dr. Trench leaves behind him an enduring reputation for his uniform courtesy and gentleness, his high-souled and absolute integrity of purpose, his self-abnegation and benevolence, and his deep devotion to the Church of which he was so conspicuous an ornament. His works also give him no inconsiderable place in English literature.

Liverpool Sheltering Homes.—The new report speaks with much satisfaction of the latest batch of youthful emigrants to Canada. Mrs. Birt's great desire now is to send out more. Some of the former boys are said to be anxiously desiring to devote themselves to the work of the ministry. Since last September 150 children have been received into the Homes, which are now full. During last winter a good meat tea and sixpence were given every Wednesday afternoon to 300 poor widows and grannies, through the generous kindness of Mr. Samuel Smith. Mrs. Birt's address is 1, Sugnall-street, Liverpool.

Scottish Home Mission to Jews.—This Mission was established in 1885 by friends of the Jews belonging to various denominations, with the view of promoting the spiritual welfare of those Jews resident in Scotland, and passing through it, as emigrants, from the Continent to America. The importance of the work appears in the fact that there are about eight hundred Jewish families permanently resident, chiefly in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee; several thousands of them annually arrive at Granton and Leith, and, moving westward, leave Glasgow for New York. The Committee have secured the services of Rev. Eliezer Bassin, and have reason to believe that he will approve himself an efficient instrument in God's hand in furthering this work. The Committee appeal to the many friends of the Jews for aid in carrying on and extending the work. The Hon. Secretary is Rev. Robert Henderson, 1, Ventnor-terrace, Edinburgh.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

MR. CLEWORTH IN BRECHIN.

MISSION services in the West Free Church have been nightly attended by large and deeply interested audiences, representing all classes of the community. Mr. Cleworth delivered a farewell address in the West Church on the evening of Sunday week, which was crowded throughout long before the hour announced for the meeting to begin. Many were unable to get even standing space, and had to leave. At the close the audience seemed loth to leave the church, so evident was it that a deep impression for good had been effected. We do not think any evangelist has ever visited Brechin who has been so instrumental in awakening a strong and continued interest in spiritual matters. His sole purpose is evidently to declare the whole counsel of God.—Brechin Advertiser.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

Writing from Houston, Texas, a correspondent of The (New York) Indenendent says:—These brethren closed one of their "Christian Conventions" in this city last night, February 26. The meetings were held in the largest hall in the city. The audiences were composed of all classes: Protestants, Catholics, Jews, white and coloured people of all conditions. A large platform was arranged on one side of the hall for the accommodation of the coloured people, and it was always filled with a very orderly and attentive crowd.

Never before in the history of this city was such a gathering seen. Never before was the simple preaching of the Gospel listened to so attentively by such crowds. It was a grand sight to see nearly 2000 men on one occasion giving such earnest attention to the simple preaching of the Gospel. It was a very great privilege to attend these services, and doubtless great blessings will follow them. During their continuance there were many evidences of the presence of the Spirit. Hundreds rose and asked for prayer, very many attended the inquiry meetings, and some obtained a hope in Christ. We believe that we shall be gathering converts in large numbers in the coming months. The regret is universal that these brethren could not remain longer; but as their appointments were made it was impossible. They begin a similar convention at San Antonio to-morrow.

THE WORK OF GRACE IN ROSS-SHIRE.

The good work is still going on in the village of Avoch and neighbourhood. For nearly four weeks a great many of the fishermen have not been to sea, preferring to attend to their spiritual interests, or desirous of securing the salvation of their relatives. Every week-night the chapel has been crowded. At the close of each meeting anxious ones have waited to be directed to Jesus, and many have professed to have found Him.

A tall, powerful fisherman, who had been one of the best customers of the publicans in the village, has become very bold in the service of his new Master. A few days ago he got hold of a good-sized bell, and brought it into the Manse, that they might ask the Lord to bless his "Bell Mission." After prayer he started out, and, commencing at the one end of the village, he kept ringing and announcing the meeting to be held in the chapel, and paying particular attention to the publicans' shops, where he had spent so much of his money, giving them an extra ring. Having formerly rung the bell for Satan, he was now determined to ring it for the Lord Jesus.

One of the fishermen in the village who belonged to the Royal Reserve Naval Force had been up at Inverness for a few days doing his drill; during his absence his wife had been converted. On his arrival she met him with a beaming countenance, and threw her arms around his neck, crying, "Oh! Sandy, man, there's naething in the world worth having and living for now but Jesus." This was glorious news to him, for the Lord had so arranged it that the very same night she found the Lord at Avoch he had found Him at Inverness. It was truly a joyful meeting.

A delightful feature in the conduct of the young converts is, that they cannot bear the thought that any of their friends should remain unsaved. At the close of one meeting a boy returned to his home, crying very bitterly. His father asked him what was the matter? Looking up in his face, with tears in his eyes, he said, "Father, I'm saved, and mother is saved" (and naming some others in the family who were saved), "but, father, you're not saved, and how can I help crying?" MR. W. D. DUNN IN AIRDRIE.

This evangelist commenced meetings here on March 14 through the Christian Mission. Having been much used of the Lord five years ago in Airdrie, he got the ear of the people to begin with. The largest hall in the place was packed with 1400 people. As the meetings went on, the tide of blessing came flowing in upon us, so that a rich harvest of precious souls has been gathered in, to the praise of God's great name. The meetings here for Christians have been very large, and wonderfully used of God. Many believers have been quickened, and sent out to do active work for the Master. D. J. H.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE IN DONCASTER.

A very successful fortnight's mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. has been concluded, and the hearts of Christians are filled with praise to God, whose power has been conspicuously manifested. The week-night meetings have been well attended, and on the Sundays hundreds were unable to gain admittance to the Guildhall.

"How do the converts stand?" is a question often asked, and not always easily answered; but here the permanence of the work has been very satisfactory, for many of the most earnest workers in this mission were converted during Mr. J. M. Scroggie's first visit in 1875. I have before me now a list of seventy people, almost all of whom I dealt with personally, during a week's services held here by the same evangelist in June, 1883. Of these 47 are stedfast, 16 are either doubtful or unknown to me personally, or have left the town, three have drifted, and four have gone to heaven after giving glorious testimony to the Redeemer's faithfulness. Many converts speak of the great blessing and help in the new life received from Mr. Scroggie's little book, "Not Condemned."

To-night a praise meeting has been held, and the testimonies of about thirty present who can now for the first time realise that Christ is their living, personal Saviour, were most touching and cheering. Many Christian workers also spoke of the blessing received during this mission.

MR. AITKEN IN CAMBRIDGE.

Mr. Aitken's Mission was brought to a close on Monday week. During the nine days of his visit the attendance at all the services was large, sometimes very large indeed, and all that I have seen and heard assures me that the blessing of God has rested on the full and powerful proclamation of the need of Christ and the reality of Christ. The afternoon series of addresses on the Spiritual Life, open to all, was full of comprehensive and admirably stated truth. The evening services were for the University specially, though a good many outsiders were present. An after-meeting in the church was always held, and on Thursday Mr. Aitken also invited any who specially sought to decide, or to seek decision, to go into the vestry and meet him there, while Mr. Barton closed the meeting in the church. Many answered the invitation, and I personally know of some deeply interesting cases of thorough conviction and apparent genuine conversion, due to that night or the following ones, under God; the men, in some instances, being intellectually distinguished. In some cases, intense conviction seemed for the time to stop there, and for these I would very specially ask your readers' prayers. The close of Term, dispersing the University, has made the work of following up very difficult. The address on Saturday evening, on "Social Purity," was in the highest degree admirable; powerful and suggestive as a piece of calm yet intensely heartfelt reasoning, and closing with an indescribably moving appeal to make the Lord Jesus Christ, accepted and submitted to, the one secret of victory.

One afternoon St. Benet's Church was crowded by a congregation of young ladies. Mr. Aitken, speaking specially as to lady students, dealt, I am told, in a singularly sympathetic yet powerful way, with mental unbelief. "The very thing, wanted just now," was the remark of one lady student afterwards.

I could say much of the intellectual impression made by the Missioner; it would not be too much to say that the average mental excellence of the University sermons of a Term is distinctly below that of this series of mission addresses. A very general interest in the mission has been felt through the University, among senior as well as junior men. A good many seniors were seen, first and last, at the services, though it would have been welcome to see many more.—Correspondent of The Record.

INDIANA.

The winter has been characterised in this part of the country by unusual outpourings of the Holy Spirit. Large numbers have been added to the various churches, and this has not been in the use of any extraordinary means, but largely through the faithful and prayerful use of the ordinary means of grace. In one town in our State, Connorsville, a place of, perhaps, 5000 inhabitants, there have been in the neighbourhood 700 conversions. The work began before the holidays, in the Methodist Church. At the solicitation of their pastor, the members gathered in a meeting of consecration, and from that time on there has been a continual ingathering. A great many other places have experienced times of refreshing.

At Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 16th inst., there is to be a Conference of Presbyterian Ministers and Elders, from the adjoining region, the object being to pray for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in still more abundant measure.

Thus, while wickedness prevails on all sides, there is much to encourage the believer.

MESSRS. JONES AND SMALL IN CHICAGO.

The opening of the meetings of Messrs. Jones and Small, in Chicago, for which great preparation had been made, was as successful as the evangelists could have desired. Their work in Cincinnati had thoroughly advertised them. Mr. Small had drawn large and interested audiences to his noonday meetings, which were designed to be of a preparatory character, and both church-going and non-church-going Chicago were anxious to hear the unique evangelists. Three services were held on the first Sunday in the Chicago Avenue Church, in the morning, and in the Casino Rink in the afternoon and evening. Mr. Jones preached thrice, and Mr. Small also preached in the evening in the Chicago Avenue Church. The subject of Mr. Jones's morning sermon was "Spiritual Light." The subject of the afternoon sermon was "Well Doing," and of the evening, "God's Promises." He held his audiences in breathless attention, and swayed them at will. All the services are well attended, and the public interest increases rather than diminishes day by day. Mr. Jones, at the close of his first week, feels greatly encouraged, and declares that he never had more promising meetings.—New York Independent.

Messrs. Mateer and Parker have visited Flint, Michigan. A local paper reports full and impressive meetings.

Mr. George Muller in Sydney.—A Sydney correspondent writing on February 2, says, Mr. Müller had a good reception here last week. He attended and spoke at a holiness meeting in our York-street Church one day, and preached in the principal Presbyterian and Congregational churches on the Sabbath.

Radcliffe, near Manchester.—Mr. Thomas Eyres, of the Children's Evangelistic Mission, London, conducted a children's mission at Radcliffe during the last fortnight, ending on Saturday, March 27. The meetings were well attended, and a good work was done. At the after-meetings, many anxious ones remained to be conversed with.

Corsham, Wilts.—Mr. John Elliott has been conducting evangelistic services in this town and neighbourhood over two months. Some are now rejoicing in the Lord who at first came out of mere curiosity, or because other people came. Some backsliders have been restored, and are now doing their best to win others to Christ.

Leeds.—Mr. W. Smith, evangelist from Belfast, has concluded a month's mission in connection with the Baptist Churches at Burley-road, Hunslet, and York-road, Leeds. These services have been richly blessed. Despite the severe snowstorms and inclement weather, many persons assembled to hear the word of God and to seek his face. The work at Burley-road and Hunslet was specially encouraging.

Llantwit Major, Cowbridge.—Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission here which has been attended with great success. The interest taken by the people of the town and neighbourhood grew from beginning to end. Mr. Notman is a very able evangelist; his addresses were most interesting and profitable. Some have confessed Christ, and the churches have been revived.

Plymouth.—Mr. Cook's mission schooner Mystery put into Plymouth a week or two since. Every day Gospel meetings have been held, and tea provided for the fishermen present. On Saturday week about sixty men came on board, chiefly from the East Country boats. The majority proved to be Christians, and an experience meeting was held. It was indeed cheering to hear the testimony of these hardy toilers.

Devonport. G. E. W.

Ellon, N.B.—Sabbath, March 21, brought to a close a series of evangelistic services, held here under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The services have been conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith, of the Banffshire Gospel Mission, and have been greatly owned and blessed by God. Not a meeting has been held at which some have not waited for personal conversation. Fourteen young men have become members of the Y.M.C.A., and more are expected to join. R. R.

MR. SPURGEON AND HIS TABERNACLE.

THEIR SILVER WEDDING.

LAST Thursday was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening for public worship of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. It is a good thing for any church to find occasion for thanksgiving; in the twenty-five years of its memorable history the great church at Newington-causeway has had experience of God's goodness sufficient to keep it praising Him for the next twenty-five. Mr. Spurgeon, therefore, did well to set up a special Ebenezer on Thursday, albeit he and his people had no intention of being contented with the mercies of the past; they look upon it as a fresh starting-point for an onward march in the service of the King.

The worthy pastor of the Tabernacle had plenty of comrades and fellow-workers on Thursday evening, to join him in his tributes of thanksgiving. There was a largely attended praise meeting at six o'clock in one of the basement rooms, and at the seven o'clock service in the great building the congregation was immense. We should have been glad to see present many of Mr. Spurgeon's neighbour ministers of all denominations to share in the common joy of the occasion, but we suppose they were busy at their own work. Probably no invitations were sent out, but we are sure they would have been welcome and it would have been a becoming thing. When one church rejoices, all the others should surely rejoice with it; no doubt they do, though they were not there to say so.

The prayers and praises at the early meeting were very hearty and very representative. Some of the elders and deacons led off the chorus; then came the Sunday-school superintendent, four of the college students, followed by some of the members of the church; and last of all, as representing outside friends, the voices of Mr. Henry Varley and Mr. David McLaren chimed in with those that had gone before. All were unfeignedly thankful to God for the great blessing He had bestowed on the church in giving it such a pastor, and crowning his labours with such abundant success. It was touching to hear some venerable fathers pouring out their heart's praises for the rich blessing that had come to their families through Mr. Spurgeon's public ministry. One of the members (a rough diamond, judging by his diction, but a real one) took the meeting into his confidence as he exclaimed in his prayer: "Father, do save our unsaved ones. I was talking to one of mine last night, and, bless Thy name, she told me she has given her heart to Thee. Bless the Lord! She will soon be a member here, I believe, but best of all she is a member of Christ."

In the course of the hour Mr. Spurgeon remarked that he had been in the pastorate for thirty-two years, but twenty-five years had passed since God gave them, without debt, that immense structure. It had been a kind of nest egg from which the Almshouses, the College, the Orphanages, and many other good works had sprung. Ever since the Tabernacle was built, he said, we have found the people anxious to hear the word of God. We have not verified the predictions of the prophets that it would be a nine days' wonder, and that after a short time we would need to make the place smaller. I cannot help saying that I feel it a peculiar source of thanksgiving that during all these years we have had no division, and no strife; nobody has quarrelled with me—indeed, I do not know that I have ever quarrelled with anybody in my life. I very much question whether any pastorate of the same length could have been spent more happily than mine has been. I know that I should be as ugly and cantankerous as any man if I were left alone, but I am not alone. As one instance of God's goodness at that particular time, Mr. Spurgeon said that a Chancery law-suit in which he was concerned, that had been going on for five and a half years, had been finished up satisfactorily the day before. He hoped if any persons purposed leaving money for any of the works with which he was connected they would make a clear will, and he would beseech them not to make him an executor. Ministers of the Gospel have enough to do without that kind of thing.

As we have said, the meeting in the Tabernacle was a very large one. The hymns sung, the Scriptures read, the petitions offered, all partook of the nature of praise. Finally Mr. Spurgeon preached a most characteristic discourse from Ps. xl. 9—11. He dwelt on the fact that by the grace of God he had been enabled all these years to sound forth a continual testimony to the simple, saving truth of God's Word; and he had some severe things to say about those who use the Scripture as a stalking horse for the promulgation of their own opinions and speculations. "The great congregation" to which he had preached suggested many practical thoughts both as to the delight and the responsibility of his office. Lastly he desired for the future, whether his time of service were to be long or short, an interest in the Psalmist's prayer: "Withhold not Thou thy tender mercies from me, O Lord; let thy lovingkindness and thy truth preserve me." That prayer will be offered on his behalf, we doubt not, by multitudes who were not in the Tabernacle on Thursday evening, but who feel that his pastorate is something like a world-wide possession. It is eminently true of Mr. Spurgeon that the world is his parish.

LIVINGSTONIA.

THERE is no name in connection with the foreign mission field that kindles a warmer, deeper interest than that of the Lake Nyassa mission, which is named after the intrepid pioneer missionary, David Livingstone, whose career will ever be associated with the no longer Dark Continent of Africa. The particulars concerning this mission given at a meeting held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Friday evening last, were such as to greatly intensify this interest.

The chair was occupied by Dr. Oswald Dykes, who stated that this mission was originated and is carried on by the Free Church of Scotland as a fitting memorial of Livingstone. Though stations had been planted here and there, they had scarcely yet come face to face with the true problem presented to them. Generations must pass away before they could hope to overtake the vast multitudes of people, who, with unknown tongues, were the descendants of people who for centuries had been absolutely untouched by the civilisation of other lands.

Dr. George Smith (Secretary of the Foreign Missions of the Free Church of Scotlaand) said at Mildmay it ought to be a fact of great interest that Livingstone was a personal friend of William Pennefather's, and that both were taken home very nearly at the same time, in May, 1873. After referring to the achievements of Livingstone, Dr. Smith went on to describe the commencement of the work by Mr. (now Dr) Laws, and what had been accomplished in the eleven years that had passed away. The history of the Lake Nyassa Mission afforded instances of true Christian heroism worthy to be put by the side of those grand old men who, in the cause of Christ, perished amid the barbarism of the middle ages. Even in their own mission, which had been highly favoured by God, out of a staff of thirty-six persons they had lost in ten years no less than eight, besides many others permanently invalided by the evil effects of the climate. He concluded a stirring address by pointing to what had been accomplished in foreign mission work since Carey wrote his pamphlet exactly 100 years ago. Even now, however, in many places the Church was only beginning to touch the vast fields open to her, so slow had she been in fulfilling her duty.

Dr. Laws gave a most interesting account of the progress of the mission since its commencement in 1875, describing not only happy villages, but some occasionally met with utterly deserted, because of the merciless severity of slave traders, whose fiendish cruelty was attested by the skeletons still to be seen amid the wreck of their former habitations. He described the mission work in its various features—educational, medical, and evangelistic. As showing how the Gospel was spreading amongst these lately debased and ignorant peoples, he mentioned that on one Sunday, when he relieved the carpenter who conducted a service at a certain place, a young native, who had already been preaching the Gospel at two other places, was prepared to take that service also, knowing the carpenter was unable to do so through fever. Though it was often the case that the native converts could neither read nor write, it was remarkable how readily they seized upon the leading points of any Gospel story, and how vividly they could repeat it. Every hour (said Dr. Laws in closing) 720 of our fellow-men die in Africa, and of these only two have ever had the opportunity of hearing about Jesus.

Rescue Work in Poplar.—Mrs. Wilkes, Manor Cottage, Kerby-street, Poplar, E., says, in a recent letter, thanking our readers for their help:—God alone knows how hard the struggle has been to keep on this terrible winter. I never had so hard a one as this has been—such numbers seeking for admission; girls of all ages coming for shelter. For want of means and room I have had to refuse them day after day.

The Book World.

An Exposition of the New Testament. By Matthew Henry. Vol. ii. Matthew, chaps. xviii.—xxviii., Mark, chaps. i.—ix. Thomas C. Jack. Matthew Henry's Commentary is too well known to need any reference to the work itself; but, in this new, handy, and carefully-prepared edition, students of the Word have a real boon conferred on them.

Thoughts for Young Men from Many Points of View. By John Charles Ryle, D D., Lord Bishop of Liverpool. 1s. William Hunt & Co. This little volume is worth its weight in gold. It is rich in counsel and solemn in warning. Fathers should buy it for their sons, and young men in the strain and stress of life's battle would do well to listen to its teaching.

Queen Victoria: Scenes and Incidents of Her Life and Reign. By T. Frederick Ball 2s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. At a price within the reach of nearly all, even in these times, handsomely got up, and coming just at the right time, this book will be eagerly read by young and old for its faithful picture of the life of our good Queen. Nothing seems to be left out that should be known. The book ought to find its way into thousands of English homes.

Popular Literature. The neat and well-printed threepenny volumes of standard works, now being published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. as their National Library, are of wonderful value. "The Ten Years' Imprisonment of Silvio Pellico," "Latimer's Sermons," and Scott's "Lady of the Lake," are among the latest issues.——Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. are following in the wake of Messrs. Cassell, with a Popular Library of Literary Treasures, also at 3d. They have issued two vols., "Representative Men, and English Traits," by Emerson, and four Essays by Macaulay. Who need be without a library now?

The Testimony of the Temple to the Truth and Nature of Christianity, and to the Unmistakable Meaning of Christ's words to Peter, which annihilate the Peter-rock Pretension, the True Source of the Irish Difficulty. By "A Workman." 1s. 6d. Elliot Stock. This is a curious but interesting pamphlet. It shows traces of wide reading, and is filled with an earnest purpose. It is fanciful, but its writer never allows his imagination to run away with his judgment. He is emphatic in declaring Christ to be the one Rock of salvation, and hits hard at the Romish figment of making Peter the rock on which the spiritual temple should be built.

The New Sacerdotalism and the New Puritanism; a Discourse delivered before the Congregational Union of England and Wales. By Rev. Principal Fairbairn. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton. The Committee of the Congregational Union were wise in publishing Dr. Fairbairn's address in a form more permanent than a newspaper report. The address glows with brilliant thoughts brilliantly expressed. It shows clearly how Sacerdotalism magnifies the Church and Puritanism magnifies God; and it sets before Christian workers the high ideal of making it manifest that "they claim every man in England for Christ, and mean every man to feel what the grace of God signifies for him."

Belaying-Pin Gospel; or, Cruelties Inflicted on Seamen upon the High Seas and in many Ports. Written and compiled by Edward W. Matthews, Secretary of the British & Foreign Sailors' Society. 1s. S. W. Partridge & Co. A pamphlet well fitted to startle the reading public and to curdle the blood of humanity at the horrors of a sailor's life. Mr Matthews produces an array of stubborn facts not to be gainsaid. It seems incredible that the punishments inflicted on board the Gatherer and the J. F. Chapman could have been devised by human beings; but the facts are too well authenticated to be doubted. Let readers get the book. Sir Thomas Brassey's name is nobly connected with the work of ameliorating the sailor's condition, and at the end of his book the author gives some valuable suggestions. It is to be hoped that the matter will receive the fullest attention and inquiry.

A Cyclopædia within the reach of all, in portable and handy form, has long been a desideratum, and Cassell's Concise Cyclopædia, which meets this want, has been so successful that the publishers have arranged for the issue of a new and revised edition, the first part of which is to be published this month. This remarkable work contains nearly 12,000 distinct articles on History, Biography, Geography, Mythology, Topography, Science, &c., and is complete in one volume. With a view of demonstrating how instruction and recreation can be successfully combined, Messrs Cassell & Co. are about to publish a new issue, in monthly parts, of The World of Wonders.

Letters to the Editor.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.

Sir,—Without in any way depreciating the prophetic researches and opinions of those who took part in the recent Second Advent Conference at Mildmay, I should be glad, in common, doubtless, with others likeminded, to have the opinion of some of those brethren in reference to the absolute silence of our Lord on the subject of the restoration of the Jews to their own land, and also the same marked absence of any reference to it on the part of the Apostles in their several epistles.

The Apostle Paul in the eleventh chapter of Romans very clearly refers to the reception of the Gospel by the Jews as the means of their restoration to the Divine favour, but as regards their re-occupation of Palestine, the New Testament is ominously silent.—Yours faithfully, Inquirer.

[The answer is very simple. The Gospel proclaims to Jew and Gentile "a better resurrection"—"unto which promise," says Paul, "our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come." Abraham and all believing Israelites desired "a better country, that is an heavenly." But that does not make the promises of God of none effect. The question is not whether the New Testament is silent, ominously or otherwise; but whether God ever once promised to restore the people to the land and the land to the people. If He said it only once (Ezek. xxxvi. 24), He will fulfil his word, for He is "God who cannot lie" (Titus i. 2). —Ed.]

PARIS UNDER THE REPUBLIC.

Dear Sir,—Kindly bear a little protest against the inference to be drawn from a paragraph in The Christian of March 18, in which a quotation is made from The Fortnightly Review. The intention of the article referred to is, I suppose, to lead people to believe that Paris is naturally going down under a Republican form of Government. The reverse is the fact, as everyone will admit who has not a purpose to serve in discrediting the Republic.

The last sentence in your paragraph contains the refutation of its intention to those who really know what the quoted words mean. When the writer says: "Paris, once the brightest of cities, has taken on a listless, dispirited air, and is in 'decline in a manner painful to see,'" he means that the dissolute wealthy do not congregate in Paris as they did under the Empire. We ought to thank God for it.

Let anyone compare what is said on Mr. Walter Besant's testimony in your next paragraph about the behaviour of Londoners on a Bank Holiday with what may be seen by anyone all day long, and everywhere, on the Fête of the Republic, and they will soon see where Paris has lost and gained by its change from the Empire to the Republic. On the occasion of one of these fêtes, Pastor Monod's little daughter wanted to see the President of the Republic. Some one asked her next day if her wish was gratified. "No," she replied, "I did not see the President, but I think I saw the Republic." If anyone will reflect on the profound meaning there was in this utterance of the little seer, they will see that nothing can be more untrue than to say: "Paris has taken on a listless, dispirited air, and is in decline in a manner painful to see."

Yours faithfully, Richard Heath.

30, Rochester-square, Camden-road.

In a subsequent letter, our good friend Mr. Heath takes exception to the quotation in our last issue from The Birmingham Daily Post, as to the condition of Paris during the Carnival:—The statement gives a totally false impression of the fact. The writer rests all his assertions on the pictures for the week in the Journal Amusant and the Vie Parisienne. I know the latter journal, and I venture to say the former is akin to it. The Vie Parisienne is not a serious journal, that is, it does not pretend to give facts. What should you say of anyone drawing serious conclusions concerning the manners of middle-class Londoners from Ally Sloper's Half Holiday, as I think the publication is called. Vie Parisienne is a much more depraved publication, but its basis of fact is of the same order. Under the old régime Paris really was a hateful city—the abode of all unclean things, and I doubt not the tradition remains, and is represented in some foul corners to-day; but I venture to say that experienced residents know nothing of the imaginary Paris of this Birmingham correspondent.

LONDON DRUNKERIES.

Dear Sir,—I can fully endorse the statements made in The Christian of March 18 on this subject. Within a short distance of my own home is one of these poisonous institutions, known as a Workmen's Club, numbering many hundred members. This institution has become the deadly upas-tree of the locality. Each member, on a trifling monthly payment of a few pence, has the right to enter and purchase any amount of intoxicants during prohibited hours. He can take in a so-called friend, and procure for him any drink as well, on condition that the money pass from the member to the bar. I need hardly say what drunkenness and dissipation are the outcome.

It is high time that something should be done by our legislators to stop such evils; but how can it be done unless they also deal with the clubs of the rich?—Yours faithfully,

Jabez Bennington.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

Sir,—During the past week the Court of Queen's Bench has given a most important judgment in favour of the friends of Morality and Social Purity. The new Criminal Law Amendment Act has not, hitherto, had fair play. The division of opinion held amongst magistrates, concerning their ability to grant a summons against the keepers of immoral houses, has been to blame for this. Certain magistrates have maintained that repressive action could only be taken by the vestries.

Mr. Kerwin, Mr. Charrington's valued coadjutor, made application to the local magistrate for a summons against a certain house in the East-end. Mr. Lushington, the magistrate in question, dismissed a summons, granted by another magistrate, on the grounds above referred to; but on the application of Mr. Kerwin, granted a case for the higher court. The decision of that Court has just been given, which, apart from legal technicalities, is that in the event of any ratepayer presenting sufficient evidence before a magistrate as to the character of a house, he, the magistrate, is bound to grant a summons against the keeper of the house. This decision applies with equal force against either owner, occupier, or agent. This decision cannot be too widely made known, as it will be seen that it places in the hands of every ratepayer the power to repress at once these criminal houses.

This case was undertaken at the instance of the National Vigilance Association, the value of whose work cannot be overstated. Any information can be obtained of Mr. W. A. Coote, the Secretary, 36, Strand, W.C. I may mention that the case was most ably argued by Mr. Costelloe, a member of the Association.—Yours very truly,

Henry Varley.

Cheltenham.—Mission services have been held in connection with the Y.M. and Y.W. Christian Associations in this town, as well as a Conference on March 23. The evening meeting of the Conference will not be soon forgotten, and the effect, I trust, never lost. It was a meeting of acknowledged power, as were all the others. While giving thanks for such meetings, let prayer go up to God that He would send forth many such men of valour and spiritual power, through the length and breadth of this land to arouse and awake the slumbering church to her responsibilities. D. A.

A Home for Young Women has now been planted in Bedminster, a part of Bristol in which it was greatly needed. It is five minutes' walk, or little more, from the United Railway Station at Templemead, and is situated in Redcliff-crescent. A suitable person is appointed to visit the railway trains, and good work of a preventive character has already been done. This branch of the Y.W.C.A. includes a Registry for servants. Its usefulness must of course largely depend upon the amount of assistance it receives; if the ladies who reside in the neighbourhood of the Home will give it their support its success will be assured.

Domestic Service.—The question—"Why women hate domestic service?" says The Pall Mall Gazette, "was lately discussed at the New Century Guild in Philadelphia by intelligent young women, few of whom, probably, are able to save as much money every year from their pay as girls can do in domestic service. The objections briefly stated were these: "You can never have any time to yourself, from getting up in the morning until bedtime; it is accounted a sin in many families if 'the girl' is seen sitting down with unoccupied hands. That is the signal for the mistress to find her something else to do, so that there shall never be a minute when that girl can rest until bedtime or her 'day out' comes. The servants' sleeping-room is usually a poor place, ill-furnished, especially in bathing comfort; the coldest room in winter, and the hottest in summer. Yet most mistresses watch with suspicion the few minutes any girl would spend up there unless on her 'afternoon out.' In a store, or even in going out sewing by the day, our evenings are our own, and our room, when we get to it, is really home. Girls are not expected to have home feeling in service."

Requests for Prayer.

THAT a brother who is ruining his health by strong drink may be led to give it up.——For the conversion of all my children, now separated in many lands.——Very earnest prayer is requested by the mother of a young man who has become a Roman Catholic, that God would give him to see the errors of Popery.——For Gospel services by Opie Rodway, at Claremont Chapel, Bath, April 3–6. Also for services at Thrissell-street Baptist Chapel, April 10–15.——For blessing on evangelistic efforts, and the giving away of tracts at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, on Sunday afternoons.

Scripture Union portions for the ensuing week.—April 4, John xi. 32—46; April 5, xi. 47—57; April 6, xii. 1—19; April 7, xii. 20—36; April 8, xii. 37—50; April 9, xiii. 1—19; April 10, xiii. 20—38.

Clapham Gospel Male Choir.—Mr. Burrow having resigned his connection with the above, all communications should be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. H. W. Heathcote, 40, Parma-crescent, Lavender Sweep, S.W.

The Obituary of the past week includes the names of Rev. J. Guttridge, Free Church Methodist, Manchester, aged 67; Rev. W. Hockin, chaplain of the Devon and Exeter Hospital, aged 88; Prebendary Jackson, rector of Stoke Newington, aged 73; and Rev. Dr. McLauchlan, of Free St. Columba's, Edinburgh, one of the pre-Disruption ministers.

In Northeast, Penn., three of the churches—Baptist, Presbyterian, and Methodist—united in special effort under Evangelist Clark Willson. More than two hundred and fifty persons have publicly sought Christ, besides many children. Mr. Willson is assisted in singing by his wife, a sister of the lamented P. B. Bliss. The winter will mark a turning-point in the history of the community, though the town is about sixty years old.

Mr. Stead is still receiving many letters from all parts of the world on the subject of the Purity Crusade. Last week he received a very handsome album, containing the signatures of over two hundred women and girls residing in Copenhagen, all of whom were anxious to do something "in recognition of the services rendered by Mr. Stead to the cause of womanhood throughout the world." This is the second mark of esteem which the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette has received from Scandinavia, the first having been sent by the ladies of Sweden.—Methodist Times.

Thanksgiving.—Will your readers join in praising God for the many souls converted at the Conference Hall, Clapham, during a mission extending over a year and a quarter. Letters and living testimonies have been abundant. Hundreds have received Christ; "the day" will fully declare all. I have avoided making public special cases, and giving numbers, but I cannot withhold this acknowledgment of the good hand of the Lord in connection with the work.

Herbert R. Francis.

The Hackney and Clapton Y.W.C.A.—The first annual report of this Association tells with gratitude of a most successful year. The present number of associates is 113, and the attendances during December amounted to more than four hundred. Classes of various kinds are held almost every evening, and are largely attended. An excellent library has been formed, and the Committee believe "that the same gracious God who prompted his servants to commence this work, and has blessed them in it, will continue to guide and help them in the future." The sympathy and counsel of the Resident Superintendent, Miss Myers, is alluded to as being greatly appreciated by the members.

Irish Emigration.—Dear Sir,—This neighbourhood, in common with other parts of Ireland, is suffering from depression in trade and agriculture, and many are unemployed. A number of young men and women of good character (Protestants and Roman Catholics) are anxious to proceed to Australia on the favourable terms now granted, and my daughter, Miss Dobbs, will be very thankful to receive help, in money or clothes, towards outfits and other necessary expenses. Some of the intending emigrants will be able to contribute the sums required, but others are quite destitute; and in addition to the amount of local collections about £20 will be needed. R. S. Dobbs, Major-General.

Knockdolian, Greystones, co. Wicklow.

House of Rest in Bath.—A new branch of evangelical work has recently been started in Bath, by the purchase of Brunswick House, Brunswick-place, as a House of Rest for Christian workers of all denominations. A meeting was lately held, at which Dr. Prankerd presided. The idea originated with Mr. E. L. Hamilton, who last autumn became acquainted with the Houses of Rest carried on at Kilburn and Eastbourne by Miss Mason. The house has been already purchased for £250 (a thank-offering), the smallness of the sum being due to the heavy ground-rent of £28 a year, which it is proposed to pay off either by voluntary gifts or, in default of those, by raising a loan. When fully acquired the property will be placed in the hands of trustees. Mr. Hamilton narrated the facts, saying that the whole work was the result of prayer. Miss Mason was present and gave an interesting account of the origin and progress of her work. Revs. J. A. Jacob and C. C. Layard were also present, and warmly approved of the scheme, pointing to the Christian unity that would be promoted by the meeting together in the same house of workers of all denominations.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, APRIL 4.—DEUT. XVIII.

6.—If a Levite come from any of thy gates . . . where he sojourned.—"The Levites had indeed 'no part or inheritance with Israel,' but they might individually possess property, and, in fact, often did so. Thus, Abiathar owned certain 'fields' (1 Kings ii. 26), and Jeremiah bought a field of his uncle (xxxii. 7), and in later times, 'Barnabas, a Levite, having land, sold it' (Acts iv. 36). The Levite who desired to settle at the place of the Sanctuary, would probably sell his patrimony when quitting his former home. The text directs that he should, notwithstanding any such private resources, duly enjoy his share of the perquisites provided for the ministers at the Sanctuary, and as he was 'waiting at the altar' should be 'partaker with the altar' (1 Cor. ix. 13)."—Sp. Com.

11.—A necromancer.—Literally, "one who makes inquiry of the dead." Modern "spiritualism" is thus described as "an abomination unto the Lord."

13.—Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God.—The word "perfect," here means (as frequently elsewhere) upright, sincere, or, as perhaps would best express its meaning here, whole-hearted; so that no disloyal tampering with the false gods of heathenism could be tolerated.

15.—A prophet from the midst of thee . . . like unto me.—Most modern German commentators explain this of the prophetic office in general, i.e., of the whole body of the prophets, including Christ, but not exclusively of Him. The language, however, plainly points to one individual, and Acts iii. 2, and vii. 37 (not to speak of Matt. xvii. 5; John v. 46) leave no doubt as to who is intended. "The direct and exclusive reference of this promise to the Messiah was the prevailing opinion of the early Church."—Keil.

22.—If the thing follow not.—Evidences arising from the fulfilment of prophecy are here placed above those from miracles, for (xiii. 2) "a sign or wonder" might be wrought by a false prophet, but the fulfilment of his prediction is here made the test of the true prophet.

MONDAY, APRIL 5.—DEUT. XIX.

From ver. 1 to 13 relates to the cities of refuge, and in some particulars is supplemental to Numbers xxxv. 9—34.

3.—Thou shalt prepare thee a way.—"It was the duty of the senate to make the roads that led to the cities of refuge convenient by repairing them annually in the month Adar, and removing every obstruction. No hillock was left, no river, over which there was not a bridge; and the road was at least thirty-two cubits broad. At cross roads there were posts bearing the words, Refuge, Refuge, to guide the fugitive in his flight. It seems as if in Isa. xl. 34, the imagery were borrowed from the preparation of the ways to the cities of refuge."—Sp. Com.

9.—Three cities more beside these three.—"Provision is here made for the anticipated enlargement of the borders of Israel to the utmost limits promised by God, from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates (Gen. xv. 18; Exod. xxiii. 31). Had Israel 'succeeded' to the heathen, and 'dwelt in their place' throughout all the regions assigned by God's covenant with their fathers, the nine cities of refuge, which are contemplated by this passage before us, would certainly have been needed."—Ibid.

14.—Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark.—The prohibition against removing a neighbour's landmark is inserted here (amongst warnings against blood-guiltiness), on account of the close connection in which a man's possession, as the means of his support, stood to the life of the man himself. "Property by which life is supported participates in the sacredness of life itself."—Schultz.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7.—DEUT. XX.

"The instructions in this chapter have reference to the wars which Israel might wage in future against non-Canaanitish nations, and enjoin it as a duty upon the people of God to spare as much as possible the lives of their own soldiers, and also of their enemies."—Keil.

2.—The priest shall approach.—"Not the high priest, but one appointed for the purpose, and called, according to the Rabbins, 'the Anointed of the War.' Thus Phinehas went with the warriors to fight against Midian (Num. xxxi. 6. See 1 Sam. iv. 4, 11; 2 Chron. xiii. 12)."—Sp. Com.

5.—Built a new house and hath not dedicated it.—"The Rabbins elaborated special ceremonies, among which Jonathan in his Targum describes the fastening of slips with sentences out of the law written upon them to the door-post as being the most important."—Keil.

7.—What man is he that hath betrothed a wife.—"The intention of these instructions was . . . to avoid depriving any member of the covenant nation of his enjoyment of the good things of this life bestowed upon him by the Lord."—Ibid.

11.—If it make thee answer of peace.—The principle here laid down as to the siege of towns (other than those of Canaan) is reproduced in Matt. x. 13 and Luke x. 5. both as to towns and houses, in connection with the mission of the twelve and of the seventy. The difference is that where the message of peace was refused, Israel was to "smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword;" but the ministers of the Gospel are not themselves to execute judgment upon the cities or houses that reject them, but only to "shake off the dust of their feet as a testimony against them," leaving the actual vengeance for the day of judgment (Matt. x. 14, 15)

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7.—DEUT. XXI.

1.—If one be found slain in the land.—The sanctity of human life in God's sight is strikingly shown by the ceremony described in these first nine verses. In our judicial system, if no evidence of the crime were forthcoming, no guilt would attach to anyone. Not so, however, in God's land, where the elders of the nearest city must purge themselves from suspicion by a public profession of their innocence, otherwise "the guilt of innocent blood" (ver. 9) would lie at their door.

6.—Shall wash their hands over the heifer.—"The elders were to perform the act of expiation in the name of the city. As the murderer was not to be found, an animal was to be put to death in his stead, and suffer the punishment of the murderer. The slaying of the animal was not an expiatory sacrifice, and consequently there was no shedding and sprinkling of the blood; but, as the mode of death, viz., breaking the neck (see Exodus xiii. 13) clearly shows, it was a symbolical infliction of the punishment that should have been borne by the murderer upon the animal which was substituted for him."—Keil. R.V. reads, "break the heifer's neck" (ver. 4), so also "The Speaker's Commentary." The washing the hands was a most expressive sign of innocence (see Ps. xxvi. 6), but it was a true sign only where innocence was real. Pilate's washing his hands (Matt. xxvii. 24) did not make him innocent. So is it with the sacramental washing of baptism; where there is repentance and faith it is a true sign, not otherwise. It conveys no washing to the soul, but testifies to the reality of the washing where or when the conditions contemplated exist.

18.—If a man hath a stubborn and rebellious son.—"The elders acted as magistrates in causes of a domestic character, . . . but the extreme and irresponsible power of life and death, conceded by the law of Rome and other heathen nations, is withheld from the Israelite father."—Sp. Com.

23.—He that is hanged is accursed of God.—"Our Lord had undergone that punishment, which under the law betokened the curse of God. So far He had become 'a curse.' But He was in no literal sense 'accursed of God,' and St. Paul (Gal. iii. 13) instinctively omits those words ('of God'), which do not strictly apply, and which, if added, would have required some qualification."—Bishop Lightfoot.

THURSDAY, APRIL 8.—DEUT. XXII.

The first eight verses contain four precepts in direct opposition to that selfish spirit of independence which prides itself in minding its own business, and in not concerning itself about its neighbour. The New Testament counterpart is, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others" (Phil. ii. 4).

5.—The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man.—"Not only his dress, but all that specially pertains distinctively to his sex; arms," &c.—Sp. Com. "The immediate design of this prohibition was not to prevent licentiousness, or to oppose idolatrous practices; but to maintain the sanctity of that distinction of the sexes which was established by the creation of man and woman, and in relation to which Israel was not to sin. Every violation or wiping out of this distinction was unnatural, and therefore an abomination in the sight of God."—Keil.

6.—If a bird's nest chance to be before thee.—"The affectionate relation of parents to their young, which God had established even in the animal world, was also to be kept just as sacred."—Ibid.

8.—Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof.—"The roofs of houses in Palestine were flat, and used for various domestic purposes: for drying linen or flax (Josh. ii. 6); for walking upon to take the air (2 Sam. xi. 2); for prayer (Acts x. 9), &c. A battlement, therefore, was almost a necessary protection."—Sp. Com.

9.—Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds.—This verse and the two following seem intended to teach Israel the Lord's antipathy to mixtures in the sphere of spiritual things, and the New Testament key is 2 Cor. vi. 14: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness?" &c.

FRIDAY, APRIL 9.—DEUT. XXIII.

"From the sanctification of the house and the domestic relation, to which the laws of marriage and chastity in the previous chapter pointed, Moses proceeds to instructions concerning the sanctification of their union as a congregation: the exclusion of certain persons from, and the reception of others into, the congregation of the Lord (1—8); the preservation of the purity of the camp in time of war (9—14); the reception of foreign slaves into the land, and the removal of licentious persons out of it (15—18); and, lastly, certain duties of citizenship (19—25)."—Keil.

3.—An Ammonite or Moabite shall not enter, &c.—"Not, however, because their forefathers were begotten in incest, but on account of the hostility they had manifested to Israel, whom not only had they failed to give a hospitable reception on their journey, but had even hired Balaam to curse them. In this way they had brought upon themselves the curse which falls upon all those that curse Israel, according to the infallible word of God (Gen. xii. 3)."—Ibid.

9.—When the host goeth forth, . . . then keep thee from every wicked thing.—The point of this exhortation is, that when going forth against their enemies their hope of victory wholly depended upon the Lord's presence, hence they should peculiarly guard against whatever might offend Him. The New Testament parallel is "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, &c." (Eph. iv. 30.)

19.—Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother.—It is a principle of worldly wisdom to avoid business transactions with members of one's own family, because of the ill-feeling which arises where pressure has to be used with defaulters. Israel was thus taught to regard itself as a family, and though (20) "unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury," yet "not so unto thy brother," i.e., unto another Israelite.

SATURDAY, APRIL 10.—DEUT. XXIV.

"In this and the next chapter certain particular rights and duties, domestic, social, and civil, are treated of. The cases brought forward have often no definite connection, and seem selected in order to illustrate the application of the great principles of the law in certain important events and circumstances."—Sp. Com.

4.—Her former husband . . . may not take her again.—Israel's unfaithfulness to her Lord deserved that such "a bill of divorcement" should have been given to her. But referring to this very law the Lord says (Jer. iii. 1): "Return again to Me;" and in Isa. l. 1 He challenges her to produce such a cause for final separation: "Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away?" It is also probable that that difficult passage, Jer. xxxi. 32, is to be so explained: "Which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord;" or more literally, "And I was (i.e., continued to be) an husband unto them." Instead of putting them away, the Lord continued his relation of husband to them, looking forward to a better covenant, when, by means of forgiveness of all their failures, and by his transforming power upon their hearts and minds, they would never again depart from Him.

8.—Take heed in the plague of leprosy.—"The thought here is not that when they saw the signs of leprosy they were to be upon their guard, but rather 'Be on thy guard because of the plague of leprosy,' i.e., that thou dost not get it—have to bear it—as the reward of thy rebellion against what the priests teach according to the commandment of the Lord."—Keil. The Vulgate renders it: "Watch diligently that thou do not incur the plague of leprosy." The next verse confirms this.

16.—Every man shall be put to death for his own sin.—Where this is quoted, as it sometimes is, against the thought of Christ dying for the sins of others, it is forgotten that He first voluntarily, and yet at the same time obediently, made them his own. See Ps. xl. 12: "Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me," which is plainly the language of Him who says, "Lo I come to do thy will, O God."

REV. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

THE Church of St. George's, Edinburgh, is in some respects the most prominent in the Free Church of Scotland. This place has been won for it by the influence of its members, by its princely liberality, and by the pulpit power of its preachers. Its first pastor, the celebrated Dr. Candlish, of Disruption renown, did much to make it distinguished; and what he did for it has not been lessened by his successor, the subject of this sketch.

Dr. Whyte's life-history is full of inspiration. It shows what perseverance and a consecrated purpose can do. His early days were full of the struggle of poverty. He wished to become a scholar, but the way to learning was for him far from smooth. He could not buy the books he longed to read, or enjoy the educational advantages which would bring him to the goal he sought to reach. But diligent use of time and opportunities conquered in the end. He went to college, and there showed of what stuff he was made. His teachers recognised his abilities, and his fellow-students paid homage to the rhetorical capacity which soon revealed itself. Every talent was carefully cultured, and dedicated to what he chose for the work of his life. He formed a high ideal of the ministry. Whatever would tend to make him an efficient servant of God and men was pressed by him into service. The result was a rare faculty for moving men, and raising them to a higher level of thought and feeling. This faculty found scope in his first charge—St. John's, Glasgow, where he preached with an intellectual force and burning enthusiasm that led delighted hearers to prophesy a brilliant career for him. He did not remain long in this sphere, promising as it was; he went to Regent-square, London. Before he could make his mark there, he was called to be the colleague of Dr. Candlish, in Edinburgh. He saw it to be his duty to accept the call, and came to the Northern Metropolis. His work was anything but easy. To preach in the pulpit of a man of genius is always a difficult task. He realised this; but, strong in faith and purpose, he did his best. Sometimes a congregation makes a minister; it often mars one. St. George's made Dr. Whyte. It drew out his abilities and furnished him with a stimulus his strong nature responded to. He gave himself—not a little of his time and energies—to its upbuilding. Dr. Candlish passed to the rest he deserved so well, feeling confident that the people he loved would be faithfully and ably cared for by his son in the Gospel. The years that have passed since then have been crowded with eager and true service. The sermons preached are helpful in a rare degree. They brace the weary for life's battles, strengthen the tempted, and cast rays of light on perplexed paths. Congregational activity and organisation have developed. Sabbath-schools and mission agencies flourish. Voluntary offerings to the schemes of the Church have increased. The members of the congregation now raise somewhere about £10,000 every year. These are outward signs of the inner vitality which makes St. George's a power in Edinburgh.

J. MOFFAT PHOTO.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Moffat, Edinburgh.)

Dr. Whyte's preaching is thoroughly evangelical. The central theme of his discourses is "Christ and Him crucified." What he has to say comes from the heart, and is laden with Gospel truth; so it reaches and touches the hearts of men. Much of his strength lies in his humanity. He is keenly alive to the doubts and difficulties of our day; and his sympathies are ever with his hearers. His sermons are enriched by stores of wide reading; philosophy, theology, and general literature are tributaries, in his hands, to the pulpit; they give a setting and illustrative force to the teaching of Christ. His discourses are elaborate, but all the life is not elaborated out of them. They never sink to be essays, but always keep the lofty level of messages from the Most High. He is specially fond of the Puritan divines. He said lately at a public meeting that Goodwin was well known to his congregation; at least, if he was not, it was not his fault. The solid learning and weighty thoughts of these neglected theologians furnish him with weapons he is not slow to use. But he is far more than a student of books; he is also a student of men. He has grasped the truth and felt the force of the words, "Humanity becomes the dearer being learned the more." The same wide acquaintance with men's thoughts and deeds that enables him to lay bare human frailties, and warn against the faults of the day, gives him the breadth of sympathy which makes his ministry specially attractive for young men.

His very appearance in the pulpit excites attention. His strongly-marked face shows traces of doubts conquered and of strange experiences lived. The heavy iron-grey hair, tossed carelessly back, forms a setting for features that change with every changing feeling. His burly form, erect and manly, suggests, somehow, the "burly Luther," who, in by-gone days, "breasted Babylon;" and between him and Luther more than physical affinities could be predicated. He has the Reformer's fearless allegiance to truth and unsparing denunciation of wrong. His voice is strong and melodious.

A special characteristic of Dr. Whyte's work is the stress he puts on the training of young men and women. His Bible-classes are, and have been, remarkable successes. They are largely attended, and filled with interest. The topics taken up in them are handled in a most suggestive manner. Their value lies not so much in the actual instruction given—though that is great and of enduring significance—as in the opening up of new vistas of thought.

Another marked feature in this ministry is the Tuesday night prayer-meeting. Ministers who complain about small attendances at, and lack of interest in, their prayer-meetings, should go to St. George's for a lesson. They will there find hundreds gathered together on a week night in a busy town, listening with eager attention to plain truths plainly told. Many say that Dr. Whyte is at his best at such a meeting, and we think they are right. His earnestness then finds unfettered expression, and his words, unhampered by the restrictions of the pulpit, go straight to the mark they aim at, and often hit the hearer with sledge-hammer force. He is specially fortunate in his subject this winter. It is, "Some Characters in Bunyan's 'Holy War.'" These characters represent types of men still to be met with; and, under his skilful treatment, they teach truths and enforce lessons of the greatest moment.

NEWS FROM BURMAH.

WRITING from Thongzai on February 24, to Mrs. Lundie, 6, Beech-street, Liverpool, Mrs. Ingalls says:—

The boxes have come, and I hasten to acknowledge them. . . . The Viceroy of India has been here to ratify the annexation of Upper Burmah, and the Vice-regal party took the railway for a part of their journey to the Golden City, and they touched at Leppadan, where I have my No. 1 Railway Library. I presented Lady Dufferin with a large basket of flowers, on behalf of the railway people, and after lunch they paid a short visit to our Library. Lady Dufferin remarked on the good titles in the bookcases, and smiled at the beautiful portrait of our Queen, and she noted the texts on the wall. They have become dingy, and next time I have distinguished visitors I shall have my new texts and mottoes up, and the large and elegant ones of "God Save the Queen," and "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy." The cards, letters, and almanacs, are out on their mission, and as soon as I have time I shall add the new books to the two libraries. The one on the Sittong line is far from here, and I cannot visit it often; but it is greatly appreciated, and I believe it is doing much good.

Please thank our friends for the magazines and papers they regularly send. I should like to have more weekly papers, especially from Scotland. Some of the men say they have still the fragrance of the heather, and they like to hear of their fatherland. They are often obliged to wait at Leppadan for repairs or loads, and the resting-place from the weather is the bar or the library.

AT DR. WHYTE'S PRAYER MEETING.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

AT his usual prayer meeting on Tuesday week, the lower part of the large church was comfortably filled. There could not be less than 700 people present. Such an audience on a week-night was in itself a testimony to the preacher's influence. The wealth and intelligence of Edinburgh were well represented. We saw two well-known professors, some doctors known far beyond the districts in which they practise, and a host of students. Dr. Whyte is a great favourite with students. His manliness attracts them, and his bracing teaching fills them with a higher conception of the Christian life and a desire to live it.

Punctually at eight Dr. Whyte passed through a door on to the platform. As he came into view one felt at once in the presence of a man. The poise of his head and the carriage of his body conveyed that idea, and it was deepened by the words he spoke. His face is expressive with the expression of a warrior who has fought and is ready to fight again. We have heard that a stranger said to a friend on seeing him enter the pulpit, "Look at that man's face; it is a battle-field." The criticism rose to memory as we scanned the strongly-marked countenance, which seemed to tell of doubts laid and temptations overcome.

The opening prayer was characteristic. Its confession of sin was a terrible unmasking of the depravity of the human heart, and its petitions breathed the aspirations of a soul longing with intensity of desire after the vision of God. It was followed by the singing of a hymn, and the reading of a chapter. Then a text was given out, and the subject was announced as "Immanuel's policy toward Mansoul." It was evident that the address was looked forward to with expectation. The hearers sank back in their pews, and fixed their eyes on the speaker. What he said in effect was this:—

The speech of the victorious Prince in the closing pages of "The Holy War" might be written in letters of gold. It is worthy to lie alongside the departing Master's discourse in the upper room. The men in the upper room were not ready to receive the rich evangel, whereas those who had gone through the varied experiences of Mansoul were. The conclusions of "The Pilgrim's Progress" and "The Holy War" are two masterpieces in English literature. In them Bunyan touches his high-water mark; and what remains to be said when it is said that Bunyan touches his high-water mark? The part of the speech of Immanuel specially under consideration to-night refers to his policy toward Mansoul.

(1) "I came by my law to awaken thee." God uses the law to awaken conscience and understanding. He does this in various ways. The Philippian jailor shivered in terror, and asked in agony how he could be saved. Paul was awakened to a sense of sin; he felt a sense of sin in his heart, if not in his life. No eloquence or pointed speech can awaken the sleeping soul; it takes God's law to do that.

(2) "I show thee, O soul, my glory." The glory of redemption excels the glory of creation. To save one soul brings more glory to Christ than to kindle the suns of a universe. Man is made the background (as we see in Romans vii.) to Christ's glory.

(3) "I have borne with thy manners." I don't know how it is, but that word "manners" touches me deeper than if He had said "thy sins." We feel humbled and ashamed when we are convicted of being ill-bred or ill-mannered by the courteous and dignified. "To see a nobleman wanting in manners is an evil sight." How much more an evil sight is it to see a child of God wanting in manners towards Him! How much and how long Christ has borne with our manners!

(4) "I have compassed thee about." The Christian is sometimes so hemmed in that he can neither get out nor in. David found it so in his experience. The pains of hell compassed him about. He acknowledged his iniquity, and then mercy compassed him about. God besieges us in mercy: there is judgment and sorrow for the sin, but mercy follows the footsteps of grace.

(5) "I afflicted thee on every side." Wonder fills our breast when we study how afflictions spring up in life. All our afflictions are in the hand of Christ, and they are best there. If you are outside the reach of Christ's afflictions, you are outside the scope of his grace. The Bible is the afflicted man's companion. Afflicted men made it, and only afflicted men can appreciate it.

(6) "I drew down thy heart with molestations." The little worries in our life are molestations. They are like gnats and mosquitoes. Men know that molestations bring down the heart when elephantine troubles won't.

This was the policy of Immanuel towards Mansoul. Have you passed through such an experience?

This is but a brief and bald outline of an address which throbbed with life and glowed with imagination. Dr. Whyte is eloquent in action, as well as in speech. His gestures keep in unison with his words. He moved about on the platform with a freedom which recalled by way of contrast, Sydney Smith's curate, who clung to the cushions of his pulpit. His thoughts were simple, if not commonplace, but the personality of the man was so infused into them that the hearers were held spell-bound. The ideas of Christ's patience in bearing with our manners, and the power of molestations in drawing down our hearts, were wrought out with singular pathos and beauty. The whole discourse was thoroughly evangelical. It showed the preacher's steadfast allegiance to the three R.'s of the Puritans he loves so much—Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by Jesus Christ, and Regeneration by the Holy Ghost. Dr. Whyte's power of appeal was very marked. He talked, as our cousins across the Atlantic would put it, "straight." He did not speak over the heads of the people, but made every word tell. Such preaching is needed in our day; and we rejoice to find it allied to broad culture and self-sacrificing enthusiasm.

"BE PERFECT, BE OF GOOD COMFORT."

2 Cor. xiii. 11.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

A STRANGE combination. "Be perfect" is a word that troubles and condemns us; "Be of good comfort" is a voice that soothes and quiets us. "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?" "Be perfect" seems to point sternly backward to the past with its failures, and to point onward to some mountain height far up against the sky, and bids us climb it—a slippery height where only the resolute can get and only the skilful can stay. Comfort seems to say, "Take it easily—you are getting on as well as other people are; why go further and fare worse?" How can we put them together? To think of perfection is to bid farewell to comfort; to think of comfort is to lose hope of perfection. Well, let us see. these are joined for mutual helpfulnes—joined together by God; therefore let no man put them asunder.

Note the order. "Be perfect" comes first, then, "Be of good comfort." Both are lost if the order is reversed. Often, very often, the order is reversed, and here we may put our finger upon a frequent source of failure. There are very many with whom the one great aim and purpose of religion is comfort. There are some with whom the work of conversion is called "being made happy." The one great proof of religion with these people is in "feeling happy." Happiness is at once the purpose and proof of religion. There, perhaps, is a vague and shadowy notion of being holy as a kind of privilege, which it is rather daring and presumptuous for any to seek but very good people indeed. But for most folks, and in the worries and troubles of commonplace lives, religion is something that quiets troublesome fears about the future; it is a promise of being taken care of, and fed, and clothed, and guided, and blest, and a hope of going to heaven when they die, and being comfortable for ever and ever. Now let us look at it fully. If that is all, then religion is very admirably adapted to fatten our indolence and self-indulgence.

There is no virtue in being happy. If I wanted to find a picture of happiness, I might find it away in the far country, in the son who is spending his substance in riotous living; nay, I might find it in the swine that have filled themselves with the husks, and lie in the sunshine grunting their satisfaction. If the purpose of religion is only to save me from a fear of hell, and to make me glad with a hope of heaven—if that is all, if my religion is to make me comfortable in spite of ill-temper, and slipshod ways of business, and words that are not exactly true, then I say deliberately, better the very fires of hell than that comfort, better anything that could burn into me a deep and awful sense of the hatefulness of sin, better all pain, all agonies if they could kindle within me a hatred of a lie as damnable, and an abhorrence of that which is evil.

The religion of this Book does not say much about happiness—not half so much as our hymns do. The word that runs through it needs to be written in letters of gold, nay of fire, right across our churches, and right over the factories and the shops and the offices, and over every room of our houses—RIGHTEOUSNESS. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness." For this the Son of God is given as the Saviour of the world—to declare God's righteousness in our forgiveness, and that we may be created anew, in righteousness and true holiness. Surely if comfort is the first great purpose of our religion, never was a system more ill-contrived than this to fulfil its purpose. The whole ideal of this Book, every command, every example, every promise, all the revelation of God, of heaven, of hell, every breath and influence of it make me feel that I want much more than being comfortable, I want through and through me to be pure, to be true, to be holy. David, parched and thirsty though he was, poured forth the gift of water from Bethlehem's well, an offering unto God—a thing which the peril of his brave men had made too sacred for his own indulgence. And surely Christ has shamed us out of any thought of comfort by his own agony and curse. He who was rich, stooping to all the rude discomforts of poverty; He who is the King of Glory, emptying himself and becoming a slave—the Lord and Giver of Life yielding Himself to death, even the death of the cross; He—pierced, and torn, and smitten—What for? Surely for anything sooner than this—that we be made comfortable. There is but one end and purpose that can warrant such grief and agony as his, and that is our holiness—our being made perfect.

Put that first—always, everywhere—be perfect. Find in the thought and promise of it an ideal and an inspiration. First in the prayers, first in every work and pleasure—to be like Christ. Our religion has but one standard—that is Jesus. Our religion has but one purpose—that we be conformed to his image. Our religion has but one proof—it is a power in us making us like Christ. If our religion do not mean that, first of all and right through all, righteousness, true holiness, no amount of happy feelings will avail us anything. Seek first the kingdom of God, and what? Being taken care of? No. Being made comfortable? No. "Seek first the kingdom of God and HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS, and all these things shall be added unto you."

This is what the Lord purposes for us in everything—that we be made like unto Himself. If we aim at anything else then are we at cross purposes with Him. If we expect to find the world put together to make us happy we shall find many stern reminders of our mistake; but if we accept life, and work, and all things as put together to make us like unto Christ, then, and then only, shall we find the true meaning of all things. That we be conformed to the image of his Son. That first, as our aim always, everywhere, BE PERFECT.

Then, again, many others fail, in the other way—they lose the perfection because they forget the comfort. "Be perfect," rings the command. At once there is a sad turning to self, and a great grief. "How dreadfully hard it is! Weak, foolish, forgetful as I am, beset with hindrances as my way is, fighting and struggling as one must be to get on at all, it really frets one to hear about being perfect." I suppose we all of us know that feeling.

On the other side there is a different feeling. "Yes," says the earnest soul, "it is plain enough that religion can mean only this one thing—being like Christ. That is what I must be." Then begins a search after perfection which becomes an agony. They will rub and grind themselves into perfection, with sandpaper and sulphuric acid, trying to fetch off the angles and polish themselves. They are stern and hard towards themselves, suspecting everything, condemning everything; yet ever strengthening their own self-will, even in their very self-denial. Unsocial, unbrotherly, gloomy, despairing, they have narrowed all their life to the one thought of their own perfection and are conscious of nothing else. And so they get further and further from the perfection they aim at, because they become more and more conscious of themselves, of the failings which dishearten, or, what is a million times worse, of their virtues. So we get specimens of believers in perfection who are by no means lovely specimens of humanity, without any comfort themselves, and spoiling other people's comfort. So perfection is either an agony ending in despair, or an effort ending in five or six feet of polished egotism—a capital I—by which to measure everybody and everything.

Be of good comfort. With joyful relief and escape, let us turn to see the Lord's way in which perfection goes hand in hand with comfort. Do we not feel that the first thing each wants is to get right away from myself, to leave myself, and lose myself. And this is precisely where the blessed work begins. The gracious Lord Jesus comes to us with this first sweet note of comfort—"This work is mine, not yours—I am come to do it for you." Dear friend, take hold of that right gladly. It is not the sandpaper and sulphuric acid, the stern discipline and self-denial which can accomplish this work in us. Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it, that He might fulfil this work. "That He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word; that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." And the Church can only be sanctified by the holiness of its individual members. Be of good comfort. Think of the Lord coming to thee now and bending over thee, and asking what thou wouldst have Him to do for thee. Can we not venture to say, "My Lord, there is but one thing that will ever satisfy me; it is that I be like Thee." This is the one great joy of his heart; his satisfaction, as it is ours. This is the way of holiness—receiving Him; leaning upon Him; looking unto Him; letting Him work out his own will in our hearts and lives. Then ever is there less and less of "I," and more and more of Jesus, until He becomes our other self, and in everything there is a new centre; a new consciousness—"I live; yet not I: but Christ liveth in me."

This is the blessed secret. Holiness is not in climbing up some slippery height with agony of effort. It is simply receiving Jesus, and giving up ourselves to Him that we may be fashioned after his own likeness. If I fetch in I, I fetch in failure; but when the Lord works there must be success. The only way I can give myself to the Lord is by receiving Him. The only way I can consecrate myself to Him is by opening the door of my heart to let Him come in in his fulness. All that I need to be He can make me. All that He would have me He can accomplish. Give yourself, then, wholly to Him for his largest purposes. Receive Him as your own, able to do more than you ask or think. Our holiness is but Jesus, ours, Jesus wholly, Jesus only.

* Notes of the last of three addresses at Exeter Hall.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE. — On Tuesday week, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presided at the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Sunday-school. He was agreeably surprised, he said, to find that so many ministers had been converted while young. He thought it would be found that the best workers and the foremost men were those who had been brought into the church while they were young. He hoped the conversion of the parents might be the turning point in the conversion of the children; and that the children might be the saviours of London, and missionaries to the millions around them.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—6.

ALGERIA AND KABYLIA.

A RIDE of thirteen hours by rail brought us from Oran to Algiers, where we met with our dear and long-known friends Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse. A new generation of readers has sprung up since our columns were enriched by the narratives of Mrs. Pearse's work among the French soldiers—one of the most original and singular developments of woman's work, at a time when woman's work, out of the old ruts, was in its infancy, and was everywhere spoken against, even in England. It may, therefore, be of interest to give some particulars of the conversion of one who, before her marriage, was a pioneer in evangelistic work in France, and has, subsequently to that event, continued the same work in conjunction with her husband, in France, Kabylia and Algiers.

Jane Bonnycastle was of English descent, but had lived nearly all her life with her family in Paris. Dr. Bowron gave her a tract, of which Captain Hedley Vicars was the subject, which led her into deep exercises of soul, and she thought that if she were converted she would try to do some good among soldiers. She endeavoured by fasting, austerities, mortifications, and self-doings of various kinds, to obtain peace of soul, but only with the result of seriously affecting her health. At this time Mr. Grattan Guinness, then quite a young man, visited Paris, and her father, mother, and sister Mary, all went to hear him. But the doctor had given orders that Jane should be kept from all excitement, especially mental or spiritual; and she was left at home in bed. When they had all gone, however, she got up and followed them, finding a seat as free from observation as possible. The text was, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The first words of the preacher riveted her attention: "Poor sinner, I have a message from God unto thee." As he went on to show the way of access to God, of forgiveness, acceptance, and eternal life, the deep anxieties of her soul were met, and she returned to her house justified and having found peace with God. Her sister shortly followed, telling her she did not know whether she were converted, but she had got something she never had before, and she only wished that Jane had been there. Soon she learned and rejoiced in her sister's rest of soul and in her own, and for many years they were fellow-labourers in the Gospel.

Miss Bonnycastle's special work was, in fulfilment of the desire created by the story of Hedley Vicars, among the soldiers of France, for which her English courage and French tact, her mother wit and faculty of repartee, peculiarly fitted her. She found her way into barracks, forts, and military prisons, in spite of red-tape and official routine, and distributed in the years before her marriage many thousands of tracts, few of which were given without some danger of inconvenient results.

For several years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Pearse remained in Paris, making known the Gospel not only to the soldiers, but to the ouvriers and other classes of civilians, and doubtless preparing the way for the réunions populaires of Mr. MacAll, and for other more recent evangelistic enterprises.

About seven years ago they removed to Algiers, and made their way, as our readers are aware, into Kabylia, planting the Gospel in the hearts of many of those patriarchal people, and opening a door for further and further entries into the interior. Mr. and Mrs. Lamb now occupy the mission station at Djemaa-Saridj, while Miss Gillard, a fearless little Englishwoman, is living among the mountains, either alone or with one female companion, showing the people the love of God by the love which she herself exhibits towards them. But, as we were obliged to make Algiers our limit in Africa, I cannot speak of those and other regions beyond from personal observation. I will therefore only add that M. Bourreau, who represents the Kabyle Mission, and M. Grunberg, a young Jew, keeping the Bible Depôt of the London Jews' Society, at Tunis, were both spoken of to me in terms of warm commendation.

It was a great enjoyment to me, and not a little encouragement to Mr. Pearse, to talk over with him our recollections of fellow-workers during the past five-and-twenty years, and to consider present facts and future prospects at home and abroad.

We accompanied Mrs. Pearse in her visits to the Arab quarter, where she was recognised every now and then by young Kabyle men and women, who had grown out of her knowledge, but who reminded her that they had been boys and girls when she and Mr. Pearse lived in Djemaa-Saridj; now they had been drawn to the city in search of employment, and were delighted to meet their old teachers there.

Our friends also gain access to the Jews, of whom there are some 30,000 in and around the city. They receive tracts and talk willingly, but the fear of man prevents them from fully receiving and confessing Christ. One of them told Mrs. Pearse in our hearing that the Roman Catholic, Greek, and Protestant Churches were all founded on the Jews' religion. This was, of course, admitted, and it gave the opportunity of quoting the Prophets as to the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow. In the present state of mind of many of the Jews here, there is not only an opportunity but a loud call to some lover of Israel to avail himself of the open door which is now presented.

On Saturday night we found our way to the "MacAll meeting," held at the Bible Society's Depôt in the Rue de Tanger, where we were politely asked to enter by the door-keeper, once a Nubian slave, who had been bought in Alexandria, and brought to Algiers where he obtained his freedom. We found a young soldier, Edouard Revel, giving a Gospel address; he was followed by M. Euard, one of the French pasteurs. There were about forty people, who were, I imagine, regular attendants, the depôt being in a little-frequented side-street, and not well adapted for attracting strangers to an evangelistic meeting. We had some very pleasant fellowship with this young soldier evangelist. I hope that when his time is out he will be enabled to devote his time altogether to this work, for which he is well fitted, and which it is his great desire to pursue. With him was a comrade-in-arms, a brother of M. Mercadier, of Oran. They seemed to be the only Christians among the soldiers in Algiers; their consistent and fearless confession of Christ cannot fail, however, to win others to the truth.

The Bible Society is represented at Algiers by M. Lowitz, from whom, and Mme. Lowitz, we received much kindness. Mr. and Mrs. May, who have been for a short time connected with the Salvation Army, are in charge of the depôt. We met there a colporteur, named Malherbe, a bright and genial Christian man, whose story was told me by Mr. Lowitz. His mother was a Christian, and had well trained her son, who grew up with a zeal for souls. He had given a Gospel portion to a Spanish fellow-workman, who, seeing the binder's label, wrote to him in London for a Bible. The binder sent it to the Society, and Mr. Lowitz was communicated with as the agent in Algiers, whence the letter had been sent. Mr. Lowitz asked the Spaniard to call upon him, and offered him a Bible, which he declined to accept without paying for it. Mr. Lowitz asked how he became desirous to get a Bible, and learned that Malherbe had given him a Spanish Gospel. This led to an interview with Malherbe, and to his engagement as colporteur for the Bible Society. After some time spent in this service he had thought he could do more good by being free to sell other good books, and to preach as occasion offered, and he was now going forth as an independent colporteur and evangelist.

Just before leaving Algiers, we met at the Bible Depôt, Mr. Morton, a Christian man carrying on business in Leadenhall-street. He was cruising in his yacht in the Mediterranean for his health's sake, and seeking out and encouraging Christians in the ports at which he called. He had a beautiful little vessel, and a model crew of twelve fine and well-conducted Englishmen.

I must conclude this letter with a few notes of evangelistic possibilities in Algiers and Algeria.

The continual influx of Spaniards, and the favourable circumstances of their freedom from priestly influence, afford a good opportunity of evangelising them. At Marseilles, we called, at Mrs. Pearse's request, on the Comtesse Précorbin, and suggested her removal to Oran, where she would be able to utilise her knowledge of Spanish. We found her only waiting for guidance, and prepared to go as soon as the way is open. I hope there may be one or more ready to be sent on the same mission to Algiers.

To work among Mohamedans, first in importance is the knowledge of French, Arabic, and medicine. A medical missionary could make his way at once, while it would take years otherwise. There seems an especial need of this at Djemaa-Saridj. A school or college might be combined with this, having at its head a man of mark and ability, a good linguist, capable of training young men for usefulness among their own people.

A Sailors' Rest would be a grand thing in Algiers. Italians abound—sailors and fishermen. Could not Christian people make a home there for the sake of such promising work?

Ladies could find a real Zenana work among the Arab women, whose lives are so desolate. A knowledge of Arabic and medicine would be needful, but God gives special help in acquiring knowledge to be used in his service for the world which He "so loved." Families with moderate means could live in comfort. No one need desire a more delightful or more promising mission field; and it is within a week of home.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The Shaftesbury Lodge Convalescent Home at Bournemouth, in connection with The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, was opened for women patients on the 1st inst. Particulars as to admission, &c., may be obtained of the Secretary, Henry H. Board, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

A BANISHED MISSIONARY.—Mr. Welford, Primitive Methodist missionary, who some months ago was imprisoned by the Spanish authorities of Fernando Po, and only released through the intervention of the commander of a British war vessel, has left under an order of banishment from the island for a period of four years, four months, and one day. During the time Mr. Welford was in the island he succeeded in gathering around him a very large congregation, and this appears to have aroused the displeasure of the authorities. Rev. R. W. Burnett has accepted the invitation of the Missionary Committee to proceed for Fernando Po, where he has already served three terms of labour.

ENGLAND'S PERIL.

AN AMERICAN VIEW.

It is interesting and ought to be instructive to see ourselves as others see us, though we may perhaps not be disposed to take such a pessimistic view, as does our good brother Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, in The Truth for March :—

"No American Christian can watch the dark storm gathering over the Mother Country without the deepest anxiety and sorrow. The greatest empire of earth drifting rapidly towards anarchy, and perhaps disintegration, is a sight sufficiently startling in itself; but it is particularly trying to those whose forefathers came from the old land of historic renown, who speak the same language, who live under much the same laws, and who know what the people of that Empire have done for the advancement of Christ's cause, and for the progress of civilisation in the world. The Government of Great Britain, like all human governments, has nearly always pursued an utterly selfish policy, disregarding the will of God, and trampling upon the rights of the weaker with savage cruelty, and in contempt of the plainest demands of good morals."

Dr. Brookes proceeds to dwell on the Romanising tactics of an influential section of the Established Church clergy; on the lack of principle which, as it appears to him, has characterised much of the career of the present Prime Minister; on the lax views of some other men now in high office; on the growth of lawlessness as indicated by the recent West-end riots and spread of worldliness. He thus concludes his survey :—

"There is no power on earth that can avert the impending judgment of an angry God. There are many, many precious saints in the dear old land, but the rapid spread of rationalism among one class of Evangelicals, under the leadership of infidel science, and the rapid spread of fatal errors, like annihilation and restoration, among another class, under the leadership of false teachers, leave no room for hope from the religious bodies. The overthrow of the Government there will be the signal for the overthrow of all governments, and out of the débris the Antichrist will come, and then, blessed be God, Christ will come. May believers be much in prayer to be kept from the power of the devil, and much in prayer for one another!"

We do not think it wise to affirm positively anything that has not been positively revealed. But we heartily join with our brother in the aspiration of his closing sentence.

A REQUEST FROM TURKEY.

Sir,—May we ask that this request for prayer for the Girls' Boarding-school be given a place in The Christian? We most earnestly desire the help of lovers of missions—aid which comes in answer to prayer. Our school numbers nearly forty boarders, and has a preparatory department of nearly fifty. It is for the former, from which we hope many labourers will go forth to work for God among their needy country-people, that we very earnestly entreat the prayers of Christian friends.

We read The Christian with deep interest, often translating articles for the benefit of our pupils and others. May you long continue to send forth this Christian help.—Most sincerely yours,

American Teachers of Bitlis Girls' School.
Bitlis, Turkey, Asia.

BRITISH SAVAGERY.—It is impossible to regard the recent expedition of H.M.S. Diamond with even a tolerable degree of equanimity. Setting on fire native villages, laying waste the fruits of rude husbandry in the fields, and the sacrifice of the lives of hordes of barbarians, under the pretence of revenge for wrongs on British sailors, will not bring additional lustre to English arms, especially if it should prove that these wrongs themselves have been provoked by daring attempts at kidnapping in the interest of North Queensland. The report, which will be shortly forwarded to the Colonial Office, will be awaited with anxiety. It is unfortunate that these resorts to vindictive violence against savage races should so frequently be undertaken by ships carrying the Union Jack.—Freeman.

HOW TO HELP THE POOR.

Much has been revealed of late, not only as to the misery into which thousands are plunged from want of employment, but also as to the pitiful condition of a large and helpless class, who are so wretchedly paid for their work that, toil as they will, they cannot keep themselves from starvation, or from the need of charity. With the desire to aid these poor people by enabling them to earn an honest living, and to maintain their independence and self-respect, an Association, entitled "The Labour Aid Society," has been formed, which will, we are sure, commend itself to the sympathies and the judgment of our readers.

This Association proposes to discriminate between worthy and unworthy cases as a special feature of its work. Inquiries will be conducted by a gentleman who has had an exceptionally large experience amongst the vagrant class—Rev. James Munro, who made a great part of the investigations upon which "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" was founded. Mr. Munro has been secured by the Committee to take the general superintendence of the work, and there is little fear that unworthy applicants will be allowed to participate in the benefits of the movement.

The plan of operations appears to be at once simple and effective. One branch of the movement deals with seamstresses, with the view of giving them the fullest possible benefit of the money now paid by manufacturers for the work done by these women, and also for providing machinists with sewing machines at a charge which will enable the very poorest to obtain one. At present the worker has to pay a deposit of ten shillings before she can secure a machine, and must afterwards keep up the weekly payments ranging from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. each, or forfeit whatever money she has paid. The Association, after careful investigation, will require no deposit, and only a weekly payment of 6d. Moreover, should the payments be impossible, through illness or slackness of work, the machine would only be temporarily taken back to the depôt until the payments could be resumed, when the worker would find the amount previously paid still standing to her credit; by this plan she would become the possessor of the machine after having made 156 payments.

With a view of providing employment for these women arrangements are being made with several manufacturers from whom work will be received at the central depôt, which is under the control of a thoroughly competent person; it will be given out to the workers who may either do the work at their own homes as at present, or, if they prefer it, at the depôt. After deducting a small charge to cover the working expenses, these machinists will, under the plan proposed, be able to increase their present income by four or five shillings per week. Another department of this branch of the work will be the aiding of poor women who live in the suburbs of London. Such a woman who is now probably the recipient of charity can, by the combination of a number of ladies offering her work, obtain a machine through this Society, and thereby be rendered independent of the weekly dole.

Is there any need for this work? Are the hardships of the poor so great that a new organisation should come into existence to help them? To these questions we might answer that if Tom Hood were living to-day his appeal for these poor seamstresses would be stronger than that by which he moved the heart of England by his "Song of the Shirt." The life of these women is a continual drudgery. Day in and day out they have to sit and toil in their dingy, cheerless rooms, every moment so precious that they can scarcely rise to take necessary food; many of them, indeed, have, on a chair close at hand, some cold tea and dry bread, which they sip and eat occasionally as they work on throughout the day. This incessant strain is intensified when they have what are called "special orders," which have to be returned at a certain hour. Perchance the fatal hour arrives before the work is finished, and then the seamstress is not paid even for what she has done.

Here, for instance, is a poor widow with three children, living in a small room. She works nearly fourteen hours a day, never leaves the house except to take and fetch her work. She has no quiet Sabbath; every day is alike to her, one continual round of work. All this endless and weary toil is for the paltry sum of about 7s. a week, of which she has to pay 3s. rent and about 1s. for thread and other materials. What can the Association do for this case? It can increase her income one-third, and at the same time relieve her from the necessity of working more than ten hours a day, giving her also the rest of the Sabbath.

Here is another woman who has been working a machine for twelve years, but her work is very badly paid, and she cannot pay the 2s. weekly for the machine. Probably she had previously paid by instalments between £2 and £3 towards the price of a machine, but failing to keep up the weekly instalments it was taken from her. She is a widow and has to support an aged mother and sister. The hearts of the charitable may be touched by such a case, but even if two or three weeks' instalments were paid, the poor machinist would soon be in the same position.

The aim of this Association is, by purchasing machines at a low rate, to charge for them such small weekly sums as it is in the power of these poor women to pay. This will enable them to retain their self-respect, and make them independent of charity. We are pleased to learn that work has already been provided for one hundred of these poor people, and that some manufacturers are not only willing to co-operate with the Society, but have joined the Committee, so as to add their practical knowledge to the efficient working of the scheme.

Another branch of this scheme will deal with the unemployed. A Labour Bureau will be opened at which the unemployed, both male and female, will be invited to apply. Searching investigation will be made in each case, and the names of those who are found to be deserving will be placed upon a labour list, classified according to the employment for which they are adapted. Employers of labour will be invited to apply at the office of the Association when in want of workers, and advertisements will also be inserted in the newspapers stating what classes of labourers can be supplied from the Bureau. Ladies are being appointed in the various suburbs of the Metropolis, who will seek to obtain posts for unskilled labour, such as that of porters, messengers, window cleaners, charwomen, &c. The plan of this Association in no way interferes with any honest industry, but seeks to bring the poor into contact with the manufacturer without the intervention and commission of the "sweater." The promoters of the movement confidently appeal to the public for the funds needed to start it—about £1000—in the confidence that their appeal will meet with a generous response, inasmuch as it is a most promising endeavour to place the poor in a position of practical independence. Many persons of standing in the Christian and philanthropic world are interesting themselves in the project. The treasurer is Mr. J. D. Link, and the hon. secretary Mr. James Branch; the office of the society is 241, Roman road, Bow, E. We shall be most glad to take charge of any contributions which our readers may be disposed to send.

NORTHFIELD AND CHICAGO.

A CONVERSATION WITH MR. D. L. MOODY.

FOLLOWING up the address given by Mr. Moody in Chicago, on "City Evangelisation," and anxious to gather somewhat more definite information regarding the Mount Hermon School for Young Men at Northfield, Mass., to which Mr. Moody had referred, we had an interview with the founder of this enterprise, during which many questions were asked and answered. We reproduce a few of the queries, with the replies given.

"How many have you in your Mount Hermon School?" was asked.

"With the new dormitory, which will be ready within sixty days, we shall have room for about three hundred," Mr. Moody replied.

"What are the ages of these young men?"

"Oh, they run all the way from sixteen to twenty-three! When the school was first opened, we took younger boys; but, as we saw this would make it necessary to keep them for so many years, we have thought it best to confine our work more to young men who are old enough to show some natural gifts, even though they may not have had any considerable schooling."

"Do you fit these students for college?"

"We have two classes of students. One class is preparing for college. But this is not our main work. The chief aim of the school is to train young men for Christian work."

"What kind of work do you have in view?"

"We hope to fill a gap which I think is not filled to-day, except in some exceptional individual cases; not ministers nor laymen—that is, business men doing Christian work—but something between these—a sort of middle-men to stand in the breach; men who will give their time to visiting the homes of the people, hold cottage meetings and meetings in halls and stores that may be fitted up for such a purpose; men who will strike night after night, and follow up the work among the people."

"You spoke of training some especially for Chicago. What sort of work were you proposing to put them at in this city?"

"Just the work I have been mentioning. I'm sure there is hardly a city in the country that needs this work more. Look at the great mass of working-men and their families, and the enormous growth of the city. They are hardly being touched at present; and, understand me, I am not speaking disparagingly of the different churches and missions now attempting to reach this class, but anyone with their eyes open can't fail to see that the masses are not reached. One of two things is absolutely certain: either these people are to be evangelised, or the leaven of communism and infidelity will assume such enormous proportions that it will break out in a reign of terror such as this country has never known. It don't take a prophet or the son of a prophet to see these things. You can hear the muttering of the coming convulsion even now, if you only open your ears and eyes."

"What are the terms per year of the Mount Hermon School?"

"One hundred dollars."

"Does that cover expenses?"

"No; but then, we have an endowment fund, from which the balance is made up."

"But, I understand you have taken young men who were unable to pay even this amount. Is this not so?"

"Yes. Some of the young men or their parents pay their tuition, but quite a number are sent by parties who have means, and, having become interested in some young man, are glad to pay his way and give him the advantages of the school's training. Then, too, others, who have confidence in the work, have agreed to support from one to five boys, allowing me to select them."

"But do you take any young men who may be sent, provided their tuition is paid?"

"By no means. If we did, we should have a lot of students without settled principles, who would contaminate the whole institution. They would upset the very object of the undertaking. The school is not a refuge for boys who cannot be managed at home, though some applicants seem to have this idea."

"Do you intend to have them come to Chicago to finish their education?"

"My object is to keep them in Northfield till their minds are trained to study and to consecutive thinking, and then bring them on to Chicago to learn the more practical side of the work, bringing the study and the practice side by side."

"Do you teach anything but English at Mount Hermon?"

"Yes; Latin, Greek, and German."

"Would the work proposed for Chicago be confined to the English-speaking people?"

"Oh, no! My plan is to reach every nationality, and, as far as possible, through their own tongue. Why, we have nine nationalities represented in our school now. We want to train them to work among their own people."

"How do you propose to connect 'Mount Hermon' with the Chicago training-school?"

"There will be no connection beyond this: when we find young men who develop gifts for such work we will send them on. We now have, not only in Mount Hermon, among the young men, but also in the Northfield Young Ladies' Seminary, quite a number who would make most efficient workers. Of this I am quite confident."

"What salary will these workers receive?"

"Probably only their board at first."

"How long will you keep those students in the school?"

"Until they are qualified to take up work, independently or as assistants to ministers, as city and town missionaries, and in other church and mission work."

"What if not qualified, or unsuccessful?"

"Then they will be dropped. That has been the great drawback to most of the mission-work in all our large cities. Workers have been given the work to do who were not at all fitted for it, or have been kept in the work long after it was most evident to everyone but themselves that they had no gift in this direction—that they were a failure. Then, too, such a sifting will give character to the institution; will give the workers who are endorsed and sent out by the training-school a standing that will ensure them prestige and influence and the confidence of the people."

"Will you have both sexes in the Chicago school?"

"Certainly, at the lectures. Very often one consecrated woman is worth a dozen men for personal house-to-house work."

"Would it not be better to have these workers scattered over the city, rather than located in one building?"

"By no means. One of the leading features of the plan is the benefit derived from the unity of effort and study, and from the encouragement they can be to each other in comparing notes of their work—their successes and their failures. Besides, the teachers will, some of them, live with the students, and thus be able to give them extra incidental help, outside of the regular study hours."

"Whom do you think of engaging as teachers?"

All classes—ministers and laymen—anyone having special gifts in teaching; men or women who can train others for practical work."

"Do you intend to come to Chicago yourself?"

"Not to live, but often enough and long enough to keep the institution well in hand."

"What is your plan regarding the endowment of the institution? Would not sufficient money be given freely without this to keep up the work?"

"We will need much more than this endowment, but this 200,000 dollars will settle the permanency of the Training-school, and give it the confidence of the Christian public. It will put it on its feet, and besides will guarantee the general expense fund. Then, this fund may be increased with the increase of applicants for admission. I should certainly expect the institution to grow so as to demand much more for expenses than the interest on this amount."

"Do you feel sure there will be openings for such workers after you have had them trained?"

"Yes, thousands. I could put one hundred at work to-day. The cry from all sections of the country is for just this class of trained workers."

"Are there no institutions existing to-day that do this work you propose?"

"None now, nor ever has been, that I know of, to train men for this practical, hand-to-hand work among the masses.

"When do you propose to start this Chicago school?"

"Well, that depends upon when we can get the money needed. I would start it at once if the funds were ready. I hope, at the latest, the building will be ready and the school at work before next fall. But, pardon me, its nearly time for meeting."

Thus abruptly, yet not before having given us considerable light upon the proposed work, our conference was brought to a close.—Chicago Record.

A MOTHER'S AGONY.

MAY a nearly heart-broken mother appeal to you, to ask, Can there be something done to stop the sale of the enclosed most infernal literature? I am always praying and watching for my sons, knowing that known and unknown evils are in their path of life. [A list of translations of French novels is enclosed.]

Led by an instinct of some hidden evil in the house, I found a book ———; and whilst in great agony and still praying that I might have strength given to me to read it to the end, I did so, and have been prostrated both in body and mind ever since. I feel like Mr. Stead said he felt, "That he had been in hell." I feel that I shall never on earth lose the stain on my soul which was left on me after I had finished the reading of that awful book. And then came the heart-rending thought: My bright young son has also read it—he with his early manhood and ardent temperament to have such books to blacken his ideas of what womanhood is. No wonder I have been answered in a contemptuous manner, as, after reading such books, how can sons respect their mothers and sisters? How will they form connections? Not with the pure young girls of their acquaintance.

I am bowed down with grief to think of the evil; as this book was lent by the fine, handsome son of Christian parents, whose family descended from the Puritans for generations, who moves in good society, has every advantage of this world; I have since heard that he despises all women, and is lending devilish books to any, or all, who may visit him.

What is to be done? Who can reach them? If these books are printed our young sons will read them.

Our dear loving Saviour will, I trust, bind up my broken heart; but I am at present in great depression, ready to die, to think that I should have come face to face with such infernal thoughts, and more so about our young men. It is in the better-class society of our Christian homes that the cancer is eating.

A Mother who Cannot be Comforted.

THE BRIGHTON POLICE COURT AND RESCUE MISSION.—The missionary, Mr. George Cooper, has visited over a hundred prisoners in the cells during the past six months, and more than five hundred discharged prisoners in their homes. Many of these have been reclaimed and provided with suitable work. Special efforts have been made for the prevention of crime and immorality, and open-air Gospel meetings have been held with satisfactory results, "but the funds needed for the maintenance of the Mission are at present wholly insufficient." The report, though brief, teems with interest.

AN IRISH SERVANTS' TRAINING HOME.—Sir,—We are most anxious that all friends desirous of helping in the training of our Irish Protestant children for domestic service should be aware of this little Home. It is now five years in existence; accommodates nine girls from four to fourteen years of age. Three of our girls are now domestic servants in private families. The girls do all the house work except cooking. They daily attend the Parochial School from ten to three o'clock. £8 per annum supports one child. Preference in admission is always given to the children of servants.

REV. JOSEPH COOK on PUBLIC MORALS.

IN one of his recent Monday lectures Mr. Cook devoted the prelude to a full and trenchant study of the White Cross movement in this country and America, and cognate subjects. After detailing the events that followed on the revelations in The Pall Mall Gazette last July, and commenting on the deplorable state of matters then made manifest, the lecturer proceeded:—

What are the remedies for these mischiefs? Let us appreciate the size of them. What is the condition of American law on this topic? What is the legal age of consent in the United States? Let me call the roll of the Commonwealths, and let them appear here in blushing ranks. The age in Delaware is seven years. (Sensation.) The age is ten years in the following list of States: Alabama, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Florida, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Let us demand, first of all, that the protection of person be put on a level with that of property. (Applause.) The laws on this topic of the legal age of consent are a great exception to all the other laws touching minors. You do not allow a penny of property to be controlled by a girl under eighteen. A man cannot marry a girl under eighteen without the consent of her guardian and the marriage be legal. But in all these States there is such a condition of the law as to person that our civilisation is yet essentially that of the dark ages. I do not know how to explain the condition of the laws on this point, except by the theory that they are in some respects an inheritance from the ages when social vice was one part of the pagan cult of Italy and France. Our German forefathers, thank God, were monogamists, and were accustomed, as Tacitus says, to bury the adulterer alive in the mud and whip the adulteress through the streets. (Applause.) There was, says Tacitus, a conviction deeply seated in the hearts of the Germans, that there was something divine in woman. They revered her as a prophetess, and were not unmindful of her counsels even in war. There is in the unpolluted German or British or American heart an immense tidal wave of chivalry, and if we could but cause that to float this reform, we should carry it, with God's help, to a high triumph. I do not think Englishmen worse than Americans or Germans. There is a vein of brutality in the Anglo-Saxon, and when he is corrupted by strong drink, he becomes a social monster. We must confess this, for our history proves it.

Here are a few sentences from Escott, the English author of a famous book on England, and from a passage written since the Pall Mall revelations were made:

"English Society in the generation before the French Revolution rested on a basis of pure paganism. It was, in fact, from the time of the Reformation heathen and Godless. . . . The Englishman has a haunting consciousness of the brutality of our national character . . . a certain coarseness of fibre against which Englishmen have to be on their guard. . . . Our veneer conceals something that is essentially barbaric. . . . London Society is a chaotic congeries of sets. If a definition of the term Society is wanted, I know of no other than the social area of which the Prince of Wales is personally cognisant and within the limits of which his authority reigns supreme." (T. H. S. Escott, N.Y. Tribune, Sept. 27, 1885.)

But within even that charmed circle, the thunderbolts of these accusations have fallen, and no reply has been made, except that the dignity of respectable portions of society has been outraged.

As further remedies, I ask for such reforms in religious and scientific instruction as shall favour the White Cross Leagues. I ask in the field of social custom for early marriages, for inexpensive homes in the initial married years (applause), and for equal social penalties for men and women. (Applause.) I ask, lastly, for the execution of all the law that is now on the statute books, whether it affects man or woman. And I ask that the gilded saloon and the brothel, the liquor traffic on the one hand and the social evil on the other, be jointly attacked as the two sides of the chief Hell Gate of our time. (Storms of applause, continued and repeated again and again.)

"GIVE YE THEM TO EAT."

THE period before the full appearance of spring is always one of severe trial to the poor. The growing warmth of the sun is neutralised by nipping east winds and cold frosts at night, and as yet the fruits of the earth have not begun to appear. The Christian public, therefore, must not relax their efforts. Just now, too, we fear, the Mansion House Fund has diverted somewhat the stream of benevolence from the regular charitable channels, and although we do not criticise the management of that fund, it is clear that mission-work must be sustained, or the poor will be so much the losers. The river of misery and woe is so high that it needs all efforts to lessen its volume.

On a recent Sunday morning we visited some of the free breakfasts given in connection with the London Samaritan Society of Homerton Mission, of which Mr. J. J. Jones is the superintendent. No less than seven or eight of these free breakfasts are now being given every Sunday morning in various parts of the East-end; while the church bells are summoning the people to prayer and praise this calm Sabbath morning, it is blessed to feel that Christ's people have not forgotten his commands, but that they have gone out into the highways and byways of the great city seeking out the lost and those that have no helper, and while not forgetting their bodily wants are endeavouring to lead them to the feet of Him who will in no wise cast them out.

All admissions are by tickets, which are distributed by Christian workers and city missionaries, to necessitous cases they meet with in their labours, while in well-recommended cases of poor health a three weeks' stay at the Convalescent Home at Sandgate is granted. Soup suppers, &c., are also given during the week, and boots and clothes distributed by the Mission. Help will be thankfully received by Mr. John James Jones, London Samaritan Society, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

A COUNTRY COFFEE TAVERN.

DEAR SIR,—Five or six years since, a kind and helpful response was given to a few lines of appeal for aid to a devoted Christian worker, in starting a coffee tavern in this large populous village. It has been kept up by this lady to the present time, with untiring perseverance, and with no little self-denial; and has, under excellent management, been an influence for much good in the village.

The cost has always been squarely met till now, when, through some lost assistance, the funds available fail fully to meet the past year's expenditure. Being able to offer personal testimony to the good work done, I would confidently ask your readers for help, which will be received by Miss Robinson, whose address is Winsham, Braunton, near Barnstaple, with warm thankfulness.—Yours faithfully,

SAMUEL GILLESPIE PROUT.

The Terrace, Braunton.

FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.—The Committee, in their recent report, find encouragement in the approaching union of two of the Evangelical branches of the Church in Italy; also in the growing success of the evangelistic work in France and Belgium. Narrations are given by workers among the soldiers, civilians, and anarchists. Rev. H. J. Browne, Barnet, N., is the Secretary.

BRIGHTON.—The course of twelve expository lectures on the Book of Revelation, delivered by Dr. J. Anderson at Steine House Assembly-room, was brought to a close on Monday afternoon, March 29. The interest awakened has been unabated, and on each occasion there has been a large and appreciative audience, many testifying to blessing received, especially through the light thrown upon the other prophetical portions of the Word of God.

AYAHS' HOME.—It has been decided to request the Directors of the Asiatic Strangers' Home in Limehouse to take charge, at least temporarily, of the Home for Ayahs, which the present conductors were obliged to relinquish. The Committee of the Strangers' Home for Asiatics guarantee £100 rent for the first year, and they will endeavour to form a Ladies' Committee to supervise the management. Help towards the cost will be thankfully received by Mr. J. H. Fergusson, Hon. Secretary, Strangers' Home, Limehouse, E.

GEORGE SMALL, Missionary.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—A successful Conference of workers was held at the Theatrical Mission Institute on Wednesday, last week. Miss Rye, who has lately returned from Canada, gave an interesting account of her work. Mr. Kidner spoke on behalf of Our Own Gazette. Miss Aldridge, the Editor of Bible Work, told how the Bible women and nurses are appreciated amongst the sick and dying. Mr. Courthope Todd gave some touching and pathetic stories of theatrical life. The next Workers' Conference will be held the last Wednesday in the month, April 28, at a quarter to seven. All Christians will be heartily welcome.

EASTERTIDE.*

"Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord."—JOHN xx. 20.

THEY had loved Him to the death,
  That band of sorrowing men
Who met, ere setting of the sun,
  To tell the tale again—
Of how He loved and how He died;
  And mourn the vanished dream—
A King o'er all the world to reign!
  A Saviour to redeem!

How had they seen Him last?
  The thorns upon his brow,
The seal of death on the anguished eyes
  The grave damps clung to now;
Stripes on the bruisèd form,
  Wounded and scorned of men.
We sorrow not for the dead in Christ,
  As they mourned the Master then.

We can look beyond the grave,
  As we part from the lifeless clay;
The hand of God will guard that dust,
  And the soul is far away.
The flowers of our Easter-time,
  Are types of a coming day,
When her sleeping dead shall earth cast out,
  And the sea yield up its prey.

But the shadow of the cross
  Fell over earth and sky,
There was an echo in each heart
  To that deriding cry:
"He saved others"—can it be?
  "Himself He could not save!"
Ah! hope and trust, and all but love,
  Lie crushed within his grave.

Then came the happy shout—
  "The Lord is risen indeed!"
As water to the fainting one,
  Or sunshine to the freed;
As to the captive exile, home,
  Or sight unto the blind—
So thrilled their hearts to sudden joy,
  As harp-strings to the wind. M. G.

FOREIGN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

A MEETING on behalf of this Society was held on Monday week at the Hon. A. Kinnaird's residence, 50, South Audley-street. Herr Rohrbach, of Berlin, spoke of Gospel work in that city. A City Mission has been commenced; both it and the Y.M.C.A. are doing excellent service. In connection with his own mission many conversions have taken place, and some of the converts are now labouring in the same field. Mrs. Rohrbach has three mothers' meetings, and there is a large Sunday-school in operation.

Rev. Horace Noel explained that the Society's object was to form a means of communication between English Christians and such missions as those spoken of by Herr Rohrbach—local missions working in various parts of the Continent. It is not wise that English Christians should take so languid an interest in the spiritual condition of Europe. The door for the Gospel on the Continent has been wonderfully opened of late years.

Pastor Camus, of Moulins, gave a very interesting account of missionary work going on in that part of France. Protestants were once numerous, but persecution has nearly exterminated them. M. Camus described an evangelistic tour undertaken by himself and a co-worker to a district north of Moulins, when they met with a most hearty welcome, and found the people eager to hear the Word of God.

A NEW ASSOCIATION, called "The George Smith of Coalville Society and Band of Love," has lately been started. Its objects are to unite together, in bonds of brotherly love and sympathy, children, young people, and adults of both sexes and of all ages, irrespective of sect or party, to help forward among themselves, and to extend to other children, young persons, and adults not in fellowship, the "life-work of George Smith of Coalville, which he, almost single-handed, has been doing for the brickyard, canal, gipsy, van, and other children." Cards of fellowship and information relating to the establishment of branches, to be obtained only from the Secretary, at the head office, The Cabin, Crick, Rugby, to whom all communications must be addressed.

For the Young.

"SAM'S JESUS."

I FEEL sure that all of you who know and love the Lord Jesus will be glad to read this short account of the departure of one of his own to be with Him in the bright and better world. Towards the end of the last week in January we heard of the serious illness of a young man of about twenty years of age, who lived in one of the huts at a short distance from our "Home." On Sunday morning, the last day of the month, I went, with Maggie (my interpreter), to visit him. Never shall I forget that morning, and the scene which met my eyes on entering the miserable dwelling; the home where God was not known, where father, mother, and children had alike rejected and slighted the message of salvation. By the wall, near the door, stretched on a coarse pallet, I found the object of my visit. The hollow cheeks, sunken eyes, and short hacking cough, unmistakably bespoke the near approach of death. I saw at a glance that his days on earth were near a close.

He had been a wild, careless boy, and at first when I spoke of his state my heart ached to see the absence of sorrow, or repentance for sin. I did not disguise the fact that his end was near, and that soon, it might be very soon, he would have to stand before his God alone. He gradually became interested; and at last raised himself in a sitting posture, as if to hear better. His look became troubled, and as I repeated the solemn words, "Prepare to meet thy God," he broke into an agony of tears, and cries for mercy. His whole frame shook with agitation, and as I read one after another of the precious promises of pardon and forgiveness he became quiet, and listened with eager attention. I felt that my prayers were heard, and that the eyes which had so long been blind to a Saviour's love were about to be opened.

At last I turned to Rev. xxii. 17, "The Spirit and the bride say, Come," &c. (it was read in Kaffir), and the words there were blessed in bringing life to the dead. With an earnest look on his face he asked to have them repeated, and the second time he joined in the words, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." I shall ever remember the change on his countenance as time after time he slowly repeated the word "freely," and, as if speaking in answer to someone near to him, he said, "I have come, Sam has come." He had indeed taken hold of his Saviour, and from that hour it was all sunshine in his soul.

He lingered for a fortnight after that Sabbath morning. And during that time I visited him twice, sometimes thrice, a day. He suffered much towards the end, and often when scarcely able to speak I have heard in broken whispers, "O Lamb of God, Sam's Jesus, stay with me." His deathbed was a wonder to all who visited him, especially to the heathen friends, who could not understand his peace of mind and fulness of joy when almost on the brink of the grave. He always looked forward with great pleasure to our visits, and one afternoon, just a few days previous to his "going home" I had been detained until past my usual hour of visiting. On inquiring the reason, I explained that I had been speaking to a heathen girl, who, for the first time, had heard of the love of Jesus. I said that she seemed hardened, and could not realise that He had died for her. With the light of his newly-found joy beaming from his eyes, he turned to me with these words: "Why did you not tell her that 'the Spirit and the bride say, Come'? She must believe that."

Through sleepless and weary days of pain the name of Jesus was always on his lips, especially in prayer for his Godless father and others who were dear to him. One day, on being asked the cause of his happiness, he answered, "Why do you ask? Do you not know that Christ is with me?" He frequently repeated, in his own language, Isa. i. 18: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool." On the evening before he was called away, he seemed to be suffering more than usual, and as I prayed with him he held my hand tightly clasped in his.

Seeing that the end was so near and that probably I might not meet him on earth again, I repeated the words of David: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil," &c. In a faint voice came the response: "Yes; He is with me. The Lamb of God is with me, I will fear no evil."

When I was leaving him he pressed my hand to his burning lips, whispering, "Good-night; I will meet you at the gate." Early next morning we received the tidings that he had gone—gone from a bed of pain and a comfortless home to inhabit one of the many mansions—to be for ever with the Lord. His father had been watching by him during the night, and towards dawn he expressed a wish to know what the time was. On being told that the day was just breaking, he turned away with a smile, and his day broke in the glorious brightness of the fairer world—where the shadows have all flown away. M. A. Dalgarno.

A YOUNG MISSIONARY IN MOROCCO.

The following interesting letter, which appears in an American contemporary, is somewhat out of date, but it will nevertheless be acceptable to our young readers:—

Dear Friends,—As I am but twelve years old, the age, I suppose, of many of you, I thought you would enjoy a little letter from me, written in Africa. Yesterday, as it was New Year's day, our family and some other English friends took donkeys and went for a lovely ride. There were fifteen of the party, besides four natives to take care of the donkeys. The donkeys are the most used beasts of North Africa, as there are no carriages here; it is only by practice that we learn to stay on them, for the saddles are long, and almost a yard wide, with no stirrups or anything else, so it must be expected that one or two falls occurred; but I had a large donkey, and managed to stay on.

After about two hours' riding we reached the fort, where we had been expecting to go. It was a very old place, with very old-fashioned cannon. There was a beautiful beach in front; so sister Pearl, a little friend, and myself, went to play on the sand. The first thing I did was to write in large letters, "God is love," which is, very likely, the first Bible text ever written like that in Morocco. We had lots of fun, playing in the sand, and among the green grass full of wild flowers.

As it grew later, we mounted our donkeys, and started for home. We came by the large town beach and had to cross a river. I thought it great fun, for the water was not deep. This was the way we spent the first day of 1886.

Now I will tell you a little about Africa. We have lots of oranges, and we can buy six for one cent, so we have all we want. And the money, too, is puzzling, for there are twelve coins to one cent; so one cent goes a long way. There are a great many camels that bring grain from the country about here. The people are very kind-hearted and generous. When you go to their houses they always give you tea, and you must drink three cups, or they think you don't like it. You are not asked to have a chair, for they have none; but you must sit on a cushion, or mat. You never see the men in the houses; they are generally in the streets, and the women are kept away from the men. And the women never see their husbands until after they are married; they don't even know what they look like. The wedding lasts seven days, and on the last day the bride is put in a large box, with thin stuff, like curtain lace. Then the box is put on the back of a mule with her in it. After she is ready, men with guns and trumpets march along by the mule, blowing and shouting and making a great noise, until they come to the bridegroom's house, and they see each other for the first time.

I am learning to read and write Arabic, so that I can tell these poor people about the Lord Jesus. Pray for us all. Now it is getting late, so I will say good night, wishing you all much happiness in this New Year,—Your loving friend, Tangier, Morocco. Gertie Baldwin.

[When in Tangier we made this little sister's acquaintance. She is a born missionary, one of the ladies said. She already speaks some Arabic, and is seeking to win souls to Christ.—Ed.]

A NEW EFFORT OF THE Y.W.C.A.

EVER alive to the varied necessities and circumstances of young women in London, the Y.W.C.A. has opened up a new sphere of Christian and sisterly service among the many nurses and nursemaids who frequent the London parks with their youthful charges. Miss K. Norris, one of the "Park Visitors," writing from the headquarters of the Association, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, W., says:—

All who visit the parks must be struck by the number of nursemaids and children to be seen there morning and afternoon. Many of these young women may be found reading books and periodicals that can do them no good, and may do them much harm, filling their minds with all sorts of romantic and unhealthy ideas, and laying them open to the least temptation. The object of this new branch is to visit the parks regularly in fine weather, distributing good wholesome books, and, when practicable, getting the girls to join some branch of the Y.W.C.A., where there is a library from which they can have books (for read they will, and the thing is to give them helpful books to read). There are Bible-classes held at the branches, and most of the young women have an occasional week evening or Sunday afternoon. To those who cannot come to us, we send a letter every month, that they may feel they have a friend to come to in case of need.

We also find the girls respectable lodgings, where they can stay between leaving one situation and going to another; we have registry offices in connection. Though this branch is especially for nurses and nursemaids we gladly welcome any servants to the classes held at 16a, Cavendish-street, W. The first meeting was held on Tuesday, March 23, when about thirty nurses, nursemaids, and other servants were present. There was a pleasant gathering for tea, and a very happy evening was spent.

Will any ladies, interested in the welfare of their servants, and indeed, for the sake of the children over whom the nurses have so much influence, come and help us? We want many park visitors, who could give a couple of hours, morning, afternoon, or evening. If any ladies are willing to help I shall thankfully see and consult with them.

REV. THOMAS HARRISON IN ILLINOIS.—A correspondent of The Christian Standard writes:—Our city (Springfield) has never known such an awakening in all its history. It is not yet seven weeks since Thomas Harrison, the well-known evangelist, came among us. From the first service until the present there has been no cessation, no abatement of interest, no lack of the Divine presence, but with the tide steadily rising we find the city moved from centre to circumference. More than 1100 souls have bowed at the altar as penitents. nearly all of whom have found Jesus the "friend of sinners," the mighty to save. Great solemnity prevails. Conviction is deep and lasting. Roman Catholics come in great numbers; many have found the rest through faith which never could be found in the weary round of works. To God be all the glory. You may imagine what great uplifts the Christians have received.

NON-COMMITTAL.—We may anger the Lord, and yet be strictly non-committal. I dare say there are some here who are not Christians, and yet they never say a word against Christianity. They are "strictly neutral." They judge that the less they think or say about this great matter the better. Jesus was angry that men should be silent when honesty and candour demanded speech of them. You must not think you are going to escape by saying, "I am not a professor." There can be no third party in this case. In the eternal world there is no provision made for neutrals. Those who are not with Jesus are against Him, and they that gather not with him are scattering abroad. You are either wheat or tares, and there is nothing between the two. O sirs, you grieve Him, though you do not openly oppose Him! Some of you are especially guilty, for you ought to be amongst the foremost of his friends. Shame on you to treat the Lord so ill!—C. H. Spurgeon.

Anniversaries.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE thirty-third annual meeting of this organisation took place on Monday week at Exeter Hall. Mr. Mark J. Stewart, M.P., presided. The meeting was preceded by a social gathering of members and friends. Mr. G. Kirkham, Secretary, read an abstract of the report, which stated that the membership had increased during the year by eighty-five, and now amounts to 990. Special missions and services were held in 681 towns and villages; there were about 200 stations occupied in London and its suburbs by the members of the mission. Races, fairs, regattas, &c., were visited, and the number of special services was returned at 1836, while the distribution of tracts and leaflets has reached nearly 1,000,000.

Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn said there was no time at which there had been a greater need for the labours of the mission than the present, when there was so much indifference about attending church and chapel. He urged the need of tact and discretion; but the most important qualification was a thorough knowledge of the Word of God. Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, D.D., gave some excellent advice to the members as to the language they should employ. They wanted great plainness of speech. Saxon, after all, is the sweetest and the best; we do not need any grand, eloquent phrases.

Professor D'Orsey having briefly spoken, Dr. Sinclair Paterson laid great stress upon the need of earnestness in preaching. His experience had taught him a little, and he always wanted the truth to take hold of and to master him. If the truth possessed the heart, the heart would make the tongue speak. Rev. David Davies remarked on the great debt that Wales owed to open-air preaching, and referred to the labours of Christmas Evans, and other men, who laboured in the Principality.

Mr. John MacGregor gave some interesting reminiscences of the early days of the Mission, showing the wonderful progress made. Dr. Draper and the Chairman also briefly addressed the meeting.

Mildmay Men's Night School.

THE annual meeting was held in the Conference Hall on the 31st ult., and must have greatly astonished those who saw it for the first time. To enter the tea-rooms and see some 400 men, dressed with great neatness, arranged at tables laden with good things, and decorated with choice flowers and ferns, and waited upon by the deaconesses and other ladies, was a striking prelude to the meeting in the large hall, which, viewed from the platform, seemed nearly full. First came sweet song from a choir, then prayer by Rev. Mr. Lawrance, and a few words from Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, who presided.

Mr. James E. Mathieson read the examiners' report, which showed that the school had made distinct advances over former years, especially in Scripture knowledge. But the statement which elicited most interest was the one made by Mr. P. S. Badenoch, the Superintendent, who is evidently a great favourite with the scholars, judging by the tumultuous applause with which he was greeted. This was the sixteenth year of the school's existence. It had been open 69 nights, and had 47 classes, taught by as many ladies, three nights a week. There were 1165 names on the books. The highest attendance was 534, and the lowest 235, giving an average of 368. No less than 168 different occupations were represented. £21 had been contributed by the scholars towards the expenses, and 69 pledges had been taken. The spiritual blessing was more marked than in any previous year, and a number had found the Lord, while backsliders had been restored.

Her Grace Sydney, Duchess of Manchester, then distributed 321 certificates of merit to as many men, and 78 pocket Bibles, the latter being for attendance. By this time the Bishop of Bedford had arrived. He received a cordial reception, and was listened to with marked attention while he gave an address on the unselfishness of Christianity, illustrated by Christ Himself.

An exhibition and sale of work made by the men formed not the least interesting item in the evening's programme.

The Children's Scripture Union.

THE seventh anniversary of this Union was held in Exeter Hall, on Thursday last, meetings being held afternoon and evening. The increase in members was very marked, the hall being literally packed.

Mr. T. B. Bishop, Hon. Secretary, said there are now over 300,000 members in all parts of the world, while the cards are printed in twenty-eight different languages.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., who presided, expressed deep thankfulness on account of the extension of the Union into all lands. Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice rejoiced that in days when the infidel and sceptic are seeking to overturn the Word of God so many should be banded together to read and ponder its pages. Mr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Trinity College, Cambridge, gave some interesting details of the Public Schools branch, illustrating how the boys themselves are the best workers. Mr. H. M. Trickett mentioned the case of one little girl of twelve who had been the means of forming a branch of over a hundred members. Rev. D. B. Hankin also expressed his deep thankfulness that the Scripture Union had become so widely spread.

In the evening Mr. Bishop read a large number of encouraging extracts from letters from different parts of the world. Mr. W. Shrimpton, the secretary for the colonies. read extracts from a letter from the lady secretary in Victoria, where there are now 5568 members. In New South Wales there are about 7000 members, in New Zealand fifty branches, and at the Cape about fifty branches.

Mr. Josiah Spiers said he rejoiced to know the Scripture Union embraced all ages (he had himself enrolled members from three to one hundred years of age), all ranks from Prince to peasant, and all nations. The foreign work he regarded as exceedingly important—real Gospel work, putting the way of salvation clearly before the young. At present about £3000 is wanted for the foreign work.

Hon. A. F. Kinnaird spoke briefly and warmly of the Scripture Union work. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith and Rev. W. S. Standen also dwelt on the importance and usefulness of the Union.

Sermon-lane Mission.

THE annual meeting of the friends of this tried Institution was held on March 30, at Myddelton Hall, Islington, Mr. H. R. Williams, the Treasurer of the Ragged School Union, in the chair. The attendance was good.

After prayer by Rev. Mr. Petch, the report was read by the Honorary Treasurer, Mr. Cooksey. It showed that the Mission was in a flourishing condition, notwithstanding the lamented illness of its laborious superintendent, Mr. Fuller. The space at our command prevents us detailing all the agencies busily at work in Sermon-lane; suffice it to say, that the report showed that the Mission maintains its old character as "a manufactory of happiness." The Gospel is preached to attentive audiences; the ignorant are instructed in schools; the sick are visited, the hungry fed, the naked clothed, intemperance combated, lessons of thrift inculcated, domestic arts taught, dreary homes brightened, and sunshine thrown on many sad hearts.

The Committee have during the year opened an institute for youths, and another for young women. This, they hope, will be found to be the missing-link so long sought for by Sunday-schools, that will prevent the elder scholars from drifting out of reach.

The opening address of the Chairman had much interest imparted to it by his statement that, after a conference with Sir Henry Du Cane, and a careful examination of statistics, he was satisfied that there had been a diminution of 75 per cent. in juvenile crime; a proof of the value of ragged schools and other educational and home missionary agencies. There was also a general consensus of opinion among the speakers on the platform (Rev. Mr. Davies, Rev. Mr. Carmichael, Rev. Mr. Downes, Rev. Mr. Day, Mr. Carter, of the Sunday School Union, Mr. Lamont, and Mr. W. Haig Miller), that in the spread of such mission halls as Sermon-lane among our Metropolitan masses lies a true remedy for those social disturbances which have recently broken out among the working classes of Belgium. Rev. Ossian Davies in a speech of much power encouraged the workers of the Mission, which, we may say, stands in need of funds; the treasurer's balance-sheet showed only a trifling sum in his favour, and death has thinned the ranks of supporters during the year.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Rev. J. G. Gregson, of the Soldiers' Temperance Society, is about to return to India.

The French Minister of Finance proposes to cover a deficit by means of fresh taxes on spirits.

Mr. Hutson, Secretary to the Midland Temperance League, has had a nine days' mission at Stafford.

A Young Men's Prohibition Club, numbering 120 members, has been formed at Michigan University.

Four thousand people in Meadville, Pa., are reported to have joined Francis Murphy's blue ribbon brigade.

A Home for Female Inebriates is shortly to be opened in connection with the British Women's Temperance Association.

The Revenue Returns for the year ending March 31, show a decrease in receipts on account of customs, £494,000; and of excise, £1,140,000.

Glasgow.—A meeting was held, April 1, in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, of citizens favourable to a reduction in the number of public-houses.

Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M P., proposes to move a resolution, in the House of Commons, in favour of the Saturday evening closing of public-houses.

The Glasgow Corporation has acquired certain public-houses. To the great annoyance of Temperance friends they have been re-let for the same purpose.

Government has furnished an opportunity for further debate on the Sunday Closing Bill, the second reading of which has been carried by a large majority.

Both Houses of Congress, U.S., are being deluged with petitions in favour of Temperance Bills now pending. Most are on behalf of a Bill for Temperance instruction in schools.

The Drink Sellers in Cleveland and Cincinnati have agreed to a general defiance of the Sunday drinking laws on a given Sunday, in the hope that their numbers will secure their immunity.

The Bishop of London will deliver the opening address at the British and Colonial Temperance Congress, July 14. Cardinal Manning and Archdeacon Farrar will preside on the two following days.

A Petition signed by 208,827 of his subjects, asking for the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic, has been handed to King Oscar of Sweden. There are now seven Blue Ribbonites in the Norwegian Storthing.

Some Notorious Jobbery has been perpetrated by certain New York aldermen who have been arrested. An American paper asks, "What else can we expect when we choose our aldermen from liquor stores and gambling dens?"

A Result of "High License."—Over forty liquor saloons in New Haven, Conn., have recently been closed, as the licences have been raised from 50 dollars to 200 dollars, and the Temperance organisations are so vigorous.

Sir Charles Warren, the new Chief Commissioner of Police, when starting on one of his recent expeditions, said he hoped his soldiers would apply their rations of rum "to the soles of their feet and not to their stomachs."

At Littlehampton, Rev. W. H. Simms has for six winters conducted popular Saturday night entertainments for the working classes. Many are thus kept out of the streets and public-houses. One penny is charged for admission; but the receipts do not meet the expenses.

Miss Cleveland, the President's sister, is making her convictions on the subject of Temperance felt in Washington. On February 27, she had a dinner for the wives of senators and representatives, and instead of wine there was Apollinaris water, and the punch bowl was filled with lemonade. The first ladies of Washington heartily approved of the innovation.

PARIS.—Kindly allow me to correct one word in your issue of to-day, which is likely to mislead. Armenian should be American—our Homes being open to all English-speaking young women, without distinction of creed. All are invited to attend our morning and evening prayer and Bible readings, and it is a matter of deep thankfulness that many find Christ.

77, Avenue Wagram, Paris. Ada M. Leigh.

THE TROUBLE IN BELGIUM, says The Echo, is not so very surprising to those who have been acquainted with the country for the last twenty years. It is a land of great capitalists and an exceedingly redundant population, and a large proportion of the wealthier class show little sympathy with the poor. In the towns, as well as in the country, there is bitter complaint as to the rents. Short leases are given to shopkeepers, and, so soon as a man has made a little business, and it becomes an object to him to remain where he is, his rent is raised.

LAUNDRY MATRONS.—Sir,—I am continually asked by those engaged in Preventive and Rescue Work where to find a laundry matron, and can seldom, if ever, give a satisfactory reply. I have lately advised several young ladies who wished to enter Christian work to qualify themselves for this special branch, but where could the training be obtained? Talking over the difficulty with a well-known Christian worker the other day, she offered to receive a few ladies into a Home under her own superintendence, and there give them a thorough knowledge of the work. Each lady would be required to pay a small sum to cover the expenses of her board and lodging. I shall be very happy to answer further questions, and give the name of the lady who volunteers this training.—Yours faithfully,

Grace Elizabeth Soltau.

Notes and Comments.

An esteemed lady correspondent in Germany informs us that an effort is being made to organise a Young Women's Christian Association in that country.

Everyone who wishes well to the nation at large must desire the success of Mr. Conybeare's proposed Bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to children under thirteen. At a Conference held in the north of London it was reported that 7019 children entered 200 drinking houses in three hours. Those 200 houses were fairly representative of the 10,000 other licensed premises in the Metropolis, so that probably 250,000 boys and girls are thus becoming habituated to the surroundings of the public-house. The state of London is unhappily not exceptional. A Saturday night drinking census of the city of Bristol in 1881, showed that in four hours 12,000 children entered 900 drinking houses. And what is true of London and Bristol is also true of the majority of our large cities and towns.

We note with much satisfaction that this Bill was read a second time last Friday evening, though the majority was small. We fear that its provisions may be watered down in Committee. We must, however, thankfully accept small mercies in this reform, while we continue to ask for more.

The House of Commons did a splendid evening's work on Friday. Besides reading Mr. Conybeare's measure a second time, it passed through Committee, and read a third time without a division, Mr. Stansfeld's Bill repealing the Contagious Diseases Acts. It read a second time Mr. Pease's Bill for further restricting the hours of the Sunday opening of drink-shops, and passed through Committee the Durham Sunday Closing Bill. It read a second time a much-needed Bill for enabling widows to have a voice in the appointment of the guardians of their children; and it read a second time a measure for enabling Nonconformist bodies to enjoy the privilege, long possessed by the State Church, of compulsorily acquiring sites for churches. We repeat, it was a splendid evening's work, and enhanced the character for earnestness and business-like promptitude already gained by the present House.

The Saturday Review says, with force and truth, that it is a monstrous thing that London should be made the sink for literary refuse too disgusting to be openly sold in Paris; and that Sir Charles Warren, in his new rôle of Chief Commissioner of Police, will do well to give his attentive consideration to this subject; for thoroughfares in Piccadilly are still disfigured by windows crammed with the most obscene French books. Lord Campbell's Act was elicited by Holywell-street. It is not creditable that the evil then sought to be suppressed in that "obscure collection of tumble-down tenements" should now be found flourishing in large and important thoroughfares. The reviewer adds that, "if the new Chief Commissioner gives due attention to this unsavoury but important topic, he will find himself constrained to take action immediately and energetically. A very short and moderately observant walk in some of the main streets of London will satisfy him that it is not without urgent reason that this appeal is made to him."

Lord Radstock has gone to Rome, where he hopes to evangelise. He desires prayer on his own behalf; and also for one who once filled a high place in the Vatican, and who is coming into clearer light.

At the last annual meeting of her Orphan Home, Miss Mittendorff stated it to be her intention, advised by her Council, to take a house in London which would serve as an office for the transaction of business connected with the Home, and where anyone interested in this work could see her or Miss Macgrath without the inconvenience of going to Epsom. She is now settled at 2, Aberdeen-place, Maida Hill, N.W., a few yards from the Edgware-road. Her friends will no doubt take an early opportunity of calling and cheering her with their hearty Christian sympathy and support.

In a letter to The Times of Friday last, Mr. J. H. Tuke, writing from Westport, county Mayo, describes the extreme destitution that prevails in that part of the West of Ireland. Immediate steps, he says, should be taken to provide seed potatoes for the next season's crop. £1500 placed at once at his disposal would permit him to bestow this great boon upon hundreds of families who would otherwise be left to despair.

"Would that the rising generation might turn away from some of the pious trash now introduced too often into Sunday-schools, and spend their time in the delightful and soul-moving study of the Pilgrim's Progress!" So says Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn; to which wise wish we respond with a hearty "Amen!"

Moses married an Ethiopian woman; Aaron and Miriam spoke against him; but God sternly rebuked them, and vindicated Moses. It is not uncommon for the Lord's people in this most favoured nation to discountenance marriages with persons of some other nationalities. Such interference is always thankless, sometimes dangerous. Remember Aaron and Miriam. All marriages are not happy where both parties are of the same nation, nor are all unhappy where this is not the case. Often with painful attrition husband and wife rub down each other's angularities, so that unions which seemed miserable at first turn out happily afterwards. Each has been an irritant but yet a means of grace to the other; and their later love is deeper and more lasting than the first.

Workers among soldiers may be glad to know that the graphic sketch from life by a non-commissioned officer, "Gripping and Slipping," that recently appeared in our columns, can now be had in leaflet form for distribution. It has been highly commended as a telling presentation of the Gospel, specially suitable for soldiers. (See Advt.)

A letter signed by Mr. S. Morley and Drs. Tyler, Clemance, and Wickson, has been addressed to the Congregational and Baptist Churches, to set apart Sunday, April 18, as a day of intercession before the May meetings, and of prayer for the putting away from the churches of the worldliness and unbelief that are weakening ministers and people. If a spirit of prayer should come upon the churches, it would be an evidence that the Lord has good things in reserve for us in these dark and troublous times.

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance have issued an appeal for a united approach to God in the spirit of humiliation and prayer. "They believe that throughout the land there is in the hearts of all who fear God an earnest desire to unite in humbling themselves for their own and national sins, and to seek the mercy and interposition of the Most High in the present distress. They earnestly desire that private and public prayer should abound for Her Majesty the Queen, the Government, and the Country, pleading that God will graciously remove his chastening hand, and be once more favourable to our people and to our land."

A republished letter by Rev. Henry Venn, dated April 15, 1786, possesses much interest just now. It tells of a day spent entirely in prayer, intercession, and praise, by a few clergymen. Simeon, of Cambridge, was among them. From an early hour, till they parted in the evening, nothing was talked of foreign to the great business of the cause of Christ in the land, and their own qualification for ministering the Word. Who can say how much the great evangelical revival that followed that period may have been owing to such times of waiting upon God? The letter closes with the words:—

> Oh that in London the ministers would meet in this way! They and their dear people would thrive more. Here there is no probability of dispute or disagreement. Each one sees what he is called to be, what an arduous work is the ministry, his own innumerable defects, and has no leisure or inclination to turn his eyes upon the faults of another.

We would suggest that everywhere little praying bands of believers should meet for supplication. Christ seemed to emphasise the value He set on these twos and threes. In such gatherings there is often an absence of the false motive, and very real intercession. Rarely was there so loud a call for such prayer union. Tremendous difficulties meet statesmen of all parties. Industrial distress weighs heavily. Anarchy watches its opportunity. Rumours of war impend, and social disaffection threatens. Prayer will guide, and it will also calm. The Quaker, Isaac Penington, between two imprisonments wrote:—

> Oh, how I have prayed for the lost world! For all the souls of mankind how hath my soul bowed in unutterable breathings of spirit before my God, and could not be silenced, until He quieted my spirit in the righteousness and excellence of his will, and bid me leave it to Him.

A leading French author has dedicated his latest volume: "For my sons when they are twenty years old." Unless the youths are far advanced in their teens the probability is that by the time they are twenty their father's work will have been relegated to the chandler's shop. At any rate, it is to be hoped, for their own sake, that such will be the case, for the volume is but a story of vice, without any redeeming feature. It is to be deeply regretted that the author, and the English publisher who has issued a translation, have not had some regard for the morals of other people's sons. We trust there are few English fathers who would care to see the book in the hands of a son, of even more than twenty years old. "Art for art's sake," the motto of the realistic school, seems invariably to land its professors in the gutter. Unfortunately for the well-being of society, there is money to be made by this disgusting "realism." We can only ask again, What are the police authorities doing, that some effectual methods are not found to stop the publication in this

TIMELY ADVICE.

As the brighter, warmer weather takes the place of biting frosts, keen winds, and damp mists, a large number of persons will eagerly anticipate with the advent of summer some amelioration of their ailments, which during winter months prove more or less distressing. It is well known that there are thousands who go on in this way year after year, every twelve months being divided, so to speak, into two seasons, one of suffering, the other of slight relief from a "durance vile," rendered imperative by their unfitness to encounter, to say nothing of enjoy, anything but the balmiest weather. Of course there are many people who can get over this difficulty by wintering abroad, but these are comparatively few, and by far the largest percentage of such sufferers are compelled to drag on through the colder months of the year with a series of days dull with suffering and confinement indoors, the warmer ones clouded more or less by a lurking dread of the succeeding winter.

We have endeavoured to show from time to time how the human system may of itself be enabled to overcome climatic influences by the restoration of dormant forces to activity, but those sufferers who should be most interested in this fact are apt to mistake the time at which remedial measures should be applied. When the trying season comes they are very ready and anxious to do anything to get help, but it is not so easy when the dull pall of winter has settled upon them. At that time the protective forces of the system are strained to the uttermost in a natural endeavour to carry out their functions with integrity, and this can scarcely be maintained even with the constant use of artificial aids and other remedial measures. These cannot do more than check the rapid degeneration which must follow this strain continued year after year. On the other hand, a more favourable season (i.e., warmer weather) relaxes the strain upon the recuperative forces, and they are enabled to work more efficiently, and fulfil to a greater degree the offices for which they were designed. Then is the time to seek to strengthen them. The influences which before could only stay the waste or prevent a collapse, have a chance to exert a bracing effect upon the constitution, storing up a reserve of energy that may be brought into play when the season at which greater demand is made returns again.

It will not be difficult for anyone to gather from this view, which is surely logical, that if Odo-Magnetic Treatment can do so much for sufferers of the class to which we have referred during the most trying season of the year, it has far greater scope if adopted while external conditions do not necessitate any special exercise of the weak forces. The improvement in health from this natural energiser, aided by more favourable weather, is augmented and more permanently established from day to day, as long as the application of the remedy is continued.

This is simplicity itself, and its simplicity must be a powerful argument in favour of Odo-Magnetic Treatment, for the more simple the remedy, and the more closely it is allied to the healing processes of nature, the more speedy and permanent will be the effect produced. A remedy of this character is so simple that it may be in operation without the knowledge of the sufferer, and may only be revealed by the conscious increase of strength, and an inclination for, and actual delight in, the duties of life.

Colonel H. FOQUETT, Kendrick-road, Reading.

February 5, 1886.—"I have the pleasure to inform you that notwithstanding my advanced age (81), when I adopted your Odo-Magnetic Appliances for the relief of a frequently painful oppression on my chest, I derived the greatest benefit; indeed, for many months complete relief; latterly I have slight returns at long intervals, but much less severe than formerly. You are welcome to make any use you please of this communication."

Miss CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. Atkinson's, Ash Villa, North Road, Darlington.

November 24, 1885.—"I have worn one of your appliances now for several years through the recommendation of my dear friend Mrs. Thompson, of Barnard Castle, when I was Bible-woman there. I can truly say that a complete cure has been effected in me under your Treatment. I suffered from my earliest recollections from a relaxed throat and glandular swellings, with extreme debility. I now at fifty years of age enjoy better health, and for over two years have not had the least symptoms of my old complaint, and out of gratitude to my Heavenly Father, I have done all that lies in my power to recommend your Treatment."

Miss E. LARRITT, Lyndhurst, Redhill.

February 26, 1886.—"It would be almost impossible to speak too strongly of the good the Magnetic Vest and Throatlet have done me; by God's blessing my throat is stronger than it has been for ten years, during which time I have had almost to give up singing entirely; now I can use my voice a good deal in singing. I am considerably stronger in my general health, and since I have had the Appliances, viz., the summer of 1884, I have lost the terrible headaches to which I was so subject."

It will be regarded as a pleasure by Mr. B. C. Garratt to do anything to extend the knowledge of this subject, and to afford any desired information. His advice may be had gratuitously, by personal application or by letter, and those whose sufferings have become chronic through the failure of ordinary remedies are, if possible, more especially welcome to his attention. A thoughtfully candid opinion may always be anticipated, with the fullest consideration of all necessities and varying features of the case submitted. B. Copson Garratt, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

country of these vicious volumes? By-and-by we shall have to pay dearly enough for the importation.

At an inquest held the other day in one of the Dublin Hospitals a piteous story was told of a young girl whose death, it was stated, had been accelerated by rough treatment at the hands of some soldiers. Medical evidence went to show that when she was admitted she was in a dying state, and suffering from pleuro-pneumonia, and that a blow would have hastened her death. These simple facts are sad enough; but additional statements were made which threw a lurid light upon a portion of the child-life of our large cities, well calculated to create feelings of pity even in the breasts of those who have so strenuously opposed recent wise legislation with regard to young girls.

Elizabeth Doyle was not eighteen years of age when she died, and she had spent over three years upon the streets. "One of her sisters followed the same course of life," said a witness simply. The mother of the two children was very much affected whilst the testimony was being given. In her grief she cried out, "I hope she is happy in the sight of God; she is better now than on the streets." To which the Coroner answered, "From what I have heard from the Chaplain I am sure she is."

The Very Rev. Canon Forde stated that many young girls were reclaimed within the walls of the hospital, and restored to society. We rejoice to know it, but after all prevention is better than cure; and there are in Dublin, as in other large cities, removable causes which inevitably tend to swell the number of those, many of them mere children, who are living that heart-breaking "course of life" which at its happiest ends in the hospital wards and the nettle-covered corner of the graveyard.

Noble-hearted men and women of all sects are labouring to lessen the feeders of this terrible river of sin and death, but the labourers are few in comparison with the extent of the sorrow, and suffering, and evil. In addition to the great army of those who either shut their eyes when they come upon this horrible accompaniment of our nineteenth century civilisation, or, after looking on, pass by on the other side, there are others, unfortunately far more influential, who, like Lecky, in his "European Morals," do not hesitate to urge that this abominable sacrifice to Moloch is necessary, and that these child-martyrs are "most efficacious guardians of virtue." Surely of any man holding such views it may be said in the Master's words, that it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he be cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

In a very interesting short paper which appears in the current number of our American contemporary, The Century Magazine, the question of "hymn tinkering" is intelligently considered, and the writer, Rev. Dr. Robinson, urges with much reason that although in some cases it is better to return to the author's own language, "in other cases it is preferable to retain the changes which popular sentiment has accepted." There is very much force in this, for in many instances it cannot be controverted, except wantonly, that the changes are improvements. Newton and Cowper, Wesley, Watts, and Doddridge, made no claim to infallibility, though certainly Wesley, who invented the phrase "hymn tinkering," deprecated very strongly any interference whatever with either his own or his brother's compositions; yet in some cases the alterations which have been made in the hymns of all these well-known writers are simply the removal of crudities or the substitution of a clear and definite phrase for a cloudy and vague one.

Upon one branch of the subject, however, and that, perhaps, the most important, Dr. Robinson says nothing; perhaps, because, as we do, he considers that the question does not need to be discussed, and that there can be no justification for interference with the theology of a hymn. To find Cowper and Watts altered to suit Unitarianism, and Wesley's noble hymns pruned and added to, so as to suit a selfish sectarianism, cannot be anything but painful to those who love honesty; and one would have thought that Protestantism had a sufficiently large hymnology to render it unnecessary to take the hymns of Faber and other Roman Catholic writers, and to cut out portions here and there, even with the view of gilding refined gold.

In these days of mental and spiritual activity, when men are almost forced to hurry to and fro in intellectual as in other matters, there is grave room to fear that many duties near at hand are overlooked or neglected; and, after all, the most perfect Christian life is that in which almost unconsciously, attention is paid to detail. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much," and the Master puts within our immediate reach that which He desires us to do. To be straining after even great and noble efforts, and to be overlooking the fainting one at the gate wanting the cup of cold water which it would be so easy to give, is not to be following in the footsteps of Jesus, for the records of the Divine life upon earth show clearly that even with Calvary and its dread cause before Him, the Saviour never neglected that which might have been considered trivial by comparison, and that with the burden of a world's sorrow and sin upon his heart He was careful to command them to sit down, to give them the earthly food, and even to smile upon the little children. What a lesson is this to those who in our day leave undone little duties near at hand in the search after greater ones which they have not been bidden to seek.

Harper's Weekly for March 20 contains successful portraits of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, with excellent engravings of many of the buildings in connection with the Young Women and Young Men's Schools at Northfield, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey's residences, &c., besides an accompanying literary sketch. We regret that copies cannot be obtained in this country; the publishers of the paper are Messrs. Harper Bros., New York, and the price of a single copy is ten cents.

In no part of the world are changes going on in a more marked manner than in Japan. The systems of centuries are questioned in the light of Christian ideas. The old order is disappearing, and now an article in Nature describes a remarkable linguistic revolution. Under royal patronage, supported by scholars, journalists, and the most influential classes, a movement is rapidly proceeding which will sweep away the countless ideographic Chinese signs, and substitute the Roman letters in writing the language. This will connect Japan with all our English literature, which for good or evil will work the greatest results.

The following note comes to us from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who writes from Paris en route for London, which he hoped to reach before these lines appear:—

> The time fixed for the first of the series of Conferences in London for "The Evangelisation of the World" is upon us. Will you, therefore, kindly ask for your readers' prayers? If such conferences had been held some years ago, two of the subjects set down in the present programme would, no doubt, have been omitted, because then unknown—namely, Medical Missions, and Zenana Work. Yet who will deny the importance of these in the present day!
>
> If real waiting upon God be practised in secret before the Conference, and time found at the Conference for some to gather together for real prayer, the Holy Spirit may reveal fresh departures or fresh expansions that shall be as far-reaching as the Spirit-directed journeyings of Saul and Barnabas.
>
> Just returning from visiting honoured labourers in Italy and France, one is made to feel how much more we should help our near neighbour, the Continent of Europe.

The Saturday Review has an article on "The Decay of Evangelicalism;" the view of the writer, however, is confined to the Church of England. This is the conclusion at which he arrives:—

> With two or three exceptions all the Tractarian leaders were trained in Evangelicalism, and the old historic names which made the "Clapham sect" illustrious are now prominent in the "Ritualistic" ranks. There must be something faulty in a cause whose ablest champions are constantly deserting to the enemy, and which finds those it has trained from the cradle the first to repudiate their allegiance to it.

So far as this is true it is accounted for by the writer himself in a previous paragraph:—

> The old evangelical zeal, which had inspired men like Wilberforce and Venn and Simeon, and had given dignity and coherence to the "Clapham sect," was, no doubt, fast ebbing away. The sun of worldly prosperity had shone long and steadily on those who were once a struggling and persecuted sect, and they had borne it less well than the adversity of former years.

This is the cause of the decline of all true testimony for God. The Church's spiritual life survived the fierce blasts of pagan persecution, but withered under the sunshine of Constantine's patronage. Luther was a mighty man of God, but Lutheranism lost his spirit when it became the religion of the State.

But it is not true that Evangelicalism is dying out in the Church of England. We question if there ever was a time when the Gospel was more purely preached in her pulpits than it is in many of them to-day. True there is more breadth than depth, more extent than intensity, in present Evangelicalism everywhere; but the simultaneous missionary meetings in February showed that the Church of England has not only evangelical doctrine, but an evangelistic spirit, which attempts greater things towards the evangelisation of the world than the evangelical fathers of the last generation dreamed of. And besides this, a missionary spirit is manifesting itself in the Church of Christ generally, which is beyond all precedent since Apostolic days.

The Ritualistic movement of which The Saturday Review speaks favourably has had the most disastrous effect of re-opening the road to Rome which our forefathers counted nothing dear unto them that they might close for ever. The consequence is that Romanism, which is not Christianity but veneered heathenism, not a religion but an idolatry, is enjoying a revival in England more than in any other country in the world.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

MR. G. CLARKE IN EDINBURGH.

THOSE of your readers who joined in prayer for blessing on Mr. George Clarke's work in Edinburgh may well unite in praise for the rich answer given. From the first it was felt that the Lord was with his messenger, and the meetings grew in interest till the close. Many, especially among the young ladies, came to decision, and have offered to take part in the work of the Railway Mission, and Mr. Clarke's call for a thankoffering in aid of the funds of that Mission was liberally responded to. It is hoped that he may be sent again to work for a longer period in a city where his influence was just beginning to be appreciated, and where it is believed his work would be yet more abundantly fruitful. REV. W. HASLAM IN ONTARIO.

Mr. Haslam has concluded a ten days' mission in the new St. Paul's Church, Woodstock, Ont. Day by day the interest increased, as the people heard the clear and convincing truths and facts of God's Word lucidly placed before them. Whatever prejudices some held about special mission work, and a special missioner, these were soon dispelled, and many are praising God for the blessing they have received through this instrumentality. Some are thanking God that they have been brought "from death unto life," and others, that they have been led to trust in the risen Christ to guide and defend them.

Mrs. Haslam's afternoon meetings for ladies have been attended by all classes, and have aroused astonishing interest Much good has resulted from her faithful and loving words.

The success that has attended these services has far exceeded the most sanguine hopes of Christians here. To a great extent mission work of this kind is new to the Episcopal Church in Canada, and in the minds of many there is a strong prejudice against it. If all missions were conducted as that now concluded at St. Paul's Church, that feeling would soon be overcome, and an inestimable amount of good would be accomplished. On the second Saturday of the mission, a "question meeting" was held in the schoolroom. Some three hundred persons were present, and listened for over an hour to Mr. Haslam's answers to the questions put. Nothing could show more conclusively his knowledge of the Bible, and his ability rapidly to apply it to every question asked. On the last evening of the mission the Lord's Supper was observed by over two hundred and fifty communicants. E.

GERMANY.

Pastor Schrenk, of Bern, has concluded a week's evangelistic services in this town. Considering the religious state of Heidelberg, the meetings were remarkably well-attended. The country people flocked in from all directions; and it was gratifying to see a large number of men from the better classes among the audience. The Bible-readings for Christians in the afternoon were most helpful. Pastor Schrenk dwelt especially on the importance of a full surrender, and pointed out with great clearness the way of arriving at an unbroken communion with God, through the cleansing power of the blood of Christ.

In the evening meetings, the speaker's special aim was to rouse the consciences of his hearers. His rich and varied illustrations riveted their attention, and the deep impression which his fervid language made on them was visible on most faces.

Before concluding his mission, Pastor Schrenk exhorted all those who had received blessing to meet together frequently for prayer and study of the Word of God. A large number of young women at once came forward to constitute themselves into a Y.W.C.A. The Y.M.C.A. also received a considerable addition. A weekly prayer meeting has been arranged for believers.

Before coming here, Pastor Schrenk had been holding services at Hanau and Cassel. In the latter city as many as 3000 people filled the largest church in the town every evening. The ecclesiastical authorities at Cassel have placed every pulpit in the Electorate of Hesse at Pastor Schrenk's disposal. He is now holding a series of holiness meetings at Bonn, at the invitation of Professor Christlieb; thence he will proceed to Berlin, to confer with Pastor Stöcker, Count Bernstorf, and others, on the measures to be taken for the evangelisation of Germany.

Heidelberg. M. Römmele.

MESSRS. SMITH AND MACNAB IN DUNOON, N.B.

A series of evangelistic services conducted by these evangelists was brought to a close on Sabbath evening, March 28, when a largely attended joint meeting was held in the Free Church, Rev. R. Macmorran presiding. The meetings have extended over a period of three weeks; they have been held on week nights in the hall of the United Presbyterian Church, and on Sabbath evenings alternately in the Free Church and the United Presbyterian Church. The interest manifested towards the close of the mission was deep and decided. The addresses delivered were forcible, sound expositions of Scripture truth, and proved the means of blessing and quickening to not a few. A thank-offering collection was made at the close, and the result was most gratifying.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Since Mr. Houston and myself began work in this portion of the vineyard last July, we have had abundant and substantial blessing; praise the Lord. His good hand has been upon us continually. Brother Houston, so well known as the Blind Singing Irish Evangelist, has conducted fifteen missions, at which many have professed to find the Lord Jesus; besides, many Christians have received blessing, and numbers of backsliders have been restored. The singing of Mr. Houston has been much owned of the Lord in attracting large audiences, and leading burdened souls to the foot of the cross. We have had some glorious meetings, when the Spirit's power has been blessedly manifested. The missions have been held principally in Wesleyan churches, simply because the invitations have come usually first from them; but happy and fruitful work has been done, during services held in Presbyterian and Independent churches. Brother Houston purposes, God willing, to visit Victoria, New South Wales, Tasmania, Queensland, and New Zealand, under the auspices of the Y.M.C. Associations, before returning, except the Lord leads him to settle amongst us for some years. He has declined invitations that would keep him here for the next two years on account of his anxiety to get back to the work in Ireland and England. Henry T. Fry.

MESSRS. JONES AND SMALL IN CHICAGO.

A great deal is said and written about the worldliness and the wickedness of Chicago, which is doubtless very true; and yet, if a stranger should visit the great Western city just now, and find three or four monster mass religious assemblies every day of the week, and the people flocking to the Chicago avenue Church on Sunday at 10.30 a.m, and to Farwell-hall at midday, and the immense Casino Rink at 3, and again at 7 p.m., he would receive an impression of a different kind, and wonder at the fervour of the piety of so many people, and the general interest that seems to prevail on the subject of religion among all classes of people. The daily papers, giving full reports of these revival meetings, are spreading the news to all the towns and cities of the North-west, and many a little hamlet and remote settlement is encouraged at the homely sermons of Sam Jones and the common-sense talk of Sam Small, his coworker in the evangelistic campaign. There are many ministers and Sunday-school teachers coming into Chicago now to attend these meetings. Neither of these two gentlemen appears to have any fear of man before him, and the way they have discussed the prevailing sins of Chicago, and attacked the follies and worldliness of the churches, has aroused considerable criticism, but impressed everyone with their faithfulness and honesty in dealing with immortal souls.

The meetings throughout this week have been more interesting and profitable than ever, and there is a growing interest in favour of Mr. Jones. Even his critics have slipped in with the crowd, and those who were specially severe, and would not countenance the "vulgar and ignorant Southerner," are noticeable in the prominent seats of the rink, and are just as eager listeners as any of the rest. It is a good old-fashioned revival, with the fervid exhortations of the camp-meeting; and while there may be some things to object to, everyone knows that these men are honestly endeavouring to save souls, and bring Christian people to live on higher and safer ground. The city is thoroughly stirred, and most of the evangelical churches are cooperating in the work of grace that has been inaugurated, and souls are every day gathered into the fold of Christ. Many people who have never gone to church are regular attendants upon the meetings, and they are often converted, and are leading others to a knowledge of the truth.—New York Observer, March 25.

REV. H. PRICE HUGHES IN ABERDEEN.

Writing with respect to the mission services conducted in this city by Rev. H. P. Hughes, Mr. C. Shirreffs, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., says:—There was a hearty union of ministers and workers, and an unusually widespread interest evoked and maintained throughout. The quickening experienced by several ministers and many Christians has been freely and joyfully acknowledged. The evangelistic services were searching, and grew in power and telling effect; not a few have been found, since the mission closed, who quietly yielded to the call of the missioner, and the strivings of the Spirit, and are now in the Christian ranks. Many went to the inquiry-room and were spoken to by the willing workers, and there found peace in believing. The Sabbath morning workers' meetings were valued exceedingly.

A men's meeting on Sabbath afternoon, when over two thousand were present, was a striking illustration of how to deal with men. Mr. Hughes presented the claims of Christ and the advantages of the Christian life in such a manner that from forty to fifty then and there indicated their willingness to yield to the Lord Jesus Christ.

In a few days a Conference will be held on "The Privileges and the Possibilities of the Christian Life," when all whose names have been recorded, nearly four hundred, will be invited.

MR. SPENCER WALTON IN CHELTENHAM.

Mr. Walton has concluded a fortnight's mission in the Corn Exchange here, which has been attended by much blessing. The Bible-readings held every afternoon were well attended; many testify to having received much spiritual help, and to have realised more fully "the possibilities of faith."

The evangelistic meetings in the evenings were most interesting, the hall was usually crowded, sometimes to overflowing. The Gospel messages were given in the power of the Holy Ghost, and were blessed of God to the conversion of many. The Sunday afternoons were devoted to children and young people.

The mission closed with a conference on the subject of "The Higher Christian Life." Earl Cavan presided, and the speakers were Rev. Colin Campbell (of Christ Church, Weston-super-Mare), Rev. F. S. Webster (of the Church Army), Rev. J. J. Luce, Rev. T. D. Anderson (of Gloucester), and Mr. Spencer Walton. The subjects of the morning, afternoon, and evening meetings were respectively "Rest," "Victory," and "Power." The evening meeting closed with a stirring appeal for the Foreign Mission Field, which has resulted in several offering themselves.

An interesting feature of the mission was that it was a combined effort of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., while the choir and principal workers at the after meetings were composed of the members of the two Associations. At the Y.W.C.A. a daily united prayer meeting was held at 7.30 a.m., attended by the young men and young women from houses of business.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN TEXAS.

These evangelists, says a correspondent of The Independent, arrived at Dallas on the evening of March 3, and began services next afternoon. The large skating rink had been made ready, comfortably to seat at least 3000, with standing room for several hundred more. Notwithstanding occasional showers and muddy streets, every seat of this spacious hall was occupied by an earnest and appreciative audience. At the evening service not less than 4000 persons crowded and packed themselves away in the spacious building, and listened with the most intense interest to all the servant of God had to say. Nor did this in the least fail, but rather increased, so that hardly standing room could be had at the other services. Though abroad Texas may be regarded with suspicion, these brethren, like all others who visit us with right purposes, have left, appreciating the fact that there are in our borders many devoted and earnest workers for man's highest good.

The inquiry meetings in First Presbyterian Church were largely attended. At the first invitation, sixty-two rose for prayer, and this number kept increasing until it was estimated that at least two hundred were inquiring the way of life. Mr. Sankey sang to the exquisite joy of everyone. Words are inadequate to give any idea of the deep emotions of the audience as the sweet strains of "A Mother's Prayer," and "When the Mists are Rolled Away," filled the air. It is yet too soon to estimate the results as to conversions. Believers, however, were greatly blessed by being brought closer together, and the real strength of the religious element in Dallas was brought out in its full force. Dallas bids these brethren God speed in their work, and will hail with delight their return. Mr. G. C. Needham is expected to follow up the work.

MR. HENRY THORNE IN BRISTOL.

During the nine days ending March 30, Mr. Thorne has conducted a Gospel mission at the Y.M.C.A. The daily prayer-meeting was well attended, and the afternoon Bible readings were much appreciated by many Christians, several of whom came from a distance.

At the Gospel meetings in the evenings many weary ones found rest in Christ, and several went away under conviction, followed by the earnest prayers of many Christians who trust they may yet be brought into the fold. On Monday week the converts, some seventy in number, sat down to tea, after which Mr. Thorne earnestly addressed them; his remarks were followed by prayer and loving counsel from other Christian friends.

The mission is still continued by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, whose name, from previous missions, has become a household word in Bristol. A large choir of Christian young men and women leads the singing.

MR. A. MEAD. of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's mission at Esher-street, Kennington; it has been a time of much spiritual power and refreshment.

LITTLEHAMPTON-ON-SEA.—Mr. Chaplin, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has closed an eight days' mission to the children of this town, held at St. Saviour's Church.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND has held Gospel meetings in Cardiff during the past week. We have not received any detailed report, but we learn that a good impression has been made on young and old.

NORTHAMPTON.—A highly successful mission, conducted by Rev. Thomas Waugh, has just been brought to a close at Gold-street Chapel in this town. During the fifteen days the mission lasted a large number of adults and children professed to yield to the drawings of the Holy Spirit.

LIVERPOOL.—On Sunday week Mr. D. M. Drysdale closed the Special Gospel Services held in Hengler's Circus during the winter months. There has been an average attendance of about 5000, and many, it is believed, have been led by the faithful presentation of the Gospel to accept of Christ as their Saviour and Lord.

A SPECIAL MISSION NUMBER of The Rochester Diocesan Chronicle has been issued, which contains a very interesting account of the recent South London Mission. An impetus has been given to the Church life of the parishes, which is already bearing fruit. Fresh Bible-classes for men, women, and youths are among the proofs that the Mission has not been in vain.

COCKERMOUTH.—A series of Gospel meetings held in the Public Hall of this town, by Mr. J. Carr and Mr. R. Wilson, have been eminently successful. From the first the attendance was good, and before the month closed, the hall was crowded to overflowing with people of all classes. So great has been the interest, that it has been deemed right to continue the services during another month.

DR. L. W. MUNHALL is meeting with eminent success in Portland, Oregon, where he has been labouring since the first of February. A large number have confessed conversion, many of whom are young men. In connection with Dr. Munhall's work, the Y.M.C.A. is endeavouring to secure a new building. Dr. Munhall was to arrive in San Francisco on March 13, to commence evangelistic meetings.

MESSRS. THOMPSON & BOYLE, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, on Sunday, March 28, concluded a three weeks' mission at Donaghey, co. Tyrone, Ireland. A large number, it is believed, were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. On the last evening a thank-offering was taken up for the Irish Evangelisation Society, which was responded to heartily. S. HADDEN, Pastor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The Christians in Dublin, Manchester, and Glasgow who have been praying for a blessing on Mr. Henry Lakin's Mission in Tunbridge Wells, will praise God when they hear that their prayers have been answered beyond our expectations. Though the congregations have been smaller than Mr. Lakin usually addresses, many have decided for Christ, and many believers have, as a working-man expressed himself, "been wonderfully lifted up."

CHERBOURG.—A fortnight ago I came here, at the invitation of Mr. Darling, to help him in the opening of a large new Salle, in a very populous district of this important seaport town. Since the opening, the attendance at all the meetings has been very good, the hearers being very attentive and serious. Many Testaments have been sold. Seeing the great need of the work here, I feel constrained to remain and help Mr. Darling, leaving the work at Trouville in the hands of Pastor Audibert, of Lisieux. English books and papers would be welcomed here. THOMAS PH. SINEL.

MERCHANT SEAMEN.—Sixteen months ago the Letters to Merchant Seamen were by request extended to the Lighthouse-keepers in Great Britain and Ireland. Consequently the number of letters issued was increased from 6000 to 8000 monthly. This involved a large additional expense, and it is much to be regretted that the funds have not been sufficient to carry on that number. Many communications received testify to their usefulness. Help towards the work will be thankfully received by Mrs. Jeffery, 15, Lansdowne-circus, Leamington.

BIBLE-CLASSES AND DISCUSSION.

DEAR SIR,—I have had occasion, during the last year or two, to address and teach, now and then, senior Bible-classes of males, in connection with various Sunday-schools in this city. It seems to be a somewhat general practice, after the teacher or addresser has concluded, for the members of the class to be invited, or to offer, to make remarks on the subject of the lesson. It has been a matter both of surprise and pain to me to observe that such remarks, made by the young men, not only take the form of little critical speeches, but, in the majority of instances, are of a pronouncedly sceptical character.

Not to occupy too much of your space, but to call attention to the matter, let me mention my most recent experience in the senior Bible-class of one of our leading Christian congregations here. I chose for my subject "The Gospel Message," and I endeavoured to treat it in a way suitable for an old man of threescore in addressing lads of twenty or thereabouts. When I had done I was informed that the meeting would now be open for discussion, and the lads then proceeded, one after another—seven or eight of them spoke—to criticise my address, and I think, in nearly every case, unfavourably, and in the spirit of the scepticism of the present day.

I cannot give details of the various "little speeches." But, for example, one took occasion to praise a noted atheist for his "noble efforts on behalf of civil and religious liberty;" another declared against believing what he could not understand; a third doubted if the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah referred to Christ; a fourth asked how I could speak of the love of God in the face of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and so on. I felt it hopeless to grapple with such a state of matters, but I could not but perceive that the class in question might be called rather a training school for sceptics than a school for leading young men to Christ. I wonder, what about the teaching from the pulpit to these young men from Sabbath to Sabbath, and what about the capability of their teacher? I have repeatedly had similar experiences recently. Surely it is a sign of the times, and a very serious one.

EXCESSIVE HOURS IN BUSINESS HOUSES.

DEAR SIR,—As one deeply interested in the welfare of young men, I desire to thank you very warmly for the protest respecting late hours inserted in your "Notes and Comments" last week. While there is a great deal of unfounded gossip talked concerning hours and wages, which one is often called upon to challenge and explode, there is a very solid foundation for the present statement. Alas, it is not confined to one wholesale house, but runs through entire trades.

The explanation of the excessive hours is that the pressure which necessitates them is confined to a few weeks, twice a year; that if new hands were engaged to tide over this pressure, being ignorant of the ways of the place, they would only prove a hindrance; their services could not be utilised in the normal condition of business, so fresh hands would again be introduced at the next busy season. The young men in most of the houses are strengthened to bear the burden by being well boarded and lodged. So far as my information goes the senior hands, reckoning on this recurring pressure, do not complain; especially when their pecuniary interest encourages their zeal.

But the real trial and hardship, which calls loudly for remedy, falls on the younger hands, with constitutions unformed, and drawing merely a nominal salary. It is disastrous to the health and morals of these lads that they should be so overworked. So much is this the case that it is not a thing unknown for a lad to fling himself on his bed in his clothes, on reaching his room, and to awake in the morning haggard and unrefreshed to recommence his work.

This, of course, is not known to the principals, and it is only by general attention being drawn to the matter that individual inquiry is set afoot, and a remedy found. Did Christian employers know how the system reacts on the efforts of Associations like ours, set for the spiritual welfare of young men, their establishments would speedily be purged from the stigma with which they are now widely reproached.

I should like to suggest to employers generally, whose interests are never subordinated by us to that of their employés, that if the salaries paid to juniors were regulated more with an eye to their necessities than to the market-price of labour, the welfare of the establishments would be promoted, and the name of God glorified. Thousands of young men are willing to enter service without a salary, and then suffer for a long period. The throne is not the only place around which a fierce light beats. As standing midway between the firms and their employés, I speak from the bottom of a deeply-stirred heart.—Yours very truly,

ROBERT BURN, Secretary.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me a word of explanation to the question of an "Inquirer" in your last issue.

A distinction is necessary between Jews—tribes of Judah and Benjamin—and Israel as a nation. This distinction has been observed since the separation after Solomon's death, and more particularly since the dispersion of the ten tribes.

The land has never been promised to Jews, but to Israel in the completion of twelve tribes. Hence the disciples after the Lord's resurrection inquired, "Wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts i. 6). The Lord came not to restore the kingdom at his First Advent; He will do so at his Second (Acts xv. 14—17).
